However, first hand contact is far superior to the number of books, papers and pamphlets. The seminar study tours are just such contact and these constitute the third major aspect of the WUS program.

While Canada is playing an important part in these activities, the international seminars are the real source of pride. Canadian WUS has pioneered in this venture led the way in a series of six seminars covering West Africa, India, Japan and Canada itself.

On their common rights and responsibilities as members of the international community of students the seminar delegates have found it possible to transcend national boundaries and discuss each others needs and resources as students, not as Christians or Mohammedans, nor as whites or browns, nor even as capitalists and marxists, but simply as students.

This very thing happened in Japan this summer. The key to co-operation is understanding. It is exactly what the seminars are designed to offer and it is to one of the most influential and capable members of any society — the university population.

In Japan we were subjected to eight weeks of seminars and under some of the most competent men in the world that can be found anywhere.

To no one can we give more credit for the success of the seminar than to the executive committee of WUS in Canada and the many private and professional individuals and individuals in Canada who gave their financial support to this work.

The seminar is not really over and we would like to have the opportunity to discuss it with any group that is interested. This dissemination of information is an essential part of the program. In fact the most important feature of the program is the relief operations and while none of the money from the SHARE campaign goes to the seminar program, we are very happy to lend our support to the SHARE campaign.

We recommend that you SHARE too.

Democracy's challenge

By LEWIS PERINBAM Executive Secretary, WUS of Canada

importance to the future of mankind and requires creative statesmanship of a high order.

The problems of this awakening will not be solved by looking at it with fear or in a spirit of isolationism by ourselves. It requires a friendly and understanding approach, clear objectives and a common effort to realize the continent of Asia more than a billion of people are churning in one of history's greatest periods. All the struggles of man over the centuries—economic, political and spiritual—have come together in and now seem to be reaching a climax.

To Asians, nationalism means a chance to stand on their own feet, to govern themselves, and to develop their resources for their own welfare. It means the end of racial inferiority, and the re-establishment of equality and self-respect in their relationships with other nations.

The momentous changes that have transformed Asia from colonial or dependent status to that of free nations, a new challenge faces democracy in these areas. This challenge represents the basic problem of our time. It is not the H-bomb with all its potential horrors, nor war itself. It is POVERTY.

Today, two-thirds of all mankind live in conditions of poverty, hunger, disease, starvation, illiteracy and premature death.

A recent United Nations Survey cited that the 12 poorest nations of the world have an annual per capita income of less than $50; 17 more nations have an annual per capita income of between $50 and $100; the 29 poorest nations with well over half the world population have only 4% of the world income, while the 8 richest countries with one tenth of the world population enjoy 56% of the world income. In Southeast Asia alone some 80% of the people are illiterate; the average life expectancy is below 33 years; and infant mortality figures vary between 100-250 per 1000 live births.

Such poverty is not new in human history; it is as old as man himself. But what is new is the recognition that it is not the inevitable lot of man. The masses in Asia who for ages have endured poverty and misery can no longer continue to do so, especially when they have come to know what comfort and convenience a better material life can afford them.

The spirit of detachment, native to the genius of Asia, which for ages tolerated the miseries of everyday life as part of the order of things, is now becoming galvanized with the same impatient yearning for betterment which the masses of the West experienced soon after the Industrial Revolution.

And so it is important to understand that many of the difficulties that the world is encountering today arise from the fact that the suppressed people are demanding a share in the very liberties which are so dear to the countries of the West; in this context, the unrest in Asia is a sign that democracy is growing—and not dying.

As such, the desire of Asians to be recognized as equals with a right to a decent standard of life cannot be justifiably suppressed or even postponed; this is the Asian Revolution, and it is utterly independent of communism. Asia's problem is not so much the 'way of life' to be followed, whether it be the American or the Russian way, but the MEANS of life.

Today the people of Asia are struggling towards the achievement of a more just and equitable society, and have welcomed the assistance extended by foreign countries.

Unfortunately, the response of the Western countries, though generous, has been grossly inadequate in terms of the total situation. Sometimes, political and military considerations have influenced the offer of help; such assistance has been rejected not on account of ingratitude or a sense of superiority, but because of the hesitancy of Asia countries to compromise or barter their newly-found independence and freedom.

Sometimes, too, the motives of the Western countries have been suspected in view of their continued support of regimes which no longer hold the confidence of their respective peoples; such actions on the part of the West do not strengthen the appeal of democracy and do, in fact, undermine it seriously in many countries.

However, the greatest failure on the part of the Western democracies is the inability to appreciate the urgency of the human situation. In times of war, a nation mobilizes all its resources of men, material and finance. It sets aside all sectional interests, enduring common sacrifice for the sake of common victory.

"The only war we seek," declared former President Truman, "is a war against man's ancient enemies of hunger, squalor, illiteracy, and disease." That war must be fought with the same singleness of purpose, the same willingness to endure sacrifice, the same totality of mobilization of science and production that would characterize war between nations. For what is at stake is not destruction and death, but a fuller life in the material and spiritual sense for the whole of mankind.

In Asia, therefore, it is simply nonsense to talk about "defending democracy" so long as democracy does not exist; rather, we must think in terms of "sharing democracy" so that the people of Asia might be sufficiently persuaded of its validity in meeting the material and spiritual needs of their respective societies.

Canadian students, too, are deeply involved in these vital issues of our time, and within the framework of the world university community there is much that can be done.

Educated leadership is among the most powerful weapons yet discovered in the struggle to raise depressed standards of living, for the universities of Southeast Asia are playing a leading role in meeting the vast need of these areas and in alleviating this human suffering; they represent, in effect, the centres of advancing standards of living in their respective countries.

By helping universities abroad to train national leadership we are taking part in the fight against poverty, ignorance, disease and despair. For these once-distant peoples are no longer distant.

They are not only our close neighbours; they are part of our future. But we must offer not only our resources and our leadership in this human struggle, we must promote amongst ourselves the beginning of wisdom which is understanding. In doing so we shall discover that educated leadership is the cornerstone of the future for all peoples.

Thus by supporting the SHARE CAMPAIGN the students of the University of Toronto are not only contributing to the relief of material need and the development of understanding between nations—YOU ARE INVESTING IN YOUR FUTURE.

nurses' challenge pushes campaign into gear prominent indian here for monday's banquet

Toronto students will have an opportunity this Monday to hear Father Jerome D'Souza, delegate from India to the United Nations.

Former university president and leader in the field of social science in India, Father D Souza will speak on "Asia in Transition."

Carl Anderson SHARE campaign chairman, said last night that President Sidney Smith and Warden Joseph McCully will also be present at the banquet.

Last night representatives of the School of Nursing announced they are charging $1.50 on the basis of their contribution to the current two-week SHARE campaign and their purchase of tickets to the banquet.

"Tickets are on sale for the banquet and we are having only one week left in which the opportunity to hear Father D Souza and to have such an excellent meal is worth, each cent, that."

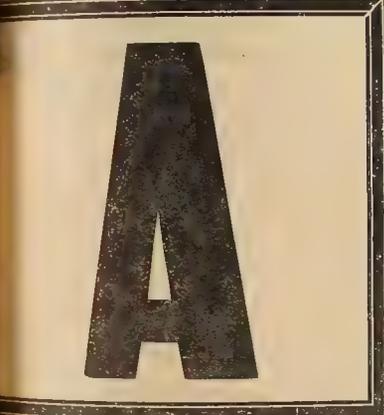

Mr. Anderson said last night that the committee has organized 100 tables to be chosen from the roof of Hall House. Each will be painted the colour of the various colleges and faculties and will be flown at a hotel, where will be held on the preceding evening, the concert of the school to the campaign.

Speaking of the campaign itself, Mr. Anderson said: "This is one of two financial campaigns permitted on campus. It is the only one in which the money is directed specifically to help alleviate student needs."

"This is an opportunity for us to do something concrete in the way of contributing to international understanding and mutual trust among nations."

The campaign continues all this week and next. A total of $7,500 has been set.

A large part of the money raised in this campaign will be earmarked for relief projects in Israel, Indonesia, Pakistan and Japan.

Your money goes

The major portion of Toronto's money will go to our projects.

In Haifa, Israel, a student housing project for which well students have promised to contribute the labor, needs financial support.

A similar project in Djakarta, Indonesia, is also desperately needed.

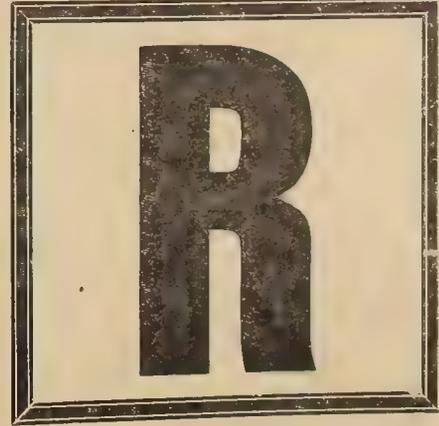

The TB facilities in Japan are still pitifully inadequate. The present 33-bed hospital built by World University Service is all that is available for nearly 100 Japanese students who are known to be tubercular.

At the University of Karachi in Pakistan a housing project is also badly needed.

SAC Advance

Money, money, money — and then more money. The clink clank of gold coins should ring through the corridors of Falconer Hall tonight, at 7:30 p.m. exactly. The Students' Administrative Council meets again.

Unfortunately the clunk to cold cash will be wholly in the ear of the hearer, as the money will be discussed but not actually present. One important item on the agenda for tonight will be the financial statement of the auditors' report on last year's SAC budget.

More money coming up! The budgets for World University Service and the University of Toronto Debating Union will be presented. Undoubtedly much debate will be inspired.

Furthermore, the debating union will probably get very excited, in order to stimulate interest for American tours. In case enough money hasn't been discussed, SHARE will offer its little plug.

And the bulletin board may be mentioned.

Vancouver: The Student Council has ordered an investigation of the goal-post incident during the Bellingham Invasion which resulted in six arrests. The Council quoted the UBC Alma Mater Society constitution in predicting that the Pep Club will be held responsible if the individuals responsible cannot be found, and that action taken by the Student Court or the Faculty Council will involve no expulsions and small fines, if any.

Montreal: The McGill Players' Club has run into casting difficulties necessitating the cancellation of their main production, Eliot's Cocktail Party. They plan to fill the gap in their program with a training program involving experimental productions and acting classes to improve their chances of success next year. It seems the UC Players' Guild aren't alone in their casting problems.

Morgantown, West Virginia: The Student Legislature has openly criticised their University Senate for not consulting them before agreeing to the installation of parking meters on streets desperately needed as student parking space, and has further requested that the Senate take steps to have the parking restrictions removed.

Montreal: A chicken appeared in the McGill library to deliver the message "Don't be a chicken, donate your blood now" as McGill went into the fourth day of its seven-day Blood Campaign.

Vancouver: Despite loud protests on all sides, the Homecoming Chairman at UBC has announced a no-drinking policy to be strictly enforced during the Homecoming Week-end, and warned that any rowdysm would result in the curtailing of events in future years.

Ottawa: Charlotte Whitton seems to have started something in Ottawa with her litter-bug prosecution campaign this summer; the acting president of Carleton has made an appeal to students to keep the halls and canteen cleaner.

Other moral questions in the news at Carleton are a debate decision favouring an opium den in the Students' Union and an impending decision on the fate of students seen drinking at the Hallowe'en Dance.

The executive committee of the Hart House Orchestra Association last night announced the program for the first of their proposed series of five concerts.

This concert—Nov. 27—will include Vivaldi's Concerto in D Minor; Mozart's Divertimento in F Major K. 138, the Holberg Suite by Grieg and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C, Opus 48 for String

Henry Best, chairman of the Associates said last night:

"We are able to offer student of the university memberships of the associates which will permit them to attend all events we sponsor.

"Our second concert will be held December 11 again in the Great Hall of Hart House. On December 8, Dean Boyd Neel, of the music faculty, will give a lecture which all members of the Associates will be able to attend."

"It is our intention to expand the scope of these concerts as the year progresses. We hope to make the orchestra an integral part of university life."

Present plans of the Associates also include three more concerts in the spring term. The tentative dates for these are Jan. 22, Feb. 5 and March 11.

"Students, staff members and friends of the university are eligible to become members of the Associates," Mr. Best added.

Carabins Coming In December Social And Cultural Whirl

Plans for a "gigantic social and cultural whirl" have already been made for this year's Carabin Exchange Weekends with the University of Montreal, it was announced by the Weekend Exchange Committee.

The first of the reciprocal week-end exchanges will begin on Thursday evening, December 1, when 40 French-Canadian students (known as Carabins) from the University of Montreal will invade the Toronto Campus.

"It won't end," said Dave Greenspan, member of the Weekend Committee, "until the Carabins finally say Au Revoir to their Varsity hosts on the following Sunday afternoon. Their activities will range from a lunch at the Royal York to a Saturday night hoe-down at Nobleton, and from a dinner in Hart House to discussions on 'What it is to be a Canadian.'

"There are even rumours of monstrous beer-drinking contests with Skule."

After the Carabins visit here, there will be a return visit of Toronto students to the University of Montreal. The 40 Toronto students will have their turns as hosts in months from now—they invade Montreal.

"Most important," said Greenspan, "is that the Varsity hosts will be able to renew the acquaintances that they had made two months before.

All students interested in putting up a French-speaking Carabin over the weekend should apply immediately to the SAC for application forms, said Greenspan. Deadline for applications is this Friday, November 11.

ANASTASIA from the aisle

A princess miraculously escapes death, wanders the world unknown and eventually returns to her claim to the fortunes of her father, the Czar of Russia. As told by the author of Anastasia (now playing at the Royal Alex), it emerges almost like a melodrama, an unpretentious play, but one that provides a great deal of entertainment.

But in its details the play goes far from fairyland. Anastasia at the final curtain does not sweep out in seed-pearled satin and tulle in her proper place as ruler of her exiled people. She slips out through the back door, leaving behind her the group of flabbergasted swindlers who had intended to capitalize on her, and leaving her pasteboard-and-tinsel royalty in order to go back into the real world and live her own life.

Structurally, the play is interesting and unusual. In the first Act, when the three entrepreneurs interrogate the "pseudo-Anastasia," she is to us only the half-crazed wail seen through their own eyes. As the play progresses, our understanding of her deepens, as does our realization that she is more than the puppet stopgap that they think she is almost to the play's end.

Act Two, following Act One's

All ambitious artists or those who just want to have fun may enter their works of art in the annual Hart House Undergraduate Art Show. Entries must be in the Undergraduate Office by 5.00 p.m., Friday, November 11th.

Water-colors, oils, drawings and black and white . . . all are in demand for the show. Entries will be hung in the Art Gallery here, from November 14th until November 28th.

Undergraduate women of the University of Toronto, as well as undergraduate members of Hart House, are invited to submit entries.

There are no prizes for the show. As Hart House is not a commercial Art Gallery, the pictures or works of art are not for sale. If someone wishes to buy one, however, the Undergraduate Office will put them in touch with the artist. Several pictures have been sold this way in recent years.

All entries must be framed and a label attached giving name, address and phone number of artist, the value of the picture must also be marked for insurance purposes.

discovery of the girl who "looks like the murdered princess," adds emotional and melodramatic overtones after an over-expository (and, incidentally, ill-lit) first Act. With a powerful recognition scene between Anastasia and the Dowager Empress (the only other surviving member of the Russian royal family), the play comes into focus and the audience is given an almost great piece of theatre.

Dolly Haas strives to give her regal role the same interpretation as did Viveca Lindfors on Broadway, but generally fails. For this Anastasia the conflict between a need for security and enormous pride of her royal line is not sufficiently pronounced.

As the Dowager Empress, Eugenie Loentovich is still a proud, sly aristocrat, and a main pivot of the action. Her haughtily arched back, her witty, cynical remarks (at times only a cover for intense loneliness and a longing for the love of her thought-dead grand-daughter) help her dominate those around her as an empress should.

John Emery as Prince Bounine, the scheming, lip-curling aristocrat, knows exactly how to show the strengths and weaknesses of the man he plays. It is unfortunate that the same cannot be said about John Hallow, the lover of the princess while she was the pauper. A weak delivery and an utter lack of conviction failed to show why so imperial a character as Anastasia would have been attracted to him in the first place. Prince Paul, Anastasia's childhood fiancé, does not have the force of the Broadway Prince Paul, who left us with no doubt that his Idealism ended where Anastasia's fortune began.

The Toronto Anastasia, while falling short of the New York version in sheer dramatic appeal, does provide an evening of good entertainment for those who are tired of the heavily symbolic plays that abound today, and prefer something with a flavour of melodrama and a touch of whimsical fantasy.

Margaret Nodder

critic in the dark with EILEEN

The ingredients are there for a buoyant comedy, but under Richard Quine's direction, My Sister Eileen rides haphazardly between farce and pathos without a unified blending of comedy moods. Constantly the director interprets events such as plaster falling into the only pot of spaghetti and door-knocks being yanked off by naive hands as pathetic statements of sympathy for the inequities out-of-town girls in search of fame and love.

Even the blasting for a new subway that rocks the girls' basement apartment is so stoically borne by the young ladies that it arouses pity rather than laughter. He further frustrates our enjoyment by making us acutely aware of a love-hungry writer (Betty Garret) unwanted by men.

This pathos is heightened by the too-serious acting of Garret, whose antics before a mirror evoke not only laughter but a desire to recommend a psychiatrist. Even the final scene resembles Marty in interpretation, for her confidence-restorer (Jack Lemmon) tells her in a polite way that she is really not such a dog at all. Such self-pitying roles should be grafted to more serious themes other than those which Ruth McKinney's novel expounds.

Lost to this new production is the tart wit of Roz Russel and naive beauty of Janet Blair, both of which lived up to the version of the 40's. Also, the Greenwich Village they survived in was a lusty exuberant and sometimes predatory neighbourhood that spilled joyously into their tiny basement apartment. But Quine's village characters flood mechanically through the basement abode like 50 bored extras in search of a day's pay. His villagers are prim, secure and very, very properly cleansed civilized ornaments, organized to offend and interest nobody.

Story? Two small-city girls determined to achieve fame in New York rent an apartment from an opportunistic villager (Kurt Kaznar) and encounter in their various travails, Eileen's soda-fountain love (Robert Fosse), a sharpie (Tommy Rall) who tries

PATRICIA SNELL

Patricia Snell has a large and colourful voice ideally suited to opera. She knows how to use this voice effectively — but unfortunately, she does not always know where to use it. Sunday evening at Hart House, accompanied by George Crum, Miss Snell presented a recital divided equally between concert groups and operatic arias. This alone would indicate an affinity for dramatic singing, and her performance did bear this out.

The songs of Beethoven and Rachmaninoff were carefully executed, but the singer failed to capture the mood, particularly of the more intimate Beethoven, all of which resulted in a fairly unconvincing performance. The French songs, to which the singer's phrasing-control and tone-variety were well suited, were the best of the concert groups.

Most of Miss Snell's preparatory work would seem to have been done on her operatic selections. The arias by Charpentier and Menotti showed her at her best, in a polished presentation full of understanding. They suited her voice and her temperament suited them. The Donizetti aria too, done with such relish, had been carefully worked out; but the voice proved too heavy to carry off the coloratura passages with their full force.

The Charpentier and Menotti arias showed, without doubt, the excellence of Miss Snell as a lyric soprano. Why, then, should she try to sing the treacherous coloratura aria of the Queen of the Night? The results were disastrous. Her voice lacks the required agility, and if she persists in trying to sing music of this type she will probably soon find she does not even have a voice, much less agility. Miss Snell can charm her audience with a lovely voice. But she must be discriminatory in her choice of music, or the results will be fatal for both her and the audience.

to split their romance, and a potential publisher of Ruth's stories of her sister—luscious, man-hounded Eileen (Janet Leigh). Publisher (Jack Lemmon), wise to Ruth's deception that she is Eileen as portrayed in her book, eventually restores Ruth's sagging confidence in herself as a woman and a writer.

Though missing the essential village mood and comic interpretation, the film does rise from its bed of pathos and fly gaily into our hearts through the witty and sometimes brilliant choreography of Robert Fosse, Eileen's two beaux, Fosse and Tommy Rall, treat us to a neat dynamic duel of acrobatic dancing that builds forcefully to a bright conclusion. Later on a park bandstand, the foursome of Fosse, Rall, Garret and Leigh exploit fully an ingenious satire on those good old minstrel days with Garret cutting up the lyrics in a "Mummy" style. An ambitious, slightly ghoulish number danced by the girls and those Brazilians has little point, though Fosse's imagination does achieve a few clever moments. Dullest scene in the pic is the massed finale of sailors and villagers, traipsing to a mechanical conga devoid of spontaneity and imagination.

Though all in all the film is tasty entertainment fare, I'm afraid that it adds to neither Quine's directorial reputation (made by the racy and spirited So This is Paris!) nor to my trust that Quine has ever been in Greenwich village.

Mike Stops Publication Policy To Get Overhaul

The over-all policy of The Mike, the St. Michael's College student weekly, is being overhauled. No Mike will be printed until the process is complete.

At a meeting of the St. Mike's SAC on Monday night, George Quinlan, Men's Third Year Rep, suggested that the policy might bear looking into. The question was taken up last night at a meeting of four St. Mike's SAC members and the editorial staff of the Mike, who made concrete suggestions.

It appeared that up to now no definite editorial policy has been set down, said a St. Mike's student. As a result opinionated news articles have been creeping into the Mike, the student said.

These have brought criticism of the paper as being below the standards a student newspaper should have.

Phillip Wood, president of the St. Mike's SAC, said that such a meeting was definitely no innovation, but merely part of the St. Mike's SAC's annual fall house cleaning.

The policy suggestions made at the meeting include the definition of a newspaper. The point might seem trivial, said one of the Mike's editors, but until now the weekly has been published without the definite view in mind.

A more definite distinction has also been made between what editorial and what is news. News is to be purely objective and material of a subjective nature must be in either editorials or signed columns.

It was made quite clear that these are only suggestions, and as such are subject to the approval of the St. Mike's Student Council, said an SAC spokesman.

Debate Trials Are Coming Many Tours Await Winners

The University of Toronto will send teams of male debaters to tournaments at Pittsburgh, Wayne University, McGill, and to the I.U.D.L. Tournament at Guelph this year.

Eligibility for these debates abroad will be determined by ability shown at the Trials, to be held on November 16 and 17 at 5 o'clock, in Room 8, at University College, said Norm Stetnitz, Debating Association spokesman.

At these trials, speeches are to be all impromptu, requiring only 5 minutes' preparation. It is expected that all participants will form teams of 2, with no limit to the number of entries from each College or Faculty. Application forms and copies of the Rules of Procedure may be obtained at the S.A.C. office. All application forms are to be returned to the S.A.C. office by 5 o'clock, Friday, November 11, said Stetnitz.

Girls Say Hours All Right

Women in residence at the University of Toronto, unlike their counterparts in other Canadian and American universities, are satisfied with the regulations regarding hours.

Students questioned in each of the Women's residences on the campus: Whitney Hall, Annesley Hall, St. Hilda's and St. Mike's, generally agreed that the rules were reasonable and were not abused by the students.

Most complaints came from Whitney Hall, Whitney has the strictest regulations of the four colleges. First and second year women have casual leave till 10.30, and a limited number of later leaves each week.

One Whitney Hall resident said the restrictions were unnecessary and an insult to the intelligence of any girl after her first year. Other students there would like to see the 10.30 extended to 11, a system of keys as at Annesley Hall, and a leeway of at least five minutes before imposing fines.

Annesley Hall has the most liberal system of any of the colleges, 12.30 leave every night and unlimited late leave for every night except Sunday. The casual leave at St. Hilda's varies according to year; the late leave is 1.45. St. Mike's is like Whitney.

The whole question came up in reference to articles in other student publications dealing with the hour problem.

Cornell University in Ithaca is in the midst of a controversy over recent changes in the women's hours. Previously there was a uniform scale of penalties increasing in severity for every fifteen minutes lateness; now a tardy student must sign a late list, giving reasons, and is liable at any time to be hauled before a student committee to answer for her misconduct.

This is said to be in keeping with the Cornell tradition of "freedom with responsibility."

The hours at Cornell are all more restricted than those Toronto students are accustomed to.

Arguments which have been used in this controversy and in denouncing the Bishops College editorial printed below run along the lines that an individual at university should be taught to make choices for himself, and be given the freedom to do so, rather than being stifled with arbitrary regulations.

Sponsored French Honeymoon and Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Finland and Mr. Bruce." No Mr. Waldorf. Finally he got on board as Mrs. Rhodes! That situation didn't last for long.

The third chaperone, the owner of the boats used on our trip, met us at LeBouquet, drove us into Paris and to our hotel, giving a running commentary all the way. Nine o'clock the next morning saw us leaving for Vaires-sur-Marne (about 20 miles east of Paris) where the third chaperone keeps his boats. Part of the arrangements undertaken by M. LeRoux was to provision the ship, but all we could find in the course of exploring our launch were ten bottles of Cotes du Rhone, Reserve.

We found out later that the other boat carried the more solid supplies.

Joe's picture-taking caused an occasional bit of excitement and confusion, starting with the moment we stepped out of the plane at LeBouquet. All the fuss caused people to stop and look, wondering who on earth the "celebrities" could be. Once in Paris, we went through more of the same thing with the traditional Parisian background interest: the Arc de Triomphe and the Eiffel Tower. We arrived at our vantage point just across the river from the Eiffel Tower just in time to see a flock of 'gendarmes' catch a fleeing wrongdoer, hustle him into the paddy wagon and drive off, leaving the scene just as quiet as if nothing had happened.

At the end of a week of odd situations we arrived back at Vaires-sur-Marne, and from there went to Paris, where we spent another day.

We found that it doesn't seem to matter what your passports read when you register in Paris hotels; the room clerk didn't bat an eye at our passports with two different names. After a day full of walking, looking and general tourism, we found ourselves at LeBouquet, waiting for the London flight.

Our photographer seemed destined to have trouble with this assignment, for on this occasion he was held up in the air terminal by excess baggage red tape. Just as the motors were warming up he tore across the runway to the plane. And so it took off, carrying us back to the prospect of having to work for our living.

Bishop's Girls On Same

This editorial was printed in the Bishop's University (Quebec) paper this term:

A GOOD THING FOR OUR GIRLS

It is a reassuring thing to note the difference between the women's residence rules at Bishop's and those at other universities across Canada. At other universities, Queen's, for example, there is a dangerous laxity in the regulations. At Bishop's, however, it is realized that the average freshette is only about 17 years old, and in the great majority of cases has never been away from home. Naturally, strict curtailment of hours and a careful supervision of the girls' activities is desirable, and even though the girls may be sometimes heard to complain, they realize, by and large, that it is all in their best interests.

As the girls mature, their privileges are increased. In first year, the freshette may stay out until 12 p.m. Saturday, 11 p.m. on two other nights of the week, and 9 p.m. on the remainder of the nights. In second year, she gets three 11 p.m. leaves, and may stay out until 1 a.m. Saturday. Third and fourth years bring 1 a.m.'s on Saturday, three 11 p.m.'s, and all the rest 10 p.m.'s. Men are allowed in the common room in the basement of the Women's Residence until 10.45 Sunday evenings.

Bishop's girls and their parents can be thankful when they compare these rules with those at Queen's. One gets a mental picture of women trudging to lectures dead-tired and baggy-eyed, as one sees the amazing leniency of the Queen's rules for its 275 women resident students. First year students have two 12.30 leaves a week, and must be in at 11 p.m. otherwise. They have eight 2.30 leaves per session. After first year, there are six 2.30 a.m. leaves per week, in other words, practically unlimited freedom. Gentlemen visitors may be entertained any night until 11 p.m. in a common room in the women's residence. The leniency of these rules is partly explained by the fact that women graduate from high school two years later in Ontario than in Quebec, but even then the Bishop's girl could not help but consider these rules dangerously lax, compared to our own more sensible set of regulations.

STAFF

Isn't it always the case? Aren't we perpetually looking for staff, you say. Well no, we stop looking for them round about April. In the meantime, for the next 60 issues, we do need some reporters, feature writers, opinion gatherers for FORUM, and so on. Drop down to the SAC basement anytime.

Student Say In Discipline May Soon Come—Liaison

Sleeping Beauty Wakes Up

"On, that nice o'clock class . . ." Pretty Jean Mirka, 1 UC, stretches out sleepily to turn off her alarm. Idea Arises From Riot And Resulting Discipline Enforced By The Caput

Students may soon have a say in disciplinary action involving the bulk of the student body, it was announced last night at the SAC meeting.

Mike Shoemaker, SAC president, said that a meeting of the SAC-Caput liaison committee held yesterday recommended that if the University Caput (the official disciplinary body of the university) contemplated any action involving the whole university, then a student representative should be sent to their meeting.

In making the unofficial statement, Shoemaker said that if the Caput approves the committee's resolution, then it will ask the SAC to send a representative.

He said the idea arose from the riot of Engineering freshmen last year, when Professor McAndrew, Registrar of University College, was injured attempting to stop the rampaging freshmen. Considerable property damage was incurred during the fracas and the Caput fined the Engineering Society $4,000 and suspended its constitution.

The action was taken without any reference to student opinion.

Undergraduate representatives might be required also for any action concerned with football riots.

"This plan is part of the work started last year by former SAC president Bill Angus," Shoemaker said.

The Caput, the official disciplinary body of the University, consists of heads of all the faculties and colleges. It has power to fire or expel any staff-member or student of the University, and may inflict what punishment it deems necessary on misbehaving groups of students.

The SAC-Caput liaison committee consists of five Caput members and seven students, including the SAC president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer and assistant secretary-treasurer, two other students, and one faculty advisor. It deals with judicial problems common to both administration and students.

SAC Considers Library Closing Again This Year

Action has begun to have the main library remain open until 11 o'clock. A motion by Gord Purdy (IV UC) at the SAC meeting last night stated that faculty student councils should be asked to vote on their stand on lengthening the library hours.

He explained that the UC Library and Athletic Association felt the present closing was too early for the majority of students.

He said in most of the residences students eat at 8:15 p.m. and by the time they remove their academic gowns and go to the library it is 7:15 p.m. With closing time at 9:45 a maximum of only two and a half hours could be utilized for academic study.

A letter received from R. H. Blackburn in January, 1954, stated that the Library Committee of the Board of Governors had decided to keep the library open to the later hour of 10:00 p.m. as soon as the staff could be found. He said at this time that it would be impossible for the library to stay open until 11 p.m. as asked, for financial reasons.

Skule Nite Sign Crowns UC Top

One hundred and sixty feet up in the air, at the top of the University College tower, is a sign.

Curious passersby, who craned their necks yesterday to catch a glimpse of it, could see the words "Skule Nite" lettered on both sides of the sign, which stretches around a corner of the building. "One hundred and sixty feet," said an informed engineer, "it took five men and eight hours to put it up!"

Describing how the engineers accomplished the task, this source said the fourteen-by-seven foot placard was fastened in such a way "that nobody could get it down." They spent five hours in a small dark room in the tower, he said, waiting until about 1:30 a.m. to start the job.

"It took three hours after that," he said. "Pretty smooth, eh?"

Jim Vasoff, producer of Skule Nite, (the engineers' annual school show), commented, "Both as producer and as engineer I am amazed that the sign got there."

The white and blue sign may be there for some time. It is lashed around the highest part of UC with stout wire.

Trinity Frosh Brave Garbage But Lose Cake-fight To Sophs

Trinity sophomores staggered victoriously out of a conglomeration of flour, chicken intestines, fish scales and water while the freshmen, covered from hat to boot in mire, remained to clean up.

The occasion was Trinity's annual Soph-Frosh Cake Fight, which took place yesterday afternoon. The freshmen's objective was to get a piece of cake—regardless of size—through the college's west gate in one minute. Led by John Brooks, the frosh attacked in three waves. The first group served as a battering ram, the second, greased from head to foot, were under order "get through at all costs," and the third acted as support for the first.

Some second year men poured what appeared to be tons of flour, water and leaves on the frosh from overhead windows, while the remainder blocked the gate-way.

Three of the frosh, two minus their pants, managed to crawl, kick and scrape their way three quarters of the way through the passage. But their efforts were in vain. Before they could complete their efforts the gun proclaimed the passing of 60 seconds.

The cake fight concluded a day of scheming. Earlier the freshmen's potent mixture of flour, corn, flax and wax had been stolen, recovered, and then stolen again. They retaliated however, by dumping the sophomore's brew of corn and water all over the locker room floor. Attack and counter-attack ran right to the last instant, when the second-year men prematurely attacked the freshmen's supply truck.

Some gratification for the men of '579 can be found in the fact that only twice in the history of the college has an attempt succeeded. The first was by World War II veterans and the second when an aggressive ST7 pushed through.

Later on in the night, past initiation and Cake Fight differences were settled when the members of both years had a raucous smoker and the freshmen finally became men of college.

In the traditional "boat race," the men of third year defeated the fourth and proved that they could down the greatest amount of beer in the set time.

Smith's Statement

This letter was written by the President of the University, Dr. Sidney Smith, to the President of the Students' Administrative Council, Michael Shoemaker. In it the President expresses his appreciation for the SAC's stand on student rowdism.

I express my deep gratitude to the Students' Administrative Council for the stand that it took at its last meeting with respect to the conduct of students at football games, and for its realization of the danger of personal as well as property damage that are involved. I was so happy to learn from you yesterday, and from other reliable informants, that the vast majority of the students who went from here to Kingston behaved themselves in an admirable fashion. The stand of the SAC and the editorial expressions in The Varsity undoubtedly were major factors in this regard.

The universities in the football league must recognize that a reckless minority group have jeopardized the good name of their institutions. I know that the SAC and The Varsity will continue their efforts to create a climate of opinion that will inhibit such behaviour on the part of that small irresponsible group.

Yours faithfully,
Sidney Smith,
President.

No Tickets Left 1,000 Students Go To Queen's

You can't get tickets to this Saturday's Varsity-Queen's football final even if you get down on your hands and knees.

Mr. F. S. Gregory, ticket manager at Hart House, said late yesterday that some 1,000 student tickets had been sold and "there are no more."

At least 1,100 Varsity supporters will make the 180-mile trip to Kingston for the college football classic, Mr. Gregory predicted. For over 100 of the $2.00 non-student tickets have been sold to Varsity students.

However, for those who at present have no tickets, there is still a faint hope, for negotiations are under way with Queen's to provide extra last-minute standing room, Mr. Gregory added.

The Queen's Journal reports that 13,000 students are expected to cram their way into Richardson Stadium.

More than 2100 tickets were sold in less than eight hours at Queen's.

IRC Club Hears Trocme Says Africa Is Unsettled

Terror and oppression in North Africa is one of many results of the clash of Islam and Christianity. Pastor Andre Trocme told a meeting of the International Relations Club yesterday.

With the strong upsurge of Arab nationalism in Africa, westerners have lost prestige, he said. Islam is returning with renewed force and the "French dream" that if man is given rights, democracy will result has been destroyed.

Pastor Trocme attributed this to two failures—those of capitalism and paternalism. Two million settlers with tremendous advantages of education and capital made the countries extremely prosperous, he said, but at the same time the native population began a quick decedance.

Pastor Trocme is a leading pacifist minister in France and has experienced unsettled conditions personally in North Africa. He feels that although "communist has no immediate chance of success in North Africa," redistribution of land will have to come sooner or later. With the governments not strong enough to do it, he feels the only way without violence is an "ideological awakening of the people, based on a thirst for knowledge."

The people no longer want the help of westerners, he said, and would prefer to have lower standards of living if they could be left alone. They want to go back to their own methods and technicians.

Furthermore, he said, western medicine and hygiene has had a strange effect on North Africa. New developments have decreased the death rate at birth and as a result the population has doubled. Therefore the number of illiterate increases because insufficient schools are being built to handle this population increase.

Kuiper Lectures Saturday On Origin Of Solar System

Theories on the origin of the solar system will be presented by a Dutch astronomer before a joint meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute and the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada in Convocation Hall on Saturday night.

Dr. Gerard P. Kuiper, graduate of the University of Leiden in Holland, and professor of Astronomy, Yerkes Observatory, University of Chicago, will present the lecture.

He will discuss the nature of planets and the interrelations existing among the planets and the stars, and will draw conclusions as to the manner in which the planets were formed.

Present views on the origin of the solar system favour simultaneous formation of the sun and the planets from an original rotating nebulous mass, as distinct from the idea current several decades ago of a collision between two stars.

Dr. Kuiper will illustrate his lecture with lantern slides. The lecture will be at 8:15 p.m. and will be open to the public.

Runneth-Over

Toronto: Ryerson students and staff on the whole disagree with Billy Graham's charge that "women dress to bring impure thoughts in the minds of men". The charge was made during his Toronto crusade.

"I can't believe the way women dress has that effect on men," said one instructor.

"Best solution is to turn nudist," said a student, "clothes cause all the trouble."

Edmonton, Alberta: Students who haven't paid their fees may be asked to leave, the bursar's office at the University of Alberta warned. The deadline for payment of fees was back in the middle of October.

Antigonish, Nova Scotia: Campus politics are hot and heavy at St. Francis Xavier University. The Liberal Club is split down the middle over the question of elections.

A motion at a recent meeting of the Club forced the entire executive to resign. One member charged that in the recent elections, the president and executive had been "railroaded" into their positions.

A re-election of officers is expected in the next week.

Benares, India: Three students of the Benares Hindu University went on a hunger strike recently to demand admission to the industrial chemistry course. The president of the university's student union, R. Rai, supported them by joining their strike.

Montreal: A thief with a fondness for telephones seems to be haunting McGill University. A telephone recently disappeared from the Physical Science Centre at McGill; its cord was neatly clipped. This is the second phone stolen this year, the McGill Daily reports, and three were stolen last year.

Durham, North Carolina: A bookstore for browsing, not for textbooks, is tentatively planned for the Duke University campus. Committee and groups have been working on the idea for some time, but so far, no available space has been found.

London: Unless students immediately pick up the money owing to them, they're liable not to get it at all, warns Ken Cunningham, in charge of the campus Used Book Store. He threatens to use the $50 to $75 for "a tremendous party". The money belongs to students whose books were sold during the fall. There are also about 200 books lying around the office which have not been claimed.

Rangoon, Burma: Leaders of the student bodies in Rangoon, Burma, have accused the university authorities of having wrongly failed many students in the recent matriculation exams. They said that the examiners, in a calculated move to keep down numbers at the university, where hostel accommodation is limited, have failed many who deserved to pass. Only 11 percent of those who took the examinations passed.

YATES CUP UP FOR AUCTION

It's A New Story This Saturday As Gaels go After Championship

It's a new story that gets its first reading this Saturday in Kingston as the Blues battle with Queen's Golden Gaels for the Intercollegiate senior football championship.

For the past fifteen years Varsity and Western have dominated the college gridiron scene, and each November one could go on at great length about how boring it was, the old, old story that was coming up for another showing the following Saturday. But now the once-mighty Mustangs have fallen from their perch atop the league, and a new challenger appears to test the Blues' mettle and possibly strike a blow for the underdog.

It's no secret that the Gaels will have a lot of the chips stacked on their side when Saturday afternoon rolls around. Apart from a field hard as a block of cement, where Queen's football teams of the past have seen fit to upset stronger ball clubs, there's this psychological business of playing on home ground.

Everybody knows how tough the Gaels are in their own back yard, and Varsity coach Bob Mastersen is not expecting an easy go of it when the two squads tangle this Saturday. "We can't keep them off the score sheet," he's said before, "so we'll have to outscore them to whip them."

Logical enough, you say, but will the Blue offense measure up to its potential against an inspired Gael defence. If it's a good day, and thus far the weatherman has predicted nothing else, Varsity's aerial attack could ruin Queen's if it is as good as it was against the Mustangs last Saturday. The ground offense is easily as strong as that of the Gaels, and a bad day would mean a close battle between Phil Muntz, Jack Rogers, Ron Stewart, and Gary Schreider, among others. But with good weather a passing duel will likely develop as Gus Braccia and Harry Wilson both attempt to prove the all-star selectors were wrong.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

It is a well known fact that the Blues play Queen's in Kingston on Saturday. But how many people accept the members of the Blues as simply the Varsity football team, without giving any thought or consideration to their previous training? We'd say quite a few, and for the benefit of those people, here's the answer:

A certain school has a song, a line from which says, "If there weren't any seconds, there couldn't be a first." This refers to football teams, and we would like to apply it to our Varsity team and a great bunch of ball players known as the Baby Blues.

This year's Baby Blues are probably one of the best Intermediate teams Toronto has ever produced. A great deal of the credit for their success must go to Coach Jack Kennedy and his line coach and assistant, Gerry Sutherland, Jack and Gerry have worked tirelessly with the boys, and the great showing of the team in games indicates that they have been amply rewarded for their efforts.

The Seconds have racked up no fewer than 130 points while yielding but twenty-four to the opposition. Included in this total are twenty-two touchdowns, all but one of which has been scored along the ground. Without taking anything away from the passing efforts of Steve Winter and Larry Joyn, we feel a few words of credit must go to the sterling backfield which has ripped the opposition to shreds on many occasions. Leading this backfield are Tim Reid and Bob Dann running out of the half-back spots. Reid's spectacular running has been a big feature of the Baby Blue games this year. With a man in front of him, he will not hesitate an instant to leap over the top. Anyone who witnessed the game with Ryerson last week saw Tim do a complete backward flip in mid-air to avoid a tackle. Granted, coaches frown on this sort of play, and we hope that Tim's luck stays with him. Bob Dann, running second to Reid as the team's top ground-gainer, is a good, aggressive ball player and one of the best backfielders in the league. The parent Blues will have a good portion of their backfield back next year, but we wouldn't be at all surprised to see these two boys in Blue uniforms come next fall.

John Tattle at fullback is not the sort of ball-player he sounds out as spectacular, but he has, especially towards the end of the season, come into his own as a good, hard runner, and his line smashes in the game against Western left nothing to be desired. Steve Winter and Larry Joyn have shared quarterback duties, and both have turned in top efforts. Larry had a sore arm at the start of the year, and it was Winter who directed the team to the 35-0 win over Queen's. Since then, Larry's good arm and clear thinking have given him the number one spot, and he has been a running standout in the game on Friday with the Rams.

The injury to Gerry Lansky last Saturday was a tough break for the ex-St. Catharines Collegiate Trieler star, but it was a good break for little Rusty Gee. Rusty had been a stand-out in the Baby Blue backfield all year. As is usually the case, the man who carries the ball the most for long gains is the hero of the game in the eyes of the fans. Many people forget that most of the successful runs are made possible by good blocking on the play, and in this field Rusty excels. There was one particular block in the Western game which stands out in our memory. Reid was off on an end run to the right, when Art Turner broke in for the Colts and prepared to nail Tim for a considerable loss. Out of nowhere came Gee, and with one fling of his body, Turner was flat and Reid was over for a touchdown.

Turning to the line, the first thing to say is that the Intermediate League has rarely seen a group of linemen who could equal the performance the Baby Blues' line has turned in this season. Led by Nick Bruchovsky, Gary Conlett, and Mike Syron, the team has five have torn apart the opposing lines. Pete Polkrono who was forced to handle the centre spot alone for several games has turned in a magnificent job both on offense and defense. Ted Lapsky and Bob Lee have turned in great efforts at the end spots. With the power of the team in its running, perhaps the passing department hasn't had as much opportunity to stand out. But it's not for the passing that we commend them, but their fine blocking.

Unfortunately, it hasn't been possible to mention the entire team, but we would like to add a word of praise for the men who have given the team a great amount of reserve strength. And perhaps, if we may be allowed to single out one or two of these, Bobby Smart, who has been plagued with a bad shoulder all year, and Bill Naylor at the wingback slot deserve a word of praise.

The Baby Blues have had an excellent season; the spirit has been at the peak all year and we know the fans who have faithfully followed the team appreciate the football they have witnessed. So hats off to Jack Kennedy and his Baby Blues.

Nurses Wallop Physots 28-9

Nurses showed last night that they can handle basketball as well as patients as their senior team whipped the Physot seniors 28-9.

Close checking and the erratic shooting of both teams kept the score down in the first half. Nursing guard Fizzy Ireton was the game's outstanding player and the game's outstanding player and Pat Mackenzie and Peggy McLachlan each scored six points for the Nurses.

POT's Bev Dawe starred in the closing minutes with three quick baskets, but not enough to catch the nursing total.

PHE Gals Win Over Pharmacy

PHE First again overpowered Pharmacy 23-10 by a great display of basketball skill and coordination last night at OCE.

Although the Pharmacy team had considerably increased their manpower since their last game with the Physedders, they were still unable to outplay this strong offensive team.

Netting a total score of nine points, Jackie Davies was again high scorer for the winning team. Ruth McIntyre and Jan Tennant boosted the score by another nine points with accurate placements.

Outstanding player for the Pharmacy team was Jan McCabe who made many free shot opportunities pay off. The Pharmacy gals are beginning to make a promising show with the new additions to their ranks.

Ice Blues Improving

Under the part-time but capable direction of ex-Blue flash Jack Wheelrake, the hockey Blues have been hard at it for a little more than two weeks in Varsity Arena, in preparation for the return of head coach Jack Kennedy next week, and the first exhibition game with OHA Junior 'A' St. Michael's Majors, November 22.

Back of the blue line things seem already pretty well settled for the defending college champions, with Al Fleming and Al Cecuti sharing the netminding duties, and Dave Jackson, John Tolton, Sam Ashton and Barry Smith on defence. The blue line corps will be complete after the close of the senior football schedule when last year's captain, Dave Stephen, returns to the fold.

Up front Kennedy has arrived at two or three forward combinations that look as strong as those the club possessed last winter. Dave Reid's signing with the Leafs completed the destruction of last season's powerful first line. Both Clare Fisher and Paul Knox are academically ineligible. But with clever centre Don Coscar teamed with Ken Linseman and John Akitt, Kennedy has what he expects will be as potent a first line as possible.

Centred by ex-St. Mike's star Brian Anderson, Sandy Morrison and John MacDonald combine for an effective second forward unit while VTS's George White, and former intermediates Ted Rogers, Ian Morrison and Mert Wright will make things tough in picking a third line. The end of football will also see the return of defenceman John Casey and forward Bill Naylor. Greg Bourassa, a former University of Montreal Carabin star, is presently in hospital but will be free soon to test his mettle with the Blues.

Interfaculty Summary

Meds IV's racked up another victory in interfaculty lacrosse yesterday afternoon, beating Skule III's 5-3. Rayney and Kerr with two each, and Clarke with one scored for the Doctors. Sinclair, Bryan and McKelvey tallied for the Engineers.

University College Firsts assured themselves of first place in Group One in interfaculty soccer by whipping Senior SPS 4-1 yesterday afternoon. Dyson scored twice for the Red, with Rintoul and Brown adding singles. Uzumeri tallied the lone counter for the Engineers.

Skule Thirds defeated Victoria Thurs 15-10, 15-5 in a lone Intramural league volleyball game yesterday afternoon.

By FLO MIDDLETON

Now that the winter athletic season officially opened with the close of the baseball schedule last Monday, there are some details to be cleaned up in the autumn sports world, and some announcements to be made about the forthcoming events.

Over a week ago, a group of girls from all the colleges and faculties on the campus got together for nine holes of golf up at the St. Andrew's Golf Club. The game was a great success and all the ladies taking part were quite enthused. Not intending the tourney to be on a competitive basis, it was played strictly for fun and as a result of this informal gathering, those who had not had much practice at swinging a club joined the crowd.

At the end of nine holes of play, score cards were compared and Anita Poehon, St. Hilda's III was the winner. A lot of credit should go to Meredith Robinson and the other girls at UC who sponsored this tournament, for we feel more games and tournaments like this should be arranged. It would be an excellent idea for women's golf club to be organized under the Women's Athletic Association for the purposes of arranging informal outings for all girls on the campus and at the end of the season arrange a Interfaculty Tournament.

There are hundreds of girls at Toronto who are very interested in playing golf, but who need the encouragement and the chance to play competitively that an organization like the proposed one could arrange. Who knows, within a few years, if the people are to be found who would be interested in a club like this, we might even land up swinging our golf club in Intercollegiate ranks.

Intercollegiate Basketball: girls are reminded to get their running shoes and gym suits out of moth balls for the Intercollegiate Basketball try-outs. These practices are scheduled to start the last week in November and will run on for three weeks. During the first two weeks, the try-outs will be held at OCE and for the last week at Ryerson. Think seriously about it, basketball stars, and let's give it the old college try - let's make sure Toronto takes the Women's Intercollegiate Basketball Crown this year!

The Varsity harrier team suffered its second defeat of the year yesterday afternoon when they were soundly whipped 15-11 by Buffalo State.

The Buffalo, team newly-crowned New York State champions and winners of nine consecutive meets, swept to victory by placing the first five men. Joe Bessel was followed by Bob Knapp, Wilhe Gagnon, Al Hemen and George Fisher.

Bessel turned in the fastest time ever recorded on the shortened High Park course, finishing in a sizzling 23 minutes, 34 seconds

Toronto placed the next four men with Tom Stroud, Ron Toop, Bill Gelling and Bruce Hughes taking sixth to ninth places respectively. Mike Berger placed eleventh while Gord Huston and Doug McEntee finished fourteenth and fifteenth to complete the Toronto scoring.

The Varsity team was seriously hampered by the unavoidable absence of its star performer Bill Vorey, but were outclassed by the powerful Buffalo team, who hope to add the US National junior title to their laurels this weekend.

For the Blue team it was their last meet before the Intercollegiate trials this Saturday in Kingston.

Geneva Spirit

Or Wait And Watch

BY HUBERT PEACOCK I Trinity

The news of the past week and especially that on the international scene does not give much cause for optimism. Bitter fighting in the Middle East continues to jangle Western nerves and hopes for German re-unification in the near future are still uncertain. Mr. Pearson's tour of the South-East Asian countries brings a brighter note into the picture in the strength of friendship between India and Canada.

Last week the el Auja border between Israel and Egypt was the scene of the bitterest fighting since the bloody conflict of 1950. Retaliation and reprisal followed one another in a ceaseless exchange of fire. This latest trouble spot has again divided the world by placing many of the strategic areas of the Middle East in the rival camps of Russia and the West.

Egypt has already received arms and technicians from Czechoslovakia and has also announced her intention of nullifying the Anglo-Egyptian pact permitting Great Britain to re-occupy the Canal zone in event of war in the Middle East. All the Arab states are supporting Egypt.

Meanwhile Israel is seeking aid from the United States, who is reluctant to continue the arms race.

Although Premier Nasser is aware of the possible consequences of using Soviet arms and technicians he feels capable of preventing a coup by the communists. He should recall, however, that his predecessor, Mehmed Ali accepted Britain's help to build a country in 1939 and before he knew it found himself no longer in control of his country.

Russia had two distinct purposes in mind when she decided to risk another cold war. Realizing the strategic value of the North African coast for an invasion of Europe (a lesson learned in World War Two) the first step in spreading her influence there is the wooing of Egypt.

Secondly she is aware of what is going on in Africa and the best way to make use of it. The Dark Continent is the last stronghold of colonialism and the Africans are in the ferment of nationalism. There is not a more fertile area in the world in which to sow the seeds of revolution and Egypt is the key, the front door of Africa.

On the opposite side of the scales the West has been giving a rather weak manifestation of its counter attack on communism in Asia. On a tour of the world Mr. Pearson opened a dam in West Bengal which was built from the sale of Canadian wheat in India. The dam is part of an irrigation project to increase the production of rice. On the announcement of Canada's plans to build an atomic experimental station in India next year, Mr. Nehru decided to name the dam, Canada dam. This was the highest honour yet paid to any member of the Colombo plan as the Indian government refrains from making reference to individual nations within the Commonwealth who have contributed to some specific project.

It has been the most fitting tribute to Canada's effort in South-East Asia to date although there may be some doubts to whether Canada deserves the honour or not in view of her minute contributions ($28 million this year) to Colombo plan.

In Geneva the foreign ministers conference has not as yet come to an agreement on German re-unification. The only new advance has been a suggested election date. As Mr. Eisenhower said, "the conference is now facing the acid test of its ability to carry out the instructions given it in July by the four heads of government."

The former spirit of Geneva, whether real or imaginary, seems to be making a poor showing. Much hinges on the outcome of affairs in the Middle East. Were Russia's advances at Geneva in July sincere? or has she dropped her simulation of peace and embarked on another wave of attrition.

The success or failure of the conference will tell. The meeting no doubt suffers somewhat from the absence of the openness and sincerity which Mr. Eisenhower brought to the conference table in July. Mr. Dulles is the United States representative.

Over the last week the world seems to have relapsed into its old attitude of scepticism and lack of hope for the future. This attitude was swept away like a cloud during the first Geneva conference but the cloud has been blown back as the world watches Geneva this time with a lustreless eye. Korea, Indo-China, Formosa, and now the Middle East. Will it never, end? Was the spirit of Geneva an illusion?

If so, then the West had better resume its diplomatic offensive and rouse itself once more to continual wakefulness.

Simcoe Hall officialdom seems to have been thrown into a furor by the request of the SAC for permission to erect one small bulletin board in front of the SAC office.

Last week, a routine request for permission to put up the board — which will stand only six feet high and cost less than $50 — was sent from the SAC to the Superintendent of Buildings, Simcoe Hall.

This august official, evidently under the double impression that students are an undesirable nuisance around a University, and that the SAC's tiny structure came under the heading of a new building, said that he was unable to take the responsibility for the decision. He referred the matter to the full Property Committee of the Senate — whose next meeting, unfortunately, is almost one full month away.

We have recently heard talk that the University administration was being decentralized and streamlined. Evidently the news of this step has not yet trickled down the corridors of Simcoe Hall to the echelons of officials ensconced there, or else our ideas on decentralization and efficiency are far different from theirs.

The delay in the construction of the bulletin board may cause considerable difficulty to the SAC, since the ground will probably be frozen by the time they get permission to erect their structure.

But far more irritating than this one delay is the evidence that it affords of the 600 feet of red tape in which Simcoe Hall can tangle up one poor little six foot bulletin board.

News has seaped through that the Hart House Orchestra Associates are not out of troubled waters. Henry Best, the chairman of the Associates, writing in the Gargoyle says: "It would be sad indeed if after all the support that was evidenced in the time of crisis this venture failed for lack of financial support."

It would appear that the apathy of the student (there — we've said it) is a far harder force to combat than the puritanical zeal of organized and subsidized busybodies. We would almost be prepared to say, better any reaction than no reaction at all.

At the time of the conflict with the Alliance we were full of admiration for the strong stand which students immediately took. To be frank, we were slightly amazed at such a vigorous and unanimous reaction on the campus about any matter.

The aftertaste is not so pleasant. Either the students were fighting for something they did not really want, or else they are addicted to much talk and little action — much self-righteous criticism and little prosaic enduring interest.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Pain In The Neck

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I should like to protest the high-handed unjust attitude taken by our University Police towards those of us who drive to school, but are not among the "privileged forty" whose blue stickers entitle them to a daily parking spot at the side of Hart House.

I think some of the $40 a year, which we now pay to Hart House, should be set aside to secure a permanent parking lot for students. I would venture to say that at least 15% of those attending lectures daily are driven down in private vehicles!

Since September 23, I have received two city parking tickets, a scraped rear fender, and a pain in the neck because of the lack of parking space around the University.

I suggest that something be done about our pitiful situation!

BEER ON THE CAMPUS?

Should There Be A Student Tavern On Campus?

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

The suggestion discussed on this page is whether students should be freely allowed to drink beer, on campus, with fellow students.

This was prompted by several recent events; the football riots, in which some participants, at least, were drunk or partially so; the FORUM earlier this year on fraternities, which mentioned briefly the role of the fraternity in bringing the student and alcohol closer together; the 'Thirsty Threesomes' letter to The Varsity, complaining they could not get entrance to the KCR because they were underage.

Alcohol is here to stay on college camp. It is taken as the natural partner to some student activities, such as football weekends and parties. Drinking, among some students, is a mark of social prestige, their motto being, 'He who holds the most, is best man.'

WHY DO WE DRINK?

Why do we drink? Social custom and conformity, students answer. Drinking relaxes us, gives us a lift, helps us think, helps us be merry, is the catalyst to better fellowship, say others. (We cannot determine the effect of radio, television, and the current 'Yours to protect' advertising in Ontario on these replies).

Yet alcohol is a depressant and has an anaesthetic effect, medical science tells us. A study at Yale university shows that any drinker is a potential alcoholic. Men drink, the study says, primarily because of emptiness in their aims of life.

Drinking in excess, then is an escape from the sense of futility, from the dead-end street of an unfulfilled personality.

OTHER EXAMPLES

We have an example set for a tavern on campus in the German Student Biergarten, in the bistros which serve as student gathering-places in French universities. In Europe, these commercial establishments are practically the only student unions extant. As a consequence, students use them wisely, and find the best medium for exchange of ideas is over a glass of beer, liqueur or wine.

Columbia College, the men's undergraduate division of Columbia University, has its own establishment for students in the basement of one of the dorms. This in spite of the low New York age limit (18) and the proximity of numerous public bars. The Lion's Den as it is called, serves beer and light meals; it is continually crowded and noisy. It is a centre for fellowship and the usual discussions of sex that occupy college men. Students complain, however, that it is too noisy for serious discussion or thought, and congregate instead in the neighbouring bars for this. The Lion's Den partially fulfills the purpose it was instituted for.

IN TORONTO?

Could a student tavern in Toronto fulfill the threefold purposes of ideas, friendships and fun? Or would it inevitably lead most of our students down a primrose path to futility?

Alcohol is here to stay on college camp. A student tavern should slow the familiar exodus from the campus to the KCR. It should provide students with a place where they can show their own sense of responsibility—and their respect for fellow students—in moderate drinking, not for the sake of the drinking, not to forget the unfinished essay due two days ago, but for stimulating relaxation, contemplative discussion, and contact on a University level with each other. Presumably an ATL card would be one's ticket of admission (I do not wish to discuss the conflicts between this idea and the LCBO. If this were so, it would prevent the duplicity of under-age students brazening their way into the KCR, and the similar duplicity of fraternities, who serve under-age students every night.

The university, we are told, exists to give us a mature viewpoint in the problems and realities which will confront us through life. Alcohol, be it problem or just reality, is costing the Canadian public almost three times as much as the education of their children. A mature attitude to alcohol, then, is just as necessary for the student as a mature attitude to marriage or religion. The student tavern, then, should help this mature attitude; I cannot see it encouraging excess.

And if the impecunious SAC is held in mind, it should mean more funds for other student activities, stemming from profits in the tavern.

CONSEQUENCES

On the other hand, the consequences of a tavern would be great. The morality of many of our parents, of many graduates, and of other adults in the community would be offended. A small proportion of students with too little self-control and too much beer under their belts could easily bring, through their actions, a bad name to the university. And many students have principles as well.

With a tavern on campus, all of us students might sink into the depths of depravity and disrepute.

Or we might all become more adult in our attitudes towards and actions with alcohol.

"When we get down to L in hurricanes," a writer observes, "it ought to be a Lulu." And if M for Maggie lives up to her name the air will be thick with the things she'll start throwing.

Proposed Beer cellar

Plan of proposed building for the University campus by the noted Architect F. Wright. Among the many interesting features of the new building are the large windows cleverly curtained to conceal the view, the Bower of Bliss for couples who prefer not to drink, the convenient clump of bushes, the zig-zag path to the library and the effigy of S. Smith.

The walls of the beer storage area are of special construction to foil intruders. It is intended that the beeryery will be built on the present site of the book store, that is to say, centrally located on the campus.

Special note should be made of the hexagonal tables which repeat the motif of the room. The chairs are also hexagonal, making the whole thing genuine. A loaf of bread, a jug of wine...

It's No Witch's Brew

"Alcohol is no Witch's Brew." It is simply a means that man has found of relaxing his highly developed nervous system. Doctors often prescribe a few drinks before dinner as a cure for nervous indigestion.

Drinking greatly increases your capacity for enjoyment. People do not drink because of pressure from the liquor interests. Neither do they drink in a futile flight from reality. They simply drink because it enables them to pass their leisure time in a relaxed, genial frame of mind. I completely fail to see why some people can find so much evil in what to most well-balanced people is a wonderful boon to their existence. Social drinking compares very favourably with other forms of relaxation that are used by the anti-drinking crowd such as getting into a stew over inconsequential issues like student apathy, mergers of student cliques, etc.

Alcohol is not an evil to be stamped out, but an aid to better living, a means to relaxation, and its proper use the earmark of the educated man.

On the second round South and West both passed, leaving North with his bid of seven hearts.
Opening lead was king of spades played by East, meaning that he wanted his suit returned by his partner. He said he would have bid if he had had one more honor, but he was afraid his partner was short on spades, and he only wanted a sure thing

North trumped with the deuce, and followed it with the three, four, five, six, seven, eight and nine of hearts. West said as far as he was concerned North could take his tricks and etc., etc., but North said that he'd never had a hand like this before and he wanted to play it out to the last trick.

At this point, East asked to be excused while he went for a coke. Discussion went animatedly on while they waited, and after half an hour, they looked up to find the back door of the Students' Union wide open and no sign of East. (He was next seen a week later in PolySci 3, with a dazed expression on his face.)

It is probable that if play had continued, North would have made his contract. What would you have done?

UN Is Striving For Better World Politics Not Only Important Matter

By JUDY PERRY

Towards a better world—remember that. For the past ten years the closest we have ever come to "the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World," the United Nations Organization, has been working with this as its goal.

Just what kind of a world is this to be? Immediately you will say that we must have peace. Yes, a better world is imagined as a peaceful one, but it is more than that. It is a world in which people have enough to eat, a world in which disease and plague are kept under control, in which a man can hold his head up without fear and voice his beliefs, in which you and I can live with pride and raise our children.

It is towards this ideal that the UN is striving. The much publicized political side of the story is only one of many. The better world is being achieved through the promotion of Human Rights, social and economic progress, education, medicine, and technical assistance. But in the long run it's the little things that count.

It was the United Nations that gave eight year old Roberto in Italy his first pair of shoes. In Honduras, Gabriela was taught how to care for her new-born baby, while a Javanese was cured of tuberculosis and then taught improved methods of farming so he could support his family.

This is where you or I might come in. Not all of us can be polished diplomats or world-shaking orators, but most of us want what the UN wants—a better world. No matter what your vocation or training, there is a place for you in this world.

Just as every faculty on the campus is in some way linked to the international scene, so is every club and organization.

Did you know that Canadian engineers are helping to raise the economy of Pakistan? Do you realize that teams from the World Health Organization reach every corner of the world, teaching preventive medicine, as well as curing the ill? Thousands of children who would have grown up illiterate ten years ago are receiving an education to-day. Yet all noble things have a humble beginning.

Information, films and speakers on any United Nations topics can be obtained from the Toronto Branch of the United Nations Association at 113 St. George.

Finding out more about this far-reaching organization is a good way to start "towards a better world."

The Legend Of The Tam

(Reprinted from Queen's Journal for those visiting Queen's this Saturday.)

An ancient legend found in the ruins of an old castle near Coventry, England, tells the source of the famous Queen's Science Tam.

It seems that about 1200 AD the engineers of that day were wearing steel helmets, and as every engineer knows, the condensation of the fog and the subsequent evaporation made the helmets both damp and uncomfortably cold. Besides, no engineer wanted to be in a fog. Also, in order to avoid a clanging sound in their ears when hit over the head with a club the engineers arose in a body and rejected the ancient Roman head-gear. (All except the king, who was an honorary member and wore a crown gear).

Still, they needed more head covering for there were pigeons in England, as well as in Grant Hall. The engineers, crafty fellows under any circumstances, were impressed by Pierre la Bull-Shooter, inventor of the time (and the line) and started to wear the touque. But the English pigeons being nobody's stools, came in at an odd angle. Hence the flatter, more protective tam was developed, supposedly about 1227.

Scottish engineers soon adopted the tam, and to emphasize that they were much better than English engineers, added a distinctive braid around it. The Scottish were quite experienced and there soon came a time when they were needed. For one day the king of Scotland found himself in the dark, an experience enjoyed as well by some engineers of the day.

First, however, the court jester was called, and he found the situation uproariously funny and laughed his fool head off. The king thought this a tremendous idea and the jester was led away to be beheaded at dawn.

Then the king summoned his chief engineer. The engineer, who was of course a brilliant fellow, soon threw light upon the mystery. The legend continues that the king's candles had gone out to get lit and had not returned. The engineer was almost at his wick's end, when in rolled the candles. The engineer with a scorching blast set them aflame and at last everybody saw the light.

The king wishing to express his gratitude to the engineer decreed that thereafter he and his fellows should wear yellow nuggets of gold on their tams. However, the king, who had married the queen for her money, soon found she would permit this (it was nargold) only if all who wore the nuggets would remain in her service. Hence the engineers were soon known as Queen'smen, and the name still stands.

Now certain others in the service of her majesty became jealous. They were the writers, readers, and politicians of the land, who also demanded of the queen that they be allowed to wear tams with nuggets of gold. These frustrated fellows, however, were denied this honor, and when they approached the queen, were given the raspberry which they promptly put on their hats. The medicine-men, who felt rather blue about the whole affair, started a campaign, but it all blew over. Finally they adopted one of the bonny blue bells of their native Scotland to put on top of their tams.

Torontonians On WUS

Two representatives have been appointed to represent NFCUS on the National World University Service Administrative Committee, Items, a NFCUS publication, announced.

The representatives are: Mr. Tom Symonds, Chairman of the SAC and Dean of Residence at the University, and Bill Smyth, NFCUS External Affairs Committee Chairman at Toronto and News Editor of The Varsity.

Items also announced that Bishop's University, Lennoxville Quebec, was the first member to pay the annual NFCUS fees. (The fees run at 50c. a student).

The NFCUS publication also discussed an editorial in the Acadia Athenaeum which suggested that the Acadia (N.S.) Student Council acted too hastily last year in withdrawing from NFCUS.

ROSSUM'S UNIVERSAL ROBOTS HIT HART HOUSE THEATRE TONIGHT — BE THERE!

Skule Nite Soars

Skule Nite's tower-topping box-office seems to have had an almost instantaneous effect. Jim Vasoff, producer of the traditional S.P.S. show, announced today that it would run for an extra performance this year, volcanic vocalist

Carmen McRae, recently voted Metronome Singer of the Year, will be one of the artists featured at the Modern Jazz Show of '55, which comes to Massey Hall for the evening of Monday, November 14. The rest of the package consists of the Dave Brubeck Quartet, the Gerry Mulligan Sextet, and the Australian Jazz Quartet.

Fall Convocation To Honour Four November 25th

Four professors in the Arts and Sciences will be presented with honorary degrees at the fall Convocation of the University of Toronto, November 25, President Sidney Smith announced.

The degree of doctor of letters will be conferred on F. M. Salter, professor of English at the University of Alberta, and on Chester Martin, professor emeritus of History, University of Toronto.

H. G. Thode, principal of Hamilton College, and professor of Chemistry and director of research at McMaster University, and Lachlan Gilchrist, professor emeritus of Geophysics at the University of Toronto will receive doctor of science degrees.

Professor Salter will address the convocation, and degrees will also be conferred on students who have successfully completed graduate and undergraduate courses.

namely at 2:00 p.m. Saturday, November 19.

"This year's demand for tickets is completely unprecedented," said Vasoff, explaining that this will be the first time Skule Nite has had a fifth performance or an afternoon performance. Friday and Saturday night, he said, were completely sold out, with only a few singles and doubles left for Wednesday and Thursday, November 16 and 17.

Feature attraction this year, said Vasoff (in addition to the twenty-leg kickline) will be a 25-piece Orchestra including strings, to be known as the Lady Godiva Band in Concert — "playing legit music for the first time." Highlights include a skule-eye view of life in a girl's residence, called "what every young engineer should know," and a Shakespearean scene.

Trinity, Wycliffe Mess Up Steps In Water Fight

A rather mussy battle raged last night on Hoskin Avenue as Trinity and Wycliffe continued their long standing feud with flour, water, and insults.

The fight started when six or seven men from Wycliffe, the Anglican theological school on the campus, scooted across Hoskin from Wycliffe's red brick structure to Trinity about 11:30 last night.

They were carrying a large garbage pail of water and flour, which they proceeded to dump on Trinity's front steps — creating what one observer termed "one hell of a mess."

Before all the Wycliffe assaulters could make good their escape, some Trinity students dashed out and captured one of the culprits. Wycliffe's forces soon regrouped, however, and liberated the captive.

Trinity men, evidently determined not to let their honor go unavenged, sallied forth armed with pails of flour, water, and other "goo" of their own. They dumped the mess on Wycliffe's front steps, but Wycliffe was more prepared than Trinity — they showered the Trinity-types with paper bags containing flour and water from a second floor balcony.

There's A Small Hotel...

A strange comedy, flickering from reality to fantasy, and back again, was chosen by the Cercle Francois of University College for its annual presentation. Hotel des Neiges, by Robert Boissy, a play abounding in highly comic situations, shadowed by more serious overtones, and with peculiar if not grotesque characters, afforded a delightful evening of theatre, as well as incidental instruction in French.

Set high in the Alps, the "Hotel of the Snows" is a disturbing resort. Staffed by a bizarre company, having a mysterious room Number 7, it has no guests until the arrival of Evelyne Herblay, a sophisticated Parisienne, and her older companion, Marguerite Delaforet. A series of intriguing incidents bewilders the audience. The Chef de Reception persists in giving illustrated talks on the heart, skeletons fall out of closets, room No. 7 looms sumptuously out of another century, and the host lives and speaks in a world of his own creation.

The cast, directed by Professor C. R. Parsons, played it as comedy approaching almost to farce throughout. Although this method was entertaining, I felt rather cheated, not being given the more brooding atmosphere of fascination I had, rightly or wrongly, sensed in an earlier reading of the play. I could have been more bothered and disturbed by these strange characters and situations; instead I could only laugh. However, the choice was undoubtedly wise. It was more easily understood, and therefore, probably more greatly enjoyed.

The fact that the play was in French was no obstacle to enjoyment. The actors played with great spirit and maintained a quick pace.

Marion Hogarth, attractive and charming as the heroine, Evelyne, was perhaps a little too coy and charming, thereby losing sophistication. C. R. Parsons, her romantic partner, was at times difficult to hear, and on the whole could have been more elegant and remotely mysterious.

The comic highlights of the evening were achieved by Adrienne Hunter as the foolish companion of Evelyne, Marguerite Delaforet. Miss Hunter has a wonderful sense of timing and played with obvious gusto and abandon. The slatternly and sullen Therese was admirably portrayed by Helje Forre while Dave Jessel was a colourful, and amusing, (if silent), negro mute, Zazaquel.

But the most expert playing was rendered by John Walker in the character role, Vincente, sometime Chef de Reception, sometime Chef de Medicine. His gaunt and haunted air of prepossession and his medical recitations were absorbing.

Visually the presentation was adequate, although stage depth could have been used to greater advantage to suggest more forcefully the peculiar atmosphere of the Hotel and the snow-swept perspective of the Alps.

Hotel des Neiges was entertaining from the first hint of the puzzle until the explanation of the almost too contrived ending, when we learn that the illusory world of the hotel set among the snows had been devised by Philippe to lure the beautiful Evelyne, whom he secretly loved, from Parisian society, into an escapist world of Alpine enchantment.

Margaret Penman

AH, SUCCESS! — No wonder he's happy — he was in the French play! Dave Jessel played one of the less ear-catching roles in Tuesday's annual Hart House production of the Cercle

Francis. As Zazaquel, the negro mute of the "Hotel des Neiges," he stalked the stage in silence throughout the play. But every expression was worth a thousand words.

Erection Of Board Delayed May Dig Own Post Holes

It's a long, long time awaiting . . . for the new S.A.C. bulletin board. If progress on the SAC bulletin project continues at the current rate, it appears that it might be erected by spring and that erring SAC members will help dig the foundations. A fortnight ago, plans for the bulletin board were first presented to the SAC meeting. They were drawn up by Ted Sievenpiper (IV Arch.), SAC Rep.

SAC Secretary-Treasurer MacDonald then sent a letter to Mr. Russell, Superintendent of Buildings, requesting permission to erect the board. Mr. Russell, declining the responsibility, classed the structure as a "new building," and the issue was referred last Thursday to the Property Committee of the Board of Governors for a final decision.

Time passé. Delay involving the obtaining of a metal sash has now caused further procrastination in the erection of the bulletin board. And the weather. As the ground will shortly be freezing up, this is expected to hinder the sinking of the necessary concrete footings.

SAC concurred with Sievenpiper's suggestion that the board be painted bright red and white. He pointed out this was a more cheerful combination than red alone.

Council also concurred with the motion by Jim Kirkwood (Emmanuel) that, "In view of the large number of important persons who failed to heed their summons to this august meeting, these people be picked to volunteer to dig the post holes for the bulletin board."

The motion was passed unanimously.

SAC To Examine Bookstore Mark-up-Profits-Efficiency

Profits, mark-up, overcharging and management efficiency of the University Bookstore will come under the scrutiny of an SAC investigating committee.

A motion to set up a committee to investigate the efficiency of the Bookstore was proposed by Diana Haas, UC Women's Undergraduate Association rep., at the SAC meeting last night.

Named to head the committee was Gord Purdy (IV UC). The other two members of the committee are Liz Harper (SGS) and Sandy MacPherson (Meds).

The manner of running the store and the mark-up of books in comparison with other stores will be considered. The committee will look for specific instances of the university bookstore charging more than other stores.

A suggestion that the SAC set up its own non-profit bookstore was received with applause.

Also quoted at the meeting were extracts from a letter by U. of T. Press Director M. P. McEnerney in which he said the "best possible service at the best possible prices" was being provided by the bookstore.

The question was also raised as to the relation of the Bookstore to the students of the University and to the SAC itself. The reply by the SAC Chairman was that the students have no control, they're only customers!

Juke Box Probation In Vic Union Today

Canned music will float throughout the wide open spaces of the Vic Union coffee shop for the first time today, for the Victoria House Committee has acceded to student requests to give the juke box a trial.

The machine will be in for today only to test for sound and to find students' reaction, said Fred Caleren, president of the VCU. He said that if it operates without disturbing the rest of the building, there is a strong possibility it will be kept as a permanent fixture.

Some felt it might disturb the common rooms, reading room, or music room upstairs.

A poll of U. of T. students conducted recently indicated approval of the Arbor Room's now-famous juke box.

Snell Returns Today At 4

Dr. G. B. Snell, recently elected suffragan bishop of Toronto, will return to Trinity College today to discuss his beliefs on Christianity in practice.

Dr. Snell, a Trinity graduate, is expected to answer all questions about his faith and to stress that beliefs are fancies until they are practised.

The meeting will be at 4:00 p.m. in Trinity College, today.

Indian Delegate Will Speak To UN Weekend Visitors

Krishna Menon, U.N. delegate for India, will address members of the International Relations Club during the weekend junket to New York the club is sponsoring for November 25-28.

The week-end is being sponsored jointly by the IRC and the United Nations Club.

The group will be the guests of the Canadian Delegation during their visit to the United Nations building. Krishna Menon and Dr. Keenleysides of the U.N. Technical Assistance Bureau will speak to the group in one of the U.N. committee rooms, on Friday afternoon.

Also arranged for the week-end is a cocktail party with IRC members in and around New York, and visits to the IRC permanent headquarters.

Tension and oppression in North Africa will be the topic of the meeting. Guest speaker is Andre Trocme, travelling secretary of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, a large and powerful pacifist organization. Dr. Trocme has just returned from a trip to the tension-filled colonies of Morocco and Tunisia in North Africa.

Bio-Boys' Beano Brings Biologist

The twenty-fifth anniversary banquet of the Toronto Biochemical and Biophysical Society will be held at Hart House at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 23rd.

Addressing the beano will be Dr. Lawrence Irving, who will talk on some of his findings in the Brooks Range in Alaska.

Dr. Irving was Professor of Experimental Biology at the University of Toronto during the years 1934-36. For several years he has been chief biologist at the Arctic Health Research Centre in Alaska.

Debate To Snitch Skule Nite Public

Next week's Hart House debate will argue the controversial question: "In the opinion of this house there is no place in the University for technical faculties."

Speakers for the Ayes will be Barry Watson (Grad) and J. R. M. Douglas (III Vic.) and for the Noes, Woody Friedlander (SPS) and L. D. Gray (SPS).

Clyde Batten (III UC), Hart House Debate Committee secretary said, "since this debate coincides with the opening of Skule Nite, the debate will be overcrowded."

Nowadays of course, the tam has crossed the Atlantic to the new home in Canada, where it gracefully adorns the head of many a Queensman. The gold nugget has disappeared in favor of a wool tassel. Incidentally, there are several engineers with their tam-covered heads buried like ostriches at Fort Knox, still refusing to move either their tams or their hard-earned nuggets.

A Beat Up President

SAC At A Glance

By RALPH BEVVIN

The Student's Administrative Council last night besides worrying the administration about a bulletin Board and the book store;

- worried about 550 unsold handbooks, (the SPS stores sold only five of a stock of 300);
- had a "beat-up" looking president;
- purchased a rubber stamp for The Varsity;
- made a net profit last year on their total operation of $2967, $97 more than last year;
- laughed in despair when the Student Service Commission failed twice to entice children from the University Settlement to football games. The report stated children might be adverse to being used as a publicity medium;

- sent the NFCUS $2000 in advance payment of the current year's fees; were gratified to hear the Blue and White Society had a profit of over $2,500 so far this year;
- spent $5851 to renovate the SAC Building up to last summer;
- learned the Blue and White Christmas Tree will be on December 15;
- obtained permission for mid-week music at Falconer Hall for the Host Committee reception;

- heard the SAC had $15,373 in its general accumulated surplus reserve;
- was asked by Ron Martin (IV Dents) whether the SAC office sold tickets for individual student faculty shows (never);
- wondered what to do about a request by a Blue and White official to bring Adlai Stevenson to the campus;
- discovered that Red Feather had collected $2358 this year as opposed to last year's $1372;
- heard nothing from 6 representatives.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Friday, November 11th, 1955

—VSP by Paul Kysetka

The whistles blow, the rushing traffic halts. The dead leaves trickle across the pavement beneath Soldiers' Tower. The bleak November campus is still. Time has stopped; and past, present, future seem miraculously to be one. We remember . . . Yes, there's Johnston, there, smoking his pipe, dark-haired, boyish, sitting in one of the common rooms of Hart House with a book of poetry in his hand; there's Smithfield with his blazer undone and his tie loose at the neck; and over there, Innis, hulking, raw-boned, the captain of the football team, looking at a collection of Spanish art. Yes, there's Jutman and Kleinberg arguing over business ethics, and Lablanc who thinks that French-Canadians should refuse to fight if Canada becomes entangled in a second World War . . . War!

What? Is it Johnston, there, climbing into the cockpit of that Spitfire, silhouetted against the dawning sky; is it Smithfield stumbling wearily along the sea-sprayed deck to relieve the bridge; is it Innis, apple-cheeked, serious-browed leading that platoon through the smoke of the guns; and Leblanc there in the firing line of the Van Doos — Leblanc the avowed pacifist; and there, Jutman and Kleinberg running through the machine-gun fire with a stretcher between them . . .

Only a year, six months before, you were dashing into the Skule building with rotten eggs cupped in your hands. Innis, you were booting that field-goal that won the game for Varsity. All of you were studying, playing, making love, raising Cain . . .

Johnston, break loose from that flaming cockpit! For God's sake climb out, try, try, there's an atom bomb being made that can win the war in one irreparable stroke! You need not die, Smithfield. Hold onto that life-raft, let the icy sea not cut you off from all the universe's vast future; before it's time for you to die we'll reach the moon — stay and see — they're building the fantastic space-ship now. Innis, grit your teeth and hold your butchered legs; think of Marina and the youngster you've never seen! Why did you do it Leblanc? You never wanted war, yet you caught that grenade and blew yourself to smithereens and saved your pals who never even thought to question . . .

Jutman and Kleinberg: yours was the cruelest stroke of all, victims of mad snipers' bullets when all the world — your mothers too — knew the war was through . . .

We remember you. The bugle brings you back once more; the dead leaves rustling across the cold concrete square where you once walked and maybe kissed. Maybe, someday, we shall tell you what you missed!

Over Two Thousand Sign Petition To Premier Frost

The petition protesting the cancellation of the original series of Sunday night concerts by the Hart House Orchestra Associates has been sent to the Premier of Ontario, Hon. Leslie Frost.

The petition, which was circulated following the Lord's Day Alliance's threat to prosecute the society, contained 2063 names.

The petition also requests that the provincial law be amended to permit concerts of a similar nature to be held on Sunday evenings.

In a letter covering the petition, Robert Brown, Co-editor of The Varsity, said that even although the Lord's Day Alliance had apparently withdrawn its objections to this particular series of concerts, a similar threat still existed to the association, and to other organizations proposing to hold similar Sunday concerts.

He said he hoped Mr. Frost would see fit to recommend to the Ontario Legislature at the earliest moment that necessary amendments to the Lord's Day Act be made.

Noted Authoress Speaks On Work And Life Of Poet

Adam Mickiewicz, Polish poet whose work has been compared to that of Shakespeare and Homer, will be the subject of a lecture at Flavelle House next Monday, Nov. 14, at 8:00.

Guest speaker at the meeting, sponsored by the Slavic Circle and the Polish Students Group is Mrs. Maria Kuncewicz, internationally famous author.

Mrs. Kuncewicz will speak on both the life and poetry of this man, who though little known in North America, has been widely acclaimed in Poland, England, France, Germany and in every country where translations of his work are available.

The lecture is particularly significant since this year is the 100th anniversary of the death of Mickiewicz.

Kingston Hosts Championship And Varsity Defeats Yates Cup

There are things to be done this weekend in Kingston—tears to be shed, hands to be shaken, and beer to be drunk in celebration. Who does the shedding, the shaking and the celebrating will be decided in another thirty-six hours when Intercollegiate football folds up and dies after the Varsity Blues and the Queen's Golden Gaels settle their dispute over the Yates Cup.

Gunning for their first title since the fall of 1937 Queen's are expected to put up the stiffest battle ever, while the Blues, determined to retain the crown they snatched from Western in a tense sixty minutes last November, will be at their strongest in defense of the title.

"We'll miss Don Cheeseman and Gerry Lansky," says coach Bob Masterson, but Bill McIntyre ran well at wingback against the Mustangs and Intermediate Rusty Gee brings added strength in the tackling department. Wally Bulchak will start at fullback in place of the injured Cheeseman, as the Blues prepare to face their toughest game of the year.

Masterson will go with Harry Wilson at quarterback, directing virtually the same team that laced Western 38-6 last Saturday. Centre Dave McIntyre joins the Intermediates for this afternoon's tilt with Queen's but otherwise the Blues are at full strength.

The Gaels are up for this one, and so are the Blues. It's almost anybody's championship and it's sure to be a thriller.

Baby Football Blues Play Meet Comets To-Day At 2

Coach Jack Kennedy's Baby Blues will be attempting to clinch at least a tie for first place when they take on Queen's Comets at Varsity Stadium this afternoon.

With the exception of Rusty Gee, who will be up with the parent Blues for Saturday's clash with the Gaels, the Intermediates will be at full strength for the contest. In return for Gee, the Blues are sending down Dave McIntyre at centre. Danny Nelson sat out last night's practice with a dislocated finger, but he is expected to dress for today's game. Lanky Larry Joynt will start at the quarter back spot. The half line will be made up of Bill Naylor, Tim Reid, John Tattle and Bobby Dann. Larry Stacey and Bobby Lee will be patrolling the end spots.

The Rinkies seemed pretty sharp at last night's light workout and they shouldn't have much trouble subduing the weak Comets who have already bowed to Varsity by a 35-0 score in the first game of the season. Nevertheless Kennedy is taking nothing for granted and has his boys working hard at the practice.

At present O.A.C. occupies the top spot by virtue of their win over Western last week, but the Aggies have completed their schedule and so a Baby Blue win will assure them of a tie for the championship. There is no playoff in the Intermediate League.

Seeing that today's game is the last of the season for the Intermediates and that many of them will be up with Bob Masterson next year, there should be a fair crowd out for today's contest. Game time is two o'clock and it costs nary a penny to witness the match.

PHE Smother Saints 42-10 UC Jr-Sr Down POT 17-9

PHE III took St. Hilda's Jr. to the cleaners, 42-10 and cinched first place in their basketball league for it is highly improbable that the Saints will be able to gather a team strong enough for the next encounter to revenge the downfall; however, this is not to say that the Saintly types did not give the PHE gaels a good game or that they won't in the future.

Finding the hoop in the first few minutes of play, the athletic types just could not stay away from the basket area as they penetrated the Trinity guard line continually to increase the score. At the end of the first quarter, it was 10-3 and by the end of the first half, PHE had increased their total to 18 against the meagre two point increase by the Saints.

Keeping up their dead eye shooting and spurred on by fast Sylvia Kerr, PHE made it 42-10 when the final whistle went. High scorers for PHE were: Marilyn Charters, 12, Sylvia Kerr, 10, Arleen Seaman, 10, and Georgia Brock, 8, and for St. Hilda's: Pam Miles, 6 and Penny Linell, 3.

In the eight-thirty women's basketball game last night, UC Jr. Sr. defeated POT Sr., 17-9 in a rather slow, sloppy game where the high-light seemed to be the calling of fouls, mostly over the new ruling re tie balls. At the end of the half, the Red and White six led 12-8 and from then on the game was theirs.

Never at anytime did the hutmomen threaten the UC team in the last frame, as the best they could do was to increase their short side of the score by one point. UC added five more points to make the final score read 17-9. Marney Littlejohn and Elaine Bassin were top scorers for UC with 6 points and Jean Simpson notched 4. For POT, Sheila Kemp was tops with 4.

Junior Engineers Win Joe Whitmore Scores

By ARNOLD ENGLANDER

The Junior Engineers clinched first place in the 2nd division by virtue of a convincing 23-6 victory over Meds. The win left SPS with an undefeated regular season record of four wins and eight points. Second place UC finished with three wins, one loss and six points. Both Skule and UC will now advance into the Mulock Cup playoffs.

Once again, the Engineers were led to victory by their great half-line of Joe Whitmore, Wally Adams and Izzy Pastushak. All three ran for big gains behind an offensive front wall that reached their season's peak in this game. The line blocked with such perfection, that not until the third quarter were the Engineers forced to kick on third down. The defensive line, spearheaded by Nels Thompson, Merl Pascoe and Fred Zorzi performed in their usual rock-like manner.

Joe Whitmore led the scoring parade with thirteen points, on 12 touchdowns and 3 converts. The ex-UTS star also stood out on defense, making several fine tackles. Whitmore scored his touchdowns on runs of 2 and 6 yards. On his 2 yard score, he fumbled the hand-off from quarterback, but fell on the loose ball in the end zone.

Wally Adams and Izzy Pastushak scored the 2 remaining TDs on jaunts of twenty-three and eleven yards respectively. Pastushak's came on the last play of the game.

Meds scored their lone major in the 4th frame on a forty-five yard pass and run play from John Fowler to John Henderson. Henderson shook off a Skule tackler at the SPS thirty and ran the rest of the way for the score. Fowler's convert made the score 11-6 but Skule scored 2 more touches to make the final score read 23-6.

The Doctors' best offensive weapon was the Fowler to Henderson pass, successful 4 times. Until he was injured Paul Druckman ran well for the losers.

Harriers Seek To Regain Title

Short hours before the Varsity Blues take to the field to defend the Yates Cup, another Blue team hopes to have regained an Intercollegiate championship for Toronto.

The senior harrier team, third in last year's final, presents a completely revamped line-up from last year's squad. The five runners, four from UC and one from PHE comprise one of the

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

"O East is east and West is west,
And never the twain shall meet,
Til earth and sky stand presently
At God's great judgment seat.
But there is neither east nor west
Border nor breed nor birth,
When two strong men stand face to face
Though they come from the ends of the earth."

Now Bob has gone out with thirty men
To raise the countryside . . .

Kinging was just about fifty years too soon with his little verse. He might have saved it for tomorrow's classic football struggle in old Kingston when the Varsity Blues and the Queen's Golden Gaels get together over the gridiron to contest possession of the Yates Cup for the forty-eighth time.

The big silver mug's history goes back a long way, as far as 1898, making the Yates one of the oldest football trophies in Canada, even older than Earl Grey's historic cup. In that year the Canadian Intercollegiate Rugby Football Union was formed, with Toronto, Queen's and McGill beginning as the original three members. That same fall Dr. Henry Brydges Yates, a graduate of McGill University in 1897, and a former football captain for the Redmen, donated a trophy to the three Universities for annual competition. The Cup is still in the trust of the original three members and barring some unforeseen calamity it will remain in the particular trust of the University of Toronto for at least another year after this weekend's festivities are all over.

Dr. Yates' trophy has been in constant use every year since 1900, with the exception of the war years of 1915-18 and 1940-45. In the forty-eight years of gridiron rivalry five other teams have joined Varsity, Queen's and McGill to form a four-team league. The University of Western Ontario, which joined the fray in 1929, has had the most success of all these challengers, such as to win the title that until this year almost all people would have believed to be the time when the Mustangs were not a lateral part of the league.

Ottawa College was the only fourth team other than Western to win the title. Just after they had entered Yates Cup competition, they walked off with the championship in 1907. Royal Military College of Kingston, and Ossego Hall have both seen seasons of contest with the original three, while McMaster University was admitted to the league in the fall of 1953 but departed after a winless season.

The University of Toronto has won the Yates the most times, nineteen in all. The Gaels record is next best with the big 16, making the trip to Kingston, twelve times, the last occasion being the fall of 1947. Western have copied the trophy eight times since in 1931 and again in 1939 and then, as time drew on, the years since the second world war when the Blues and the Mustangs dominated the college scene. McGill's record is worst, with the championship going to the Redmen only seven times, their last title year being 1929.

Not once has the Cup been shared by more than one University, although there was talk of two league games. The possibility is not, of course, altogether unthinkable and is covered in the CIAU rules. If the two clubs are tied after regulation time, there is provision for a single period of overtime, lasting fifteen minutes, after which time the title is shared if the teams are still tied.

There can be no doubt especially after witnessing the strength two weeks ago that tomorrow's clash will go down in Intercollegiate history. It is already noted that the Gaels have some of those chips stacked on their side but there are a few Blues over here and we're calling it the only way it can go. Word has it that One-Eyed Benny is on the right track, but he sees a poor weekend financially. Can't get anybody to bet on the Gaels. Things are looking pretty blue for the sleepy town of Kingston.

Blue Notes . . . Buses for Guelph carrying the soccer teams will depart at 10:00. This is the final game for the other football clubs and a victory means the western Intercollegiate title. Luck men . . . Rugby Blues have another weekend double-sunder against Sarcents Seconds tomorrow and Barbarians Seconds Sunday. The Baby Blue ice crew open the season in the THL Major Series a week tomorrow. Students will be admitted for twenty-five cents and an ATL card . . . Queen's Journalist Jim O'Grady says Gus Braccia's car has Pennsylvania license plates and he had it before he came to the Gael stronghold. Braccia also says he isn't going back to Temple . . . best balanced teams Toronto has had in many years. The surprising aspect of the team is the limited cross-county experience of its members, four of whom participated this fall for the first time. Lack of experience however, has not stopped the team from turning in good exhibition results. The team's top man, Bill Varey, one of the brightest track prospects in the area, has already won the Intercollegiate three-mile run, and also copped first place against Wayne University, two weeks ago.

Freshmen Ron Toop, and Mike Berger have turned in several fine exhibition races this fall including the University championship race. Sophomore Bruce Hughes and veteran track man Tom Stroud have also turned in some fine efforts, Stroud being Toronto's top man against Buffalo State on Wednesday.

Remembrance Day story (Page One)

We say that today we should remember. And today some of us may be present at a ceremony of remembrance and some of us may take two minutes out to remember.

But why should we consciously remember? Why should we have a day to remember something? The implication is, of course, that the rest of the time we forget about it, that it is something that we do not remember naturally, something we can forget. The value of such a day of remembrance is nothing if we go mechanically to a service and during two minutes dredge up such thoughts in our minds as "Many men died," "They died and I am alive," "I'm sorry that they died," "They were indeed brave." This kind of thought attempts to do honour to the men whose names are inscribed and to those who did not even leave this behind, but it does not fulfill the responsibility that we have received from their death. We must remember in order that their sacrifice shall not have been profitless. And we must remember and consider what they were, and why they are not.

But how can we remember, we who were having difficulty finding the way to public school and who were learning how to print when others were learning how to die. It is not real to us. The sounds, sights and smells of war do not sicken us and linger with the force of physical imprint. It is history in books that can be read with the minimum discomfort between a football game and a Blue and White dance. Yet we must try to remember what we have never known. It is our responsibility to enter into their experience with our minds and imaginations in order that their experience shall not have been profitless. We must bridge the gap of human experience lest we repeat unnecessarily the unhappy and unprofitable.

But what should we remember? Should we remember only certain men who have died? Shall we remember only that certain nations are incorrigible war-mongers? Shall we warm their cold cause in our hearts? This cannot be so. They did not die that we could retain the same causes and the same ideas, to fight over the same grievances. Perhaps if we can remember the pain, the unhappiness, the futility, perhaps if we can apply the general lesson to the particular case, now, ten years after the second world war, we will be fulfilling our responsibility to a sacrifice for us.

Perhaps then we will not be remembering hollowly.

POEMS

From Housman

Here dead lie we because we did not choose
To live and shame the land from which we sprung.
Life, to be sure, is nothing much to lose;
But young men think it is, and we were young.

Oh stay with company and mirth
And daylight and the air;
Too full already is the grave
Of fellows that were good and brave
And died because they were..

Wake not for the world-heard thunder
Nor the chime that earthquakes toll.
Star may plot in heaven with planet,
Lightning rive the rock of granite,
Tempest tread the oakwood under:
Fear not you for flesh nor soul
Marching, fighting, victory past,
Stretch your limbs in peace at last.

Stir not for the soldiers drilling
Nor the fever nothing cures:
Throb of drum and timbal's rattle
Call but man alive to battle,
And the fife with death-notes filling Screams for blood but not for yours.
Times enough you bled your best:
Sleep on now, and take your rest.

Armistice Day In The Varsity — For 27 Years

The following are reprints from past Varsity issues, indicating the tenor of feeling among Toronto students at the time of the two World Wars.

The Varsity, November 13, 1918 — The day, has finally come — the day for which the world has long been looking — the day when the fighting would cease. For years before 1914, Germany toasted this day and since 1914 she boasted of it as the time when she would be able to assert her sway over the world . . .

And so the fighting is over. Thanks today are given even by those for whom the today means sorrow rather than rejoicing — and may the day of final peace soon come . . . Are we going to be forgiven for non-attendance at lectures on Monday? Victory doesn't come so often that we can afford to lose such a fine opportunity to celebrate

The Varsity, November 11, 1919 — The Great War is only one year behind us. Its given lessons have not all been learnt. The problems which follow in the wake of a world struggle are still to be solved and the undercurrent of social unrest has gained a force which cannot be resisted. The crisis in the struggle for democracy has been passed, but eternal vigilance is necessary to the re-establishment of normal conditions.

The Varsity, 1939, Thursday, September 28 — From President Cedy's Speech. Last year we began the year's work under the shadow of a threatening war. For the time the cloud was lifted, a respite was given. Today the storm has broken upon us and we are, by the declaration from our parliament, at war with Germany Side by side with the Motherland and other members of the British Commonwealth of nations in this solemn hour we are reinforced by the conviction that every effort was made to maintain peace. These efforts failed, but they were faithful and sincere. Now we must bend every endeavour to the task that lies before us and face an ordeal whose severity we scarcely yet realize.

The Varsity, November 11, 1939 — Tomorrow is Remembrance Day. Tomorrow one thousand seven hundred male undergraduates of the University of Toronto will parade in their respective units of the Canadian Officer Training Corps to position in front of the Soldiers' Memorial Tower of Hart House.

We, who are students, will pause to pay our respects; too. It is fitting that we should. Because it is to us that the nation and the Empire may apply its respects at some future remembrance day. This is no remote possibility. We realize it only too well. We may be the dead heroes of the future.

So we will remember all this tomorrow when we pay our highest respects to our honoured dead. We will remember that they strove for a goal which is now ours. We will remember their exalted position and hold fast to that remembrance as an added incentive to the successful finale of the war.

The Varsity, November 11, 1941 — This year there is a tremendous overwhelming change. The honour roll is no longer a list of unknown names. The dead are our own contemporaries; they are sometimes our acquaintances and sometimes even our intimate friends . . .

There seems to be nothing left. Nothing that we can do, or that is worthy the attempt, yet we cannot feel that it is true that persons whom we know are dying without a reason or a purpose. . . .

Finally we must turn all our efforts towards the goal we have chosen. We must win the war and then see that victory leads to a genuine reconstruction on the principles for which we have been fighting.

The Varsity, November 11, 1942 — Today we reproduce with the deepest respect the list of 87 University of Toronto men, who have given up their lives in the present war. . . .

We remember them easily now — they were our friends, our classmates, our day-to-day companions.

That memory must be kept fresh in the days which will follow the next armistice. . . . It is an encouraging thought today as we stand in silence to pay tribute to the men who have gone before that the second world war is going in favour of the United Nations on every major front on the globe. . . .

And the people who have called for the opening of the new front — the Russian gorilla-fighters and the Red Army — are holding firm along the battle-lines which extend from the Arctic to the Black Sea.

The Varsity, November 11, 1943 — The dead of the First Great War have seemed at times to have died in vain. It is our duty now, that duty of all who fight and think on our side, but especially the duty of the privileged and somewhat sheltered group now in the University to make sure that the fight which soon will be twice won will never have to be fought again.

The Varsity, November 11, 1944 — The spirit of '18 with the utterance of its pious sentiments, and plans for permanent peace will almost be impossible to recapture. Slightly more than twenty years have shown us that the war to end wars did not fulfill its proclamations.

The issue for which we are fighting and for which generations before us have fought is relatively simple. We are checking a power before it dominates the world and destroys our economic, political and social liberties. Whatever may be the faults of the set-up of Britain and her allies, they are still, nevertheless, the bulwarks of freedom. . . .

The men whom we honour tomorrow represent a belief in a solid ideal. The peace which we will commemorate symbolises an attempt towards the achievement of these two ideals. "Nothing is here for nothing to wail or knock the breast, no weakness, no contempt, dispraise or blame; nothing but well and fair and what may quiet us in a death so noble."

Huxley, the Genius and the Goddess

BY MURRAY MORTON

"THE GENIUS AND THE GODDESS"; Aldous Huxley, Chatto and Windus; 1953. pp. 128. $1.50.

Aldous Huxley's most recent novelette finds the author once more concerned with the philosophical mysticism in which he has become so interested. But unlike his "Ape and Essence" which has a similar slant, "The Genius and the Goddess" is not written with a view to giving the reader a shock-treatment. A scientist, John Rivers, relates an episode of his early life during which he experienced for the first time a delight in life and a belief in its intrinsic goodness. With the passage of time this feeling has become less frequent and so it does not furnish the criterion with which he examines the psychologically shaking events that he describes. Rather it is with a stoical outlook that he views the John Rivers of twenty-eight, whom he considers a different person from his sixty-year-old self.

This effect is strengthened by the interruption of the narrative by conversation between Rivers and his archaeologist host and by intrusions by Rivers' family of the present. Thus the comments on the significance of the events, although superficially cynical at times, are in reality those of a dispassionate observer who is concerned not with the characters but with the pattern they make and the forces that produced the pattern.

In brief, the plot is the story of Rivers as a young scientist who has just escaped for the first time from a sheltered life under the guidance of a puritanical mother. He becomes a research assistant to physicist Henry Maartens — the genius. The genius insists that Rivers make his home with Maartens' own family. Here Rivers meets the goddess — Maartens' wife Katy, the most beautiful woman Rivers has even seen and with whom he falls in love. But with his strict upbringing Rivers thinks of his love for her as comparable to the ideal love Dante held for Beatrice. And so for a year he worshipped his goddess platonically and exulted in the first sense of well-being he had ever known. A wellbeing that was not mere happiness but what he termed "newness of spirit," and which inspired a "religious" feeling that was in direct contrast to the "chronic sense of guilt" in which he had previously lived.

But finally the idyll ends. Rivers and Katy, at the climax of a crisis in the family life, become lovers and Rivers' vision of idealistic adoration dissolves to be replaced by the anguish of a sense of guilt. The story is concluded quickly and ends with a comment from Rivers that has no bearing on it except perhaps to indicate that he considers the events as merely a rather interesting episode between interludes.

Since the story is narrated there is no formal literary language. Description is simple and sketchy. It is dependent upon the scientific mind of Rivers which often produces a phrase, which though not traditionally aesthetic, nevertheless proves very forceful; such as the description of the sky as "a hundred and eighty degrees of brute inexplicable mystery." Perhaps this is indicative of a literature of the future which will see commonplace technological terms applied to descriptions of the ultimates. The plot affords Huxley an opportunity to suggest a multitude of thoughts about these ultimates.

Huxley does not merely use the story as an excuse to utter his usual witty comments. As the narrative moves to its culmination the main theme emerges with compelling force. Huxley applies to the meeting of characters with events what he says are the principal determinants of life — Predestination and Grace. By Grace he means the goodness of life — the fortuitous gifts with which Predestination presents us — a sense of well-being. Predestination he divides into two types — that of temperament, and that of events. To illustrate the former, Rivers has recourse to his family in the present (thus relating even the incidental conversation to the themes). His daughter Molly, according to the laws of psychology ought to have been emotionally the same as her sisters, but was totally different. The latter form of it shows itself when it presents Rivers with a wife — "a saving Grace." To express the theme of the book in a phrase one might say it is the mystery of cosmic irrelevance, which is expressed on the first page by the comment, "The criterion of reality is in its intrinsic irrelevance."

In one of the epigrams in the book, Katy states that H. G. Wells reminds her of shining California rice-paddies which stretched for miles but which were "never more than two inches deep." The Genius and the Goddess reminds me of glistening perforated sheet metal through which one may peer at paradoxes and mysteries through openings which are not so much deep as bottomless. Huxley has pierced the walls enclosing existence and at many significant points the reader may plunge his thumb line to whatever depth he is minded. This is a work both to entertain and to stir the mind. A book to be read and to be re-read, it is a delight to the enquiring mind that is interested in the cosmic.

ROBOTS PROBLEM-POSERS

Karel Capek's R.U.R. presents a powerful problem both to the actors and to the audience. The actors are required to project themselves into a possible future and to make that future credible; the Hart House audience is required to feel the irony of a situation in which man has created living beings but, as a result, he himself faces extinction. I am afraid that neither actors nor audience met the playwrights' requirements.

The trouble is that, like the staff of the plant manufacturing Rossum's Universal Robots, I am not quite sure who is to blame. The plant managers find it difficult to pin responsibility for the robots' revolt on any one person. Perhaps they should blame old Rossum, who discovered how man could create life. Perhaps they should blame the shareholders, who wanted profits. Perhaps they should blame Dr. Gall who experimented with the original formula and thus made the robots more human — and more diabolical. Perhaps they should blame Helen Glory, daughter of the President, who persuaded Dr. Gall to make them more human because she pitied their inhuman efficiency and lack of human feeling. Perhaps they should blame Harry Domin, the plant manager, for dreaming that man could live without toil. Perhaps...

Who can I blame? First, perhaps I should blame Capek for having such a long explanation of the situation in the first act. Perhaps I should blame Leon Major, the director, for making the play static. Perhaps I should blame Patricia Masse as Helen Glory. How five lonely men surrounded by robots could be attracted to her as soon as she arrives is quite beyond the belief of this reviewer. It was very creditable in a BBC production of the play that I once heard. So I cannot blame Capek for that. It is difficult to blame the audience for being silent in the humorous passages and jocular in the serious ones.

Capek wrote a play to make one's flesh creep, a play which, although written in the thirties, is still very much up-to-date. In the thirties the robots (a word we owe to Capek by the way) could be interpreted as Nazis. In the fifties the parallel is even more striking. Automation is on many people's lips, and it comes from the same root as automatism.

Having tried to pin the blame, let me now go on to mix blame with some praise. Marvin Catzman, as Mr. Alquist, a builder and the only human being in the play who works with his hands, was eminently convincing as the only human being whose life is spared by the robots. Les Lawrence, as Harry Domin, moved brashly and well but failed to convince me when he realized the possibility of human extinction. Nana (Tudi Wiggins), like Alquist a believer in God, was beautifully portrayed. A minor part, but an important one.

What completely saves the present performance of this play is the epilogue. Capek wrote some beautiful lines here and fortunately they have not been ruined by the general inaudibility of the rest of the cast.

Primus and Helena, played by Barry Lipson and Jeniva Berger, are profoundly moving as the new kind of robot who can experience the feelings of human beings. Capek recreates Adam and Eve, and Barry Lipson and Jeniva Berger convey the gradual self-education of their feelings for one another in a completely admirable way.

Wif Pegg's sets were a good try, but a play set in the future doesn't have to look like the nineteen-twenties idea of "futuristic" architecture.

The red-to-blue symbolic lighting was an excellent idea, but unfortunately its excellence was somewhat impaired by the fastest sunrise I have ever seen.

This rarely-performed play was well worth seeing, if only for the sake of the play. I hope the amazing inattention to detail shown in this production will be ironed out in the next two nights.

canadian graphic art at hart house show

Canadian Art Audiences seem to scorn drawings and lithographs, they prefer oils—the "real thing." The exhibition of the Canadian Society of Graphic Arts in the Hart House gallery, however, offers such a great variety of line that the sketches and lithographs, though seldom using full colour or much tonal values, are most satisfying as a group.

Carl Schaefer's quiet lines forming varied textures; William Lyttle's whimsical lines suitable to his very, very Parisian sketches; Harold Town's abrupt scratchy lines; Harley Parker's ultra-linear and vigorous brushwork; John Hall's and Kazuo Nakamura's stark oriental line; and the pure line of Harold Ross's portraits — these form quite a variety. Though individual picture may be uninteresting, and though the few scattered works by each artist give little insight into the artist's individual style or purpose, the exhibition as a whole is excellent.

Where colour or form are extensively used in a picture the effect is arresting by contrast with the strictly linear drawings. Bayevsky's pictures of Paul Bunyan use dark massed tones which suggest the strength of the hero but produce a dull overall effect. The Harvest Moon by Rody Kenny Courtice uses flat forms of striking colour though the forms themselves are uninteresting. Eris Frefeld suggests the third dimension in "George I" through pastel colours rather than variations of one tone.

Most interesting of all are Frederick Hagen's colour lithographs. Both Parade and Stalemate in the exhibition suggest the sinister through gaiety and bright colours. This is an old trick and typical of Hollywood, but is still effective.

In the Print Room are a group of brilliantly coloured lithographs by Mr. Hage, called "Ladder Prints." They form a series with the ladder symbolic of a difficult upward climb and present in each composition. Though the series represents the History of Christianity, the same carnival-stage effect is used—by the very contrast with the subject matter heightening the cruelty, despair, dark hope, of the prints, and suggesting superficiality and absurdity. Along with a wretched St. Peter, a brooding nun and a crucified Christ, are jesters, ferris wheels and a circus poster declaring "Coming Soon—All Star Cast!"

The ladders themselves present an opportunity for Mr. Hagen to use emphatic horizontal, vertical or diagonal lines which form the basis of strong compositions. In this series of twelve pictures, we can better understand and enjoy one artist's work than in the exhibition proper with its fifteen contributors. Janet MacDonald

SUSAN SOLVES ALL

Way Out For Weary

By W. R. CHADWICK

There is a growing conviction amongst a large number of the undergraduates of this University that they are becoming the victims of an extremely insidious form of forced athleticism. These unfortunate are those who have consecutive lectures so far apart, that for the normal student, a fast perspiration-inducing walk is necessary for punctuality, while some of the keener ones have been known to actually run.

Perhaps the worst affected are those who, when they started at University, allowed their choice of subjects to be dictated by something called a future career, instead of realizing the importance of having all lectures within fifty yards of some central coffee shop.

Because of this shortsightedness, these students may have to make safaris such as, from the Museum to the Conservatory, from the Household Science building to the Biology building, or perhaps worst of all, from the Physics building to the Economics building and then back down to the Wallberg Memorial. (Just the other day, a P&OT girl was heard complaining about part of her course being at Malton. That's going to be a really tough one to make).

As can be seen, these forced marches are enough to produce very serious physical and mental strain on those involved — indeed, it is surprising that there are so few gibbering idiots on the campus. But apart from this, walking as a means of transportation is becoming passe in this mechanized age, a fact that the governing body should recognize. Thus, a society has been formed to combat the walking of these excessive distances, and eventually it is hoped to do away with this form of exercise altogether. Already many suggestions have been put forward.

The best and most exciting suggestion is that a super-de-luxe chromium-plated Lazy Susan be suspended above the campus by war surplus barrage balloons. Its method of operation would, presumably, be something along these lines. The student would step out of, say, the Economics building into a tubular chute which would either blow or suck him up onto the revolving platform of the Lazy Susan. From here he would be whisked round, two hundred feet above the campus, to Collage Street where he would parachute down to his lecture. What could be simpler? Both the Engineering Society and Emet have drawn up possible designs for this construction.

Other suggestions that have been received are for a cable car from the K.C.R. to the Wallberg Memorial Building, for a special University subway, and for a miniature railway. There is also one other alternative to which the powers that be should give very serious attention, and this is, that wherever possible, the class or year should remain in one room the whole time, and the lecturers and professors should do the travelling around.

Shell Money Plan To Include 8 Universities

The Shell Oil Company of Canada have added an eighth University, New Brunswick, to their research fellowship program. They have also allotted to each participating University a $500 grant-in-aid to assist carrying the administrative load connected with the Fellowships.

Shell awards $1,800 fellowships for post-graduate work in Chemistry, Physics and Geology.

Winners for 1955-56 are: Robert N. Farvolen, Geology, University of Alberta; Roy A. Nodwell, Physics, University of British Columbia; C. F. Eve, Physics, McMaster University; I. G. Main, Physics, Queen's University; F. D. M. Horscroft, Geology, McGill University; P. Brassard, O.C. Chemistry, Laval University, an unnamed University of Toronto candidate.

UC Men Take Four Hours To Get Engineer's Sign

The irretrievable Skule Nite sign is down!

The fourteen-by-seven foot sign, which was fastened with heavy wire to the top of the University College tower, one hundred and sixty feet high, was taken down yesterday morning.

"I was quite a job," said Mr. D. Scollick, caretaker of University College.

The sign was put up by five men in the wee small hours of Wednesday morning. They hid in a small room in the tower for five hours before the coast was clear for the deed. It took them three hours more to accomplish it.

"I couldn't take it down with one of my men," said Mr. Scollick. "It was too heavy to carry. I had to call in the tinsmith."

It took four men from the tinsmith's shop from 8:00 A.M. to 12:00 noon to remove the sign "that nobody could get down."

Superintendent Russell, from whose office the removal order was issued, said: "It was probably more trouble putting it up than taking it down."

When asked the reason for the removal order, he replied: "It is not common practice to stick signs all over university buildings. It doesn't add to the appearance of the buildings at all."

The blue and white sign no longer adorns the highest part of University College.

Interfaculty Summary

UC Firsts laced St. Mike's A's 17-6 in yesterday's lacrosse action. Bob Allan led the Red with ten goals, while Stan Labanowich added four and Tom Riley three. Terry and Kevin Wheeler scored two each for the Mikemen while Kurt Russell and Ron Tighe added singles. Meds V shut out SPS IV 2-0 in an earlier game with Yates and Gare scoring for the Doctors.

UC Seconds edged Trinity B's 2-1 in soccer action but missed the playoffs. Stacy gave Forestry a 1-0 victory over Architecture.

Two games in intramural league volleyball competition saw St. Mike's D's defeat Pre-Meds IB 15-4, 15-7, while Pre-Meds A's whipped Trinity A's 15-6, 15-3.

Remembrance Service

Printed here is the program for today's Remembrance Service.

Snyder's Tower, University of Toronto, 10:45 a.m.

Hymn

Two lines will be played by the band, after which the congregation will sing.

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

Beneath the shadow of thy throne
Thy saints have dwelt secure;
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defence is sure.

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting thou art God,
To endless years the same.

Opening sentences.

The Lord's Prayer,
Prayers of Remembrance and Consecration.

The Last Post.

Two Minutes' Silence,
Reveille.

Placing of the wreaths.

God Save The Queen.

Benediction.

A Carillon Recital will be given by J. Leland Richardson, before and after the service, beginning at 10:10 a.m.

GIRLS, Are You Broke?

Aren't we all! A new dress for 'Christmas would be nice... especially if it can be paid for after New Years'. Drop in anytime between lectures.

GRADUATING IN '56...

Our representatives will visit the University
November 14, 15, 16 and 17

During this four-day period they will interview Chemical, Mechanical, Geological, Electrical and Metallurgical Engineers and Commerce and Arts graduates.

If you are graduating in 1956 in Engineering and look to a future in petroleum refining or sales; or graduating in Arts or Commerce and are interested in treasury or sales, it can be to your advantage to request a special interview.

Here's what to do: 1. Fill out the appointment form available now in the Placement Office, 5 Wilcocks Street.

2. If you are graduating in Engineering, interviews will be conducted November 14, 15, 16 and 17th in the Museum of the Mechanical Building.

3. If you are graduating in Arts or Commerce, interviews will be conducted November 16 and 17 in the Placement Office, 5 Wilcocks Street.

Queen's Quests For Student Booze

All Seats At Queen's Gone Game Will Be Broadcasted 1500 Standing Room Only

Students unable to get to the game on Saturday will still be able to keep in touch with developments at Kingston. A play by play broadcast of the game will begin at 2:00 o'clock over CJBC.

Tickets to the inter-collegiate play-off are as hard to find as Grey Cup tickets. The Toronto allotment has long since been gobbled up. At Queen's, 1600 students picked up 2200 tickets in eight hours, and the remaining ones had been sold by last Saturday.

However, there is still a ghost of a chance for a few fans to see the game. Between 1000 and 1500 standing room tickets will go on sale at the stadium starting at 1:45 P.M.

The Queen's Athletic Board of Control has been under pressure to obtain more bleachers to accommodate the over-flow crowds. Additional bleachers, holding 180 people could be obtained from the RCAF base in Trenton. The idea seems to have been rejected by the Board on the grounds that it would exclude about 600 people who could crowd into the space.

As it is, Richardson Stadium will probably be more crowded than at any other time in its history. Officials estimate that more than 13,000 people will squeeze themselves into a stadium which normally seats just over 9,000.

With a hundred percent capacity crowd guaranteed, the Queen's Alma Mater Society is turning its attention to the perennial problem of student rowdiness.

Varsity students will be subject to a search by city police and AMS constables at the gates. Anyone found carrying liquor or even soft drink will be asked to leave the bottles behind or leave the stadium.

Twenty-five student constables will patrol aisles during the game. Students found drinking during the game will be made to leave and will face a fine in the AMS court of between $30 to $200. Those found by city police may be open to prosecution for drinking in a public place.

Hosing The Blues

Thievery Hits Columbia U.

New York, N.Y. (Exchange): A crime wave on the campus of Columbia University has brought New York police and private detectives to the scene. Sneak thievery has been going on at Columbia since the summer and has increased each month.

The thieves have been concentrating on office equipment. "Thousands of dollars worth of electric typewriters, dictating machines, tape recorders, and calculators have been taken," the Columbia Spectator reports.

The culprits evidently have access to office keys, as none of the offices has forcefully been broken into, and some of the robberies have occurred in very short periods of time.

Students Remember Thousand Who Died

The University of Toronto remembers its gallant "one thousand" today who died in two World Wars.

Classes have been cancelled between 10 a.m. and noon today so that students can attend Remembrance Day ceremonies at Soldiers' Tower, Hart House. A 100-man honour guard composed of Royal Canadian Navy, Army and Air Force university cadets will march past prior to the traditional two-minutes' silence at 11 a.m.

Faculty members of the University, dressed in academic gowns will also walk in procession to the tower.

In World War II alone, 21-million men were slaughtered on mud-cut battlefields, on the treacherous sea and in the air. More than 29 million were wounded.

The University of Toronto death toll in the two wars — both faculty-members and students — was nearly 1,000, official figures showed.

According to figures issued by the United States' bureau of Statistics, the billions spent to fight the Second World War might have provided every family in Canada, United States, Australia,

Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium and the Soviet Union with:

- 1. a $48,000 home
- 2. $16,000-worth of furniture
- 3. $80,000 cash.

Additionally, every city in the U.S. with a population of 200,000 or more, might have received $300-millions for its coffers.

For the first time in its history, the Meds Athletic Association found itself with cheer-leaders.

One redhead and three brunettes from first pre-meds found the doctors on the short end of a score that ran up to 23-6 before the final whistle went. Jean

A few hecklers commented on the long skirts worn by the girls. They promise short ones for the next game.

Chaplain Of HH Medsmen; POT Discuss Suicide

Suicide... is it justifiable?

Medsmen and P&OT students will exchange views on this controversial subject next Tuesday, at what will be the first in a series of informal discussions sponsored by both the Meds and P&OT Debating Societies. Guest speaker and chairman of the meeting will be Chaplain of Hart House, Rev. James Cunningham.

This combined discussion is the result of the mutual desire to increase activities. On the agenda for future meetings are inter-faculty debates, informal discussions and talks by guest speakers. Meeting is at 7:30 p.m. in the P&OT huts.

One-Eyed Benny Puts The Fix, Calls Varsity

As it happens that this weekend I am arriving at the ends to my tether, my heart is breaking, and, as it is a very largeish type of valentine, my ticker makes a bluish type of noise as it goes, which is very distracting to the campus bulls who think it is somebody tearing down the goalposts and come running with their billies at the ready. Old Benny is being very fortunate indeed, as I see them first and am able to duck out before they put the grabs on me, but the strain of this sudden effort finishes the laceration of my pumper which leaves me somewhat broken up. I am being very worried about this as I realize that if it happens that I die, then there is no one left to carry on the spreading of good and happiness about the campus, and to call the inevitable results for this Saturday's game which is what I do ever since I come.

The quacker to which I take my ills, please me muchly as he is informing that my malady is not fatal, being as it is only mildly incurable, I slip him a "benny" which is a triple-size "mickie" and leave him gurgling happily while I shuffle off to my dedicated toil, which is being the arranging of Fate so that my own bruising Blusers win another Yates Cup for my personal trophy case in Whitney Hall.

Operating my new calculating machine turns out to be a very ticklish business, but, after much striving I am getting good results and I hereby am informing you of my tidings.

Many persons take the wrong meaning from the fact that Gus Braccia buys a new car this week, and they take this to mean he prepares to head home after the Football season finishes. I am checking with my hirelings in Kingston who ferret out the real story which everybody tries to cover up, and I give my faithful fishes an exclusive which I would not want them to repeat as I tell it in confidence. Gussie buys a heap, yes, but he does not do so because he wishes to run away, but so that he can stay and play this last match which frightens all the little boys at Queenie U so that they even forget to pick-up their scholarships allowances last week. Gustave, it seems, is felling a little bit terrified about the hardcharging line which my Blues throw at him and fears that maybe he does not get enough time to pass, so, for protection, he purchases an armoured car which he hopes will keep him safe, but alas, I see that it does not help and in the long run, and the Queenie types do much of this, mostly to their dressng room, the Blues ignore gorgeous Gussie and his tin can, while they can the Gaels completely and defeat the nefarious forces of "amateur" football.

The final score is 17-6. The winners—you can choose. But since I've put the fix—Benny'll bet the Blues.

Gaels Had Perfection Varsity Trampled 18-0 Braccia Plays Key Role

Varsity's Jack Rogers (81) eludes Queen's tacklers for a small gain in Saturday's intercollegiate final at Kingston. Blue halfback Phil Muntz (91) comes up from behind while Gael tackle Jim Hughes (70) prepares for a shot at Rogers. Muntz and Rogers were both standouts offensively for the Blues in a losing cause.

—VSP by Stan Klosevych

Queen's halfback Al Kocman runs into trouble in the second quarter with Blue tacklers John Wismer (21), Fred Smale (52), Wingback Bill McIntyre (70) readies for a backward try at Kocman. The fiery Gael was a terror for Blue linemen throughout the contest barging time and time again for big gains as Queen's rocked the Blues on their backs.

—VSP by Stan Klosevych

Kingston, Nov. 13 (Staff) — Queen's University's Golden Gaels scored a point for each year they've been without the Intercollegiate title and completely overwhelmed the Varsity Blues 18-0 here Saturday afternoon. Playing before a record crowd of 12,500 wildly cheering fans who were jammed into every available inch of space in George Richardson Memorial Stadium for the classic final, import quarterback Gus Braccia made the victory a personal one by scoring a third-quarter touchdown and directing the Tricolor machine with an almost flawless performance. Braccia's great game was an answer to all that has been thought and said concerning his eligibility in senior football, while his clever signal-calling brought the Yates Cup to Kingston for the first time since the fall of 1937.

"They were up for it," mused Varsity Coach Bob Masterson after the game, "we just weren't good enough." Actually, the Blues were good enough, barring a few disastrous mistakes in the third quarter, but the Gaels were perfection itself.

Rolling up a fantastic 333 yards on the ground with 23 first downs Queen's could do nothing wrong. "We expected a passing game and didn't get it," explained one Blue player after the initial shock of defeat had worn off. Braccia only passed when he had to, and the tight Blue defence sreed his average to 103 yards gained in the air from seven completions out of 16 attempts.

While the Blue backs played deep to tie up Ron Stewart and Gary Schreiner, Braccia sent Al Kocman and Phil Surplis crashing into the Blue line for big gains. With sometimes unbelievable deception the ex-Temple star continually tied up the Varsity defence and left big holes for the Gael runners.

Best example was Surplis' 77-yard touchdown gallop in the third quarter. Braccia faked to Stewart through the right side of the line then handed off to Surplis while apparently bootlegging deep into the backfield for a pass. Lou Bruce had taken out the Blue defensive end and Russ Radchuk got the tackle. The Varsity defensive halves were deep for the expected pass and Surplis was through to the tertiary before anyone knew what had happened, outdistancing the would-be Blue tacklers for the major. Dave Cresswell made a desperate leap at the Varsity eight but Surplis had too much speed.

The Gaels took an early lead in the first quarter after a devastating ground offense had moved them to the Varsity seven. Schreiner fumbled and recovered at the Blue 26 and then Jock Thompson booted the first of two field goals with the same ease that had given the Gaels victory just two weeks before.

Only one other significant thrust occurred in the first half and that was when Phil Muntz put the Blues' in scoring position after a fifteen-yard run into Queen's territory. Wally Bulchak barged to the 29 on the next play but Harry Wilson's 30-yard strike intended for Fred Smale in the end zone was snatched from the air by Stewart to stifle the Varsity threat.

The Gaels came out strongly in the third frame after Jim Cruikshank intercepted Wilson's pass at the Varsity 53. A roughing penalty gave the Gaels a first down at the Blue 38 and in five plays Braccia plunged off right tackle two yards to score standing up. The convert attempt was blocked.

Another Blue counter-offensive fizzled at the Queen's 33 and the Gaels had no sooner taken over than Surplis crashed off left tackle to go 77 yards for the second Queen's

RES NATURAE

Ticking Radiation

By FRED KAHAN

"We hold this truth to be self evident, that all men may be cremated equal. Peace in the world, or the world in pieces."
Sir Lancelot (of Trinidad).

What makes a Geiger counter tick? Atomic radiation. The concern that whatever makes the Geiger counter tick may indeed stop our own visceral ticking probably led to the Geneva Conference on "Atoms for Peace", held last summer. Atomic radiation from contaminated dust and water particles falling out all over the world has been produced by atomic tests and may be created by future industries.

Opinions about the consequences of this pollution have ranged from glib denials of any bad aftereffects (by Chairman of Atomic Energy Commissions) to gloomy prophecies from science fiction writers, the occasional evangelist and some geneticists, of a gradual tortured end to our race.

Let us first take a look at the nature of atomic radiation. The dangerous "gamma" rays are of the family of energy forms which includes radio waves at one end of the spectrum and cosmic rays at the other, (with heat, light and X-rays intermediate.)

The energetic atomic rays jostle molecules they meet, knocking off electric charges and producing charged ions. These ions lead to the ticking of the Geiger counter as well as to any damage to organisms they might meet.

The vast energy produced by atomic processes exemplifies the relation between mass and energy determined by Einstein. When matter is completely converted the energy so derived is equal to the change in mass times the square of the speed of light, (186,000 miles per second).

Now, it may be demonstrated to Gargantuan coffee drinkers that one ounce of matter, completely disintegrated, would bring to a boil a fair sized lake of 1,000,000,000 gallons of ice-water. And these are the vast energies involved behind the mushroom cloud of the atomic explosion — would that it had been used to boil water and not blood.

We find atomic radiation wherever there is a spontaneous breakdown of elements into simpler elements. Atom bombs, radioactive piles and high energy X-rays are man made sources; yet more widespread, if less well known, are the natural radioactive elements, the unstable isotopes.

These isotopes include uranium and radium as well as the more common elements potassium, phosphorus and carbon, small quantities of which are contained in every one of us. Radioactive carbon, C14, is incorporated in minute amounts by all living organisms, and has been of great interest to the archeologist and the anthropologist in recent years in dating organic remains anywhere from 1000 to 30,000 years old.

Use is made of the rapid disintegration of this carbon (one

I'd Rather Stay In Bed

Do you have an inherent dislike for lectures? Do you consider lectures superfluous? Does your professor eat onions for breakfast? Perhaps you find it difficult to read your paper at nine o'clock. Or maybe you are just one tired kid. If any of these questions prompt you to answer "yes," then Pay Heed.

There are several ways to overcome this disconcerting complex towards lectures.

- 1) Go to your neighborhood druggist and purchase a small hypodermic syringe. Fill the instrument with water from the radiators in the Old Arts Building. Then inject the fluid into your bloodstream and go to your lecture. Within three minutes you will be dead or very much asleep. The point is, in both cases, you miss the agony of sitting through one hour of relative nonsense.
- 2) Enter the classroom several minutes earlier than usual. Consult with the other six or eight people in your row. In this way, you can arrange a colorful choral group . . . two people singing bass, two singing alto, etc. Then as the lecture progresses, you can all keep yourselves amused by singing the Marseillaise in throaty tones. If the professor objects let him sing the baritone lead.

3) This method has endless opportunities. Take a small bottle of paint and a brush into the classroom. When the lecture begins, lean over and carefully paint a large target on the back of the person who sits in front of you. Then take three steel-tipped darts and throw them at the target. The first one to hit the bull's-eye wins the game. Everyone will think this is great fun and the lecture will be over in no time.

4) If none of these foregoing methods are successful, try this.

Send out formal invitations to everyone who sits in the back two rows. When lecture time arrives, you too will . . . this time equipped with four bottles of rum, some oranges, some lemons, and a spot of gingerale. Mix the ingredients carefully and pour cocktails for your guests. This is an extremely jolly pastime and even the professor can join in if he feels so inclined. Thish . . . ish . . . the most wonderfullest way to spend lectoors . . .

Varsity Harrier Squad Triumphs To Take Crown

One of Varsity's most successful harrier seasons came to a climax in Kingston Saturday when the senior harrier team triumphed over Western Ontario and Queen's to return the Senior Harrier crown to Toronto.

The Blue squad piloted by captain Bill Varey, ploughed their way over the mud-filled Queen's course to finish with a low aggregate of 17 points, followed by Western with 23, and Queen's with 38. The 5.14 mile course, at times resembling a quagmire, coated all contestants with a healthy layer of Kingston clay.

Varey led the Toronto crew to victory by copying first place finishing with a handy margin over Western's Don McIntosh and Queen's Sam Campbell, with a time of 29:39. Ron Troop and Tom Stroud finished in fourth and sixth places, each catching a Western man in the last stretch. Mike Berger finished strongly to place eighth, while Bruce Hughes finished twelfth.

With only Tom Stroud graduating next year, the Toronto squad has a good nucleus upon which to base future cross-country teams. Coach Fred Foot closed out the outdoor season with a double win, having already coached the trackmen to their Inter-Collegiate crown earlier.

Indoor track training will commence on Tuesday at 4:30 p.m. on the Hart House track. Until further notice, practices will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4:30. All interested athletes are urged to turn out.

CheckMate!

By Frank R. Anderson and George Berner

Unusual moves in the openings are the tournament player's surprise weapon to worry and confuse his opponent. Here we see Grandmaster Keres choose an unusual 4th move and the World Champion Mikail Botvinnik fail to react in the right way.

The loss of a pawn, combined with an inferior position, is inevitable for Black and the game comes to a quick decision.

FRENCH DEFENCE

White: P. Keres

Black: M. Botvinnik

U.S.S.R. Championship 1955

White	Black
1. PK4	PK3

2. PQ4	PQ4
3. NQ2	NQ3
4. PQE3

This is the new move. The usual continuation is 4. KNE3 NB3 5. PK5 NQ2 6. NN3.

4.	PK4
5. KPXP	QXP
6. KNE3	BKN5?

This move is based on a small miscalculation that has very serious consequences. The right sequence occurred in the game Averbak-Evejkin, Moscow 1944:

6. PXP	7. BB4	QKR4	8.
0-0 BK3!	9. BxB	PxB	10.
QN3	0-0-0	11. QxKfPch
KN1	12. PXP	EQ3	13. NN3

NB3 and although White has an extra pawn, Black's active pieces give sufficient compensation.

7. BB4	BxN
8. QN3!	NR4
9. QR4ch	QQ2
10. BxPch

A well known little trick that wins a pawn and the game for White.

10.	KQ1
11. QxQch	KxQ
12. NxB	PxP

Apart from the fact that White has a healthy extra pawn, his position is much better as he has the "two bishops," Black's King is displaced and his Queen's Knight is out of play.

13. NxP	PE4
14. NE3	KK2
15. BQ5	NKB3
16. BN5	PKR3
17. BxNch	KxB
18. 0-0-0	BQ3
19. PKN3	KRR1
20. NQ2	BB1
21. NK4ch	KB4

The black King fears nothing in this march into the center.

22. PE3	KRQ1
23. PKR4	NB3
24. PR5

Now White has the strong threat of 25. RR4 and 26. RB4ch landing Black's King into serious trouble.

25. KRK1	NK4

The World Champion is hoping to fish in troubled waters with 26. NxEP after 26. BxP. 26. NB2!

Threatening to win a piece with 27. PKB4.

26.	PKN4
27. PXP e.p.	Resigns

Black is helpless in view of the winning threat 28. PN7. A splendid performance by Paul Keres.

Baby Blues' Bullets Riddle Queen's Line

By HOWIE MANDELL

Four hot bullets named Reid, Comish, Joynt and Smart killed and buried the Queen's Comets on Friday afternoon as the University of Toronto Intermediates clinched a first place tie and hence a share of the Shaw Trophy emblematic of the Intercollegiate Intermediate Football Championship with a convincing 26-7 victory.

Tim Reid was sensational as he drove for long gains every time he touched the ball. On one occasion in the last quarter the speedy flash weaved his way for 35 yards through the entire Queen's team until he was finally stopped ten yards short of the goaline. Two plays later he ran around left end for his contribution to the Baby Blue score.

The Seconds pulled ahead to a 5-0 lead early in the first period when quarterback Larry Joynt smashed over centre on a quick opener for nine yards to the Comet 31. Reid scampered to the 21 where Joynt bootlegged the ball and weaved his way through the Queen's defenders to the end zone giving the Rinkies a lead which they never relinquished.

The Baby Blues struck again early in the second quarter when successive long runs by Bob Smart again brought the ball to the 12 yard stripe. Here John Tattle slammed off tackle through the weak Comet line to the four. Then Don Comish scored the first of his pair of majors when he pushed his way over the goal line.

Comish's second T.D. came a few minutes later and was set up by three good runs by Reid from the Queen's 45 to their six. Then Joynt, running to his left pitched out to Comish who kept on running behind some beautiful blocking into the end zone.

The Baby Blues were kept off the score sheet in the third quarter as the Queen line stiffened but they moved back to their scoring ways early in the last stanza. A pass interception by Bruchofsky paved the way for Tim Reid's well deserved touchdown and gave a faltering Toronto squad the confidence it needed to keep a threatening Queen's team off the score sheet for the rest of the game.

The Seconds rapped the game up a few plays later when Smart twisted his way through the Comet defenders for 32 yards to paydirt.

The Comets scored their lone major midway in the second period when Jim Shearn picked up a Baby Blue fumble on the Toronto 20. Queen's quarterback Ron Belfoi then threw a strike to end Jim Campbell who made a terrific catch on the goal line.

Notes . . . Queen's other two points came on quick kicks in the third quarter by fullback Barry Taylor . . . The Rinkies could convert only one score when Joynt passed to Ted Lansky for the extra point . . . Bobby Dunn left the game early in the second quarter when he pinched a nerve in his right leg.

Queen's Ron Stewart sets off on one of numerous a shot at Stewart while Dick Risk (51) comes up runs that broke Blues' back Saturday afternoon in from the other side. The Gaels laced the Blues 18-0 Kingston. Following him is all-star centre Gary to capture their first intercollegiate championship Lewis (71). Varsity's Jack Rogers (81) moves in for since 1937. — VSP by Stan Klosevych

Blues Win Soccer Championship

On Saturday the Senior Soccer Blues won the Western Division Championship in the last game of the year, playing OAC at Guelph in what proved to be the toughest game of the season. As OAC had only lost one game, and that to the Blues, the Seniors had to win or tie, to gain the championship of the Western Division—having already defeated McGill for the Eastern title. Sorely depleted by late season injuries, the Blues had to come from behind to gain a 1-1 tie.

With the loss of two key men, coach Bobby Auld had to reshuffle the team, which consequently had a hard time settling down. OAC pressed strongly from the opening whistle, and scored an early goal. Playing on a smaller field than on which they usually do, the Blues in the first half were lucky to be only one goal behind. They were saved mainly on the great defensive play of fullback Ron Finch and goalkeeper Ed Duru. However, the Blues did come close on a free kick by Don Williams which the OAC goalkeeper saved in a standard style, and by a headed corner by Rod Green which just grazed the crossbar.

In the second half the Blues settled down quickly and were inspired by a goal scored by left winger Brian King who cut in fast after receiving a long pass from centre forward Andy Rava. Varsity now pressed continually as the OAC defense began to crack, and came close to scoring on shots by Bill Leach, Ula Sarna and right half Trevor J. J. Ernie Oumpuu continued to harass the OAC defense with his long throws. Towards the end of the game, there were two penalty shots that should have been called against OAC but the referee ignored them.

By virtue of this tie, the Blues won their sixth championship in three years. They have never been defeated and have been tied only twice, during this period.

In the other game, although the Baby Blues lost to OAC 2-1 for their first loss in three years, they retained the Intermediate title won last year. OAC having lost two games this season. Like the Seniors, the Intermediates were plagued with injuries and lost halfback Andy Tillman played for the Seniors.

OAC scored first in the early part of the first half and because of the small poor field, he then decided else over Toronto. They added another goal, to make it 2-0 at half time. In the second period, the Blues scored a fine goal on a long shot by halfback Jim St. Rose and threatened to score on many occasions, but were unable to get the tying goal.

major. This time Thompson's convert was good and the Gaels led 14-0.

Interceptions and fumbles seemed to kill the Varsity attack just when they appeared to be near pay-dirt, but it looked like they were still in the game late in the third period when they held the Gaels at the Varsity nine. Marching to the Queen's 50 in five plays Skrzypczek was forced to kick to Stewart at the Gael's 29.

The Gaels drove again deep into Varsity territory midway in the fourth quarter and after several more Blue thrusts failed Thompson kicked his second field goal with four minutes remaining to put the Gaels up 17-0. Moments later another booming punt from Thompson's talented toe finished the scoring as Rogers conceded a single.

The whole game was reminiscent of last year's league game in Kingston when the Gaels triumphed 20-0. That time the Blues were hampered by a raft of penalties and bad breaks but still could have won if they'd had the punch inside the Queen's 30 yard line. This time the Gaels thoroughly outclassed them, and the appearance of a bad break for the Blues, of which there were many, made little difference when it was all over.

Kocman, Schreider, Surplis and Stewart ran like demons through countless holes in the Blue defence, and the Varsity line seemed to fold before an apparently irresistible force.

For six league games nobody could make an inch through the centre of the Blue line then suddenly the bottom fell out. An injury to John Casey early in the second half weakened the Blue line but still they played at what was to be Saturday's best. Casey left for Toronto on the late afternoon train on a stretcher ailing with a bruised kidney.

The Blues had sparkplug Ron Stewart thoroughly tied up and the mighty mite failed to score as he has all season against the Blues. But Stewart was still suffering from a leg injury received in the McGill game a week before and was limping noticeably in the second half.

His evident impotency was made up for by the running of the other Gael backs. "All I can remember," said Dick Bethune, "is Kocman or Schreider coming at me with two blockers." When a ball-carrier gets to the tertiary defence and still has his blockers there is little one can do to stop him.

Harry Wilson's passing was not as good as in the Western game a week ago, but the Blues still managed to outdistance the Gaels in the air while racking up a miserable 132 yards on the ground. In all it was alert defensive play that helped the Gaels, and they made good use of the opportunities afforded them by four interceptions and two fumbles.

Their offence was the feature of the game though, and it would have been a tall order for any college club to defeat them yesterday. There can be no doubt that the Blues lost to a better club on the day, and the Gaels deserved to win a title they have been without since the fall of 1937.

Panthers Weakening Lose To Irish 11-0

By JOHN VOJTECH

The high-flying Irish, displaying a much improved performance over their previous games, defeated, by the score of 11-0, a faltering Trinity team which seems to be succumbing to late season difficulties. As the game was played last Friday, the weather was typical of Trinity. St. Mike's clashes this year, as the ground was wet and the skies were dark and threatening. Even the lights that were turned on late in the game were not enough to properly illumine the field.

The Irish attack, in amassing 226 yards for an average of 7.3 yards per carry, roared over the Trinity team's attack of 86 yards for an average of 3.4 yards per carry. The reason for Trinity's exceptionally small yardage gained was that at one point in the game they had the dubious distinction of having a third down coming up with sixty yards to go for a first down!

After a scoreless first half, the Irish suddenly caught fire in the second half. On the first two plays in the half, Jack Fenn and Leo Mezuigan combined to bring the ball down to the Trinity thirty-one yard line on some fine running. From there, Ken Stanton ripped through the Trinity team for the major, Frank Kiely converted. Late in the fourth quarter, Jack Fenn literally bulldozed his way over the line, pushing two Trinity defenders ahead of him. The convert was no good as it hit the post and bounded back onto the playing field.

The win moves the Irish out in front of the group with the possibility of at least a first place finish. Vic could tie them if they beat the Irish on Tuesday. Trinity must beat Skule next week, for if they lose, Trinity and Skule will be tied for the third and last playoff spot. Therefore next week's games will be very important ones for the Group One teams.

Interfaculty Summary

Sparked by the five goal offensive effort of Thompson, the SPS Engineers walloped Vic II 11-1, Friday. Thompson was the master of the SPS squad, completely outclassing the Vic offense and moving almost at will through their defensive squad. He was aided by both Jones and Furgal with a brace of goals apiece, and Bolan and Moose with one each. The only goal scored by Vic came on a shot by Hugh Gemmel.

In interfaculty volleyball, the Engineers' B squad took their home over Forestry by default, when the woodchoppers failed to show up.

It was a weekend to remember, even for us who stayed at home.

Saturday came, bright and crisp. Varsity stadium stood out in bare relief, empty, shielded by a few bare branches. There were no peanut vendors, no ribbons to be bought, no television wires, no policemen and no shouts in the sunshine to be punctuated by the calm factual voice on the loudspeaker.

There was no trouble in parking on campus: not even leaves blowing about on the bare cleat-marked earth. Only the lonely memorial wreaths standing patiently, peopled the place.

Alone in our office, a few Varsity staffers heard the yells from Kingston. At half time, the electricity broke down as though to prevent us from hearing the rest. It came on again at fourteen to nothing. Our Blues hopes dwindled. We sat among crowds in a deserted office and wanted to yell with them. Wanted to do something for a team that had looked so good all season. And then the game was over and we were alone again with the ruins of our planned victory celebrations around us.

Night fell. We remembered the dejected faces of last year's Queen's fans and thought of our own empty-scoring thousand dancing it off in Queen's.

And Sunday came, dull and rainy. People straggled back to the defeated campus, looking dazed. It was a week-end to remember.

creativity again

A letter to the editor today finds our concern over the state of creative writing on this campus "ridiculous."

We wish it were so.

He points out that the university is rich in material for creativity, and that creative writing cannot be taught.

We would not argue with either of these statements. There is a great deal of most fascinating material around this campus and material that has never been exploited. Even if our reader did have time to put the stories he sees on paper he would find no place to publish them.

The Varsity can not be the answer to this situation, much as it would like to be. That is not its function, and the requirements of a daily do not coincide with the time and space and treatment needed for the publication of such material. Our Reader might manage to have his stories published in his college magazine, but what of a meddler with similar wishes.

Creative writing cannot be taught, just as musical composition cannot be taught. But most good writers, and even some great writers need guidance, a sympathetic critic, and especially the atmosphere that will encourage him to create and respect his attempts.

None of these are very much in evidence at University of Toronto.

On Israel, You Judge

This article was written by Gabriel HeDay, a student in the first year General course at University College. After completing his course he will return to Israel to work there.

"... under present conditions, the termination of the armament race must be regarded as the primary objective." The Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union. (A few days before the armament race was stimulated in the Middle East.)

Dear Reader, I write these subsequent lines with a heavy heart for when speaking of my country, I would prefer to tell you of its rebirth. Its dynamic economic and cultural spirit. I would rather show you the many new schools which were built recently, the fabulous achievements in integrating a population which grows double in the last few years. It would be interesting for you to see how weak-looking, persecution-ridden peddlers of backward countries like Yemer, Tunis or Egypt, become proud and free farmers and industry workers in Israel. Women who were deprived of any education in their native countries are going to the ballots today and learning how to use a pencil for the first time in their lives. I would be pleased to show you our husky drillers looking for subterranean water or rejoicing in the first findings of oil. We could count together how many arable acres are reclaimed each year from the desert and calculate in what year will Israel be able to support its whole population on a sound economic basis. No wonder I felt at home in Canada's north bushland while working under similar pioneering conditions and living with people who somehow resembled the same conquering spirit.

Unfortunately however, instead of enjoying myself telling you what is worthwhile and worth listening to, I am forced to speak of gloomy and threatening circumstances. It is necessary to make clear again and again my country's right to live and flourish in freedom, for it is precisely this elementary fact which seems to be threatened for the second time in the last decade.

Sometimes, when approached with questions regarding the right of our sovereign existence, I am tempted to send my misinformed or ignorant antagonist to argue with a Manhattan Island house owner about the latter's legal and moral rights to occupy the premises, against those of his Manhattan-Indian predecessor.

While I admit this comparison to be a bit extravagant, I nevertheless maintain that the only real difference lies in that the purchasers of the island underpaid the Indian while every square inch of what was acclaimed as Hebrew soil in the now nearly one hundred years of Jewish colonization in Palestine, has been first of all dearly overpaid, regardless its economic values and subsequently converted from rocky deserts and muddy swamps into arable and inhabitable territory. You can imagine that this task required much blood and sweat.

The recent high tension along the Israeli-Arab borders is not to be blamed upon the average Arab. It might sound incredible in today's troubled times when I recollect the cheering and contented Beduins welcoming the Jewish pioneers and their water pipe lines in the Negev desert in 1946. Many of my friends are called Ahmed or Abdulla and I remember how as kids we used to hunt for rabbits upon the mountains surrounding the historic remains of Meggido. The fathers of these friends of mine, were mighty happy to learn how to use a tractor or else come to our settlement with wives and all to watch a movie picture. These are personal experiences, but they represent a reality very dear to many an Arab and Jew.

It is quite obvious that the Arabs would mainly benefit from a peaceful coexistence with us. However it is very unfortunate for us as well as for the Arabs that their spokesmen are totalitarian dictators. The frequent preaching from international platforms, on lofty moral ideas and the criticizing of deficiencies in other countries, delivered by these same spokesmen, induce me to establish some facts which are endured by these dictators in their own countries. For example you will find in those countries slavery, mutilation for theft and decapitation for non capital crimes. The existence of elaborate systems of discrimination and fearful poverty. It might be new for you to hear that in some Arab countries labour enjoys neither the right of free association nor the protection of elementary social legislation, etc.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Ridiculous! One-Party Rule Not Inevitable

The Editor,
The Varsity:

An editorial a few days back wrung its hands, at some length, over the seemingly sparse opportunities for young authors of the campus; there is no reputable course, it said, nor is there anyone prepared or competent to teach creative writing.

Ridiculous.

One of the first impressions I received when I entered this Higher Seat of the Same Old Learning, was that, failing all else, it at least offered the finest course on creative writing in the world. It's veritably a writer's dream. Ten or eleven thousands of short stories enrol each year, and many of these carrying with them a sonnet or two. Characters of all shapes and sizes flaunt themselves before my unbelieving eyes everyday, and with such rapidity that I don't have time to put them down on paper. Corruptions in high places and low, flagrant and hidden; good, simple deeds, unnoticed or touted; situation and colour (abundant) everywhere.

And there's no reason in the world why the daily couldn't forsake a crossword puzzle or two for the inclusion of a worthy creation; so the publication part of it is no problem.

Therefore, dear editor, don't change a thing. You, (along with most of the writers as a matter of fact), have failed to appreciate the real foresight of the powers-that-be; they know that creative writing cannot be taught. Instead they have set up an intricate network, wherein he who hath eyes doth see, and in it they have placed the extremes of humanity, all fair game for the writer if he can get used to abomination at its tritest.

John T. Harasti

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I must take the strongest possible objection to Editor Brown's statement (The Varsity, Nov. 4) that there is "no alternative" to the present Liberal administration in Ottawa. I cannot accept that one-party rule is inevitable or, by inference, desirable, as does Mr. Brown. The belief in cabinet infallibility is an iniquitous proposition that needs to be checked, not preached, by the university press. In truth, there has existed, in Canada, a more incompetent, clumsy, and dangerous cabinet than the present executive.

It is also doubtful if a more bumbling, insignificant morass of humanity than the current collection of Liberal M.P.'s has ever been seen in the Canadian Parliament. There never has been a group of politicians so unmindful of public duty, so submissive to party interest.

There is a good alternative to this in the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. It is time for a change to a government and a party which are dedicated to the principles of Parliamentary supremacy and Responsible government. It is time for a change from silk-hat socialism and authoritarianism.

The Progressive Conservative Party, alone, can provide this much needed change.

Gordon Ross, II UC

Ed. Note: The inference from the inevitability of Liberal rule to its desirability is a long step. The article merely expressed the opinion that the Liberal party was sure of winning the next election; no opinions were expressed on the desirability of this inevitability.

A Bouquet

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I desire to congratulate you and your staff for the dignified yet poignant manner in which you dealt with Remembrance Day and its significance.

NOTES ON A NIGHT TRAIN TO KINGSTON

If I were a fly with a green left eye
And a doe's cleft toes for a nose,
I'd buzz, bite, bark at the sky with a shark,
For goodness knows horses like those;
But a cat's meant to chat and to masticate fat
And to log the fog with a dog,
So I'll settle for metal and oats in fine fettle
And a hog that goes "oink" just like mummy used to read
In the story 'bout that mean old wolf.

the philharmonia and von karajan

Last Friday night Massey Hall was filled to capacity for the first concert in the International Artists Series. The visiting artists were the Philharmonia Orchestra of London, conducted by Austrian Herbert von Karajan. This was the third European orchestra to visit Toronto in a year, the other two being the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, the latter also under Von Karajan. The Philharmonia is the youngest of the three, celebrating its tenth birthday this year. It was formed of young British virtuosi-musicians. Rapidly it has won fame, especially through its superlative Angel Recordings.

The programme for its Toronto appearance was a varied one. It opened with Britten's Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge, for string orchestra. This work was especially written for a performance by the Boyd Neel Orchestra under Boyd Neel at one of the Salzburg festivals in the 1930's. It is a thoroughly enjoyable work in which Britten displays his mastery of orchestration, and gives us some wonderful tonal effects, for instance in the Aria Italiana, where we get a guitar-like effect, and in the Wiener Waltz where the strings are struck by the bow. The string section of the Philharmonia displayed to us a lyrical and emotional approach to the composition.

Major work on the program was Beethoven's Symphony no. 6 in F ("Pastoral"). Maestro Von Karajan, his arms dangling before his bent figure, gave this very familiar work a fresh interpretation. The general discipline and clarity of the orchestra were clearly noticeable. Outstanding was the full roundness of tone of the wind instruments, especially of the horn section, the first desk of which was occupied by famed Dennis Brain. Closing one's eyes, one could picture the countryside with its babbling brook, its merry country-folk — and its blasting thunderstorm, played by the orchestra in an electrifying way.

Final work was Debussy's Three Symphonic Sketches, "La Mer." The Philharmonia gave this impressionistic composition a superlative performance, starting off pianissimo and bringing the Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea to its climax in a terrific fortissimo. The second sketch, "Jeux de vagues" is like a capricious arabesque, and the orchestra had no difficulty in portraying its transparent texture.

The powerful closing chords of the work brought the enthusiastic audience to its feet and gave the brilliant orchestra and its outstanding young conductor a rousing ovation, to which Von Karajan responded by playing as encore the Forza overture of Verdi. We certainly hope to welcome the Philharmonia back on its next tour of this continent.

John A., Part Two.

MacDonald and National Expansion, the second part of a documentary on Sir John A. MacDonald, presented by Exploring Minds (CBC-TV Sunday; 6:00 p.m.) was much superior to the first half, presented last week. MacDonald's grand achievement after Confederation — the laying of a transcontinental railway which united Canada from sea to sea and discouraged American interest in the N. W. Territories — was described by Professor Creighton of the U. of T. History Department (with some help from CBC-TV actors) with impressive dramatic effect and a skilful integration of facts.

Frankly, I was sitting on the edge of my seat by the times Charles Tupper offered to return from his post as High Commissioner to England and sit in the Canadian House as a private member if he could in this way further the interests of the transcontinental railway; and I slid back into it with a genuine sigh of relief when the last spike of the C.P.R. was driven home in British Columbia.

Professor Creighton's description of the great scandal of 1873 (in which Sir John A. was accused of having promised certain favors to Montreal ship-owner Allen in exchange for campaign funds) was balanced yet dramatically right, in that Sir John A. was allowed to say the last word, in defence of himself and his party. This program was presented in such a way as to hold the attention of a high school student, a history grad, or the people next door — a feat that deserves much praise.

Director Leon Major will hold auditions for Kiss Me Kate, the University musical for this year, all this week (Nov. 14-18). Top priority goes to urgently needed male dancers. This musical has a large chorus and a number of roles for singers, dancers, and actors. Rehearsal pianists are needed, as well as people interested in the production and backstage sides of the show.

Auditions will be held in the basement under the dining hall of the UC Men's Residence. Any student affiliated with the University is eligible to try out. The schedule is as follows: Monday, 2-5 and 7-10:30 — Singers. Tuesday, 4-5 and 7-10:30 — Dancers. Wednesday, 2-5 and 7-10:30 — Singers. Thursday, 2-5 and 7-10:30 — Actors. Friday, 2-5 — Singers, and 7-10:30 — Dancers. Dancers please take note of the change in audition schedule as posted around the University from Thursday to Tuesday. Singers should bring their own music. A pianist will be available, if desired.

Kiss Me Kate will be presented under the auspices of University College. The producer is Walter Gonet, Leon Major will direct, and Ross Kilpatrick is the musical director.

A production of this size requires infinite numbers of people to help backstage. People are needed to help build and paint sets, to help with advertising, publicity, and ticket sales, to work on those interested in working on the production should leave their names, addresses, and telephone numbers, along with their particular interests at the Lit Office in the JCR of UC.

A MASS MEETING of the Varsity's Art, Music and Drama critics will be held today at 1:00 p.m. in the confines of the Varsity office. This meeting, it should be emphasized, will have important and far-reaching effects. All those who have written reviews for any cultural occasion are requested to be present, for an exhortation by the A.M. and D. editor on a subject very dear to their hearts.

Jazzers Appreciative

A group discussion on appreciation and taste highlighted last week's meeting of the Jazz Appreciation Group.

Jack Batten led the discussion with an enthused audience in the Hart House debates room. Roger Feather was also a prominent voice in the session, which ranged from the birth of jazz at Minerton's Playhouse in Harlem to Dizzy Gil-artistic, musical, or dramatic? SKULE NITE SWITCH

In the past 25 years, a good deal has happened to Varsity's Engineers, but come Hell, high water, or Ajax, they've always been basically the same. And since 1921, they've always had a Skule Nite to go to, an evening's entertainment that stayed representative of student feeling no matter what changes have been made in the show.

There have been plenty of changes made — although the words Skule Nite now bring to mind visions of a spectacular full-length revue done in Hart House Theatre, this has not always been so. Skule Nite 21, the first annual engineers' show, was held at Massey Hall. Veterans took a major part in the production and so it was only natural that the show should be a commentary on life in the infantry with the title "P.B.I." or "Poor Bloody Infantry." Unfortunately, after this first Skule smash, the hall was left in such poor condition that the following year's Skule Nite was shifted to Hart House.

Most of the early Skule Nites were actually dances with various course-skits being put on as entertainment either before or during the dance. The show of SKULE NITE 375 was especially noteworthy, since during one of the skits dramatic proof of an engineer's intestinal fortitude was presented. To win a bet, one mighty skuleman filled a stage prop bottle with rye instead of tea, and "chug-a-lugged" the whole thing down in full view of the audience. Nobody at the time was aware that it was not stage fright which made the actor tremble during the scene.

The peak of development of the spectacular affairs during the thirties come in Skule Nite 319, which was attended by over 800 couples. After the skits, five orchestras played for dancing, a gym display was put on by the varsity gym team, an aquatic display was put on in the pool by the "Dolphinettes," and the "Modernaires" held forth in the east common room. Cake and coffee were served in the Great Hall, and dancing continued till 2 A.M.

The change in format of Skule Nite to the present full-length show occurred in 1953 as the result of a desire to improve the quality of the revue. This improved quality was especially noticeable in Skule Nite 575 which many thought the tops in campus entertainment last year. One feature of that show which attracted much attention was a breath-taking display of (snort! pant!) pulchritude. This is certainly a pleasant change from earlier Skule Nites, and rumour has it that there will be numerous examples of (drool!) beautiful femininity in Skule Nite 576.

Other features which are returning this year to satisfy popular demand include "Stacey," Skule's own barnyard philosopher, and the melodious "Skule House Four," perennial winners of the All-Varsity Quartet Championship. These are only a few of the presentations that producer Jim Vasoff promises should make Skule Nite 576 one of the best yet some changes made

These appealing young ladies are among those who will be gracing "Skule Nite 55" with their presence. The engineers again have gone beyond the ranks of the purely practical sciences to select their dancers, throwing to the winds their regard for tried-and-true tradition.

CANVASSING CRITIC

Goya At The Gallery

In his youth Francisco Goya was a rebel against society. Because he was a member of marauding street gangs he was forced to leave Spain. Later in life, when he was an established painter and court favourite, this same rebellious spirit was expressed in his drawings and etchings as a grim satirical comment on all classes of life. The subject-matter of the collection of Goya's drawings now at the Toronto Art Gallery varies widely — poverty, excess wealth, human deformities, bull-fighters, street-fighters, — yet Goya always depicts men and women with an intimate knowledge of their way of life, and their weaknesses.

He is also always ready to exploit this weakness, to make his human figures humorous, disgusting, ridiculous, pitiful, or horrible.

The most horror-provoking pictures are the series Los Desartes de la Guerre. Goya was recording the atrocities of the French at the invasion of Madrid. One drawing shows a heap of tangled bodies, with the title, "This is why you have been born." (Goya's drawings resemble book illustrations in that his titles as scrawled above or below his figures are necessary to understand his meaning.) The same series shows a great dog devouring small human figures.

The series Touromquia shows how well acquainted he was with bullfighting. Here the action and excitement of the subject seem to have eased his need for satire. These are two of the four famous series of Goya's drawings. Pictures from all of the series as well as many miscellaneous drawings are at the gallery and make up an excellent show. The fine draughtsmanship and stable compositions mark the great artist, but the most striking feature of the exhibition is Goya's personal comment upon, and judgment of, his fellow men.

SHARE

Banquet and Challenge

Dinner Speech' Nursing Dates India Delegate For Engineers

The current two-week SHARE campaign was boosted today with the arrival in Toronto of Father Jerome D'Souza.

A towering six-footer, the Roman Catholic priest is a member of the Indian delegation to the United Nations. Tonight he will speak at the SHARE banquet in the Great Hall of Hart House.

The SHARE campaign is sponsored by World University Service to raise funds for its international student relief.

Former president of Loyola College in Madras and a member of India's first parliament, Father D'Souza now is a senior member of the National WUS Committee of India.

In 1953 he was one of the directors of the WUS sponsored summer seminar in India. Since his arrival in Toronto from New York Father D'Souza has renewed many of the acquaintances he made with Toronto students who participated in that seminar.

"It reinforces my belief in the international strength of WUS to meet again these young Canadians who visited my country," he said.

The spectacled, grey-goated diplomat said the students of India have great respect and admiration for World University Service, particularly the Student Health Centres and other relief projects sponsored by the organization.

"You have no idea how much the contribution of Canadian students means in terms of Indian student life. Our problems, particularly in University circles, are tremendous," he said.

This evening Father D'Souza, who has achieved a great reputation in the field of social science and has lived through the greatest political upheaval in Indian history, will speak on Asia in Transition.

Nearly 300 persons are expected to hear him discuss the many problems which face Asia as a result of the growing impact both of western democracy and Russian communism there.

The SHARE campaign has as its objective $7500. Most of this money will be devoted to projects in four countries: Indonesia, Israel, Japan and Pakistan.

Last year contributions of World University Service in Canada helped complete a Student Health Centre in Patna, India.

Nursing and Engineering, those perennial "rivals" on the U of T campus, are doing their best to maintain the SHARE campaign, well behind the $7,500 goal after the first week.

The Engineering Society announced last weekend that it accepted the nurses' challenge that any one of their number would take out any Engineer who contributed more than $2 to SHARE.

"Several have already announced their willingness to participate," a spokesman said.

Another source reports that one engineer donated $5 Friday and now claims two and one-half dates with the nurses. The latter are having difficulty finding one girl who wishes half a date, or half a girl who wishes one date.

Engineering and nursing, however, are well behind in the faculty race for top donation percentage. Knox College reached 100.2 per cent of their objective Friday afternoon to take a commanding lead over second-place Nursing at 47.6 per cent. Skule had collected a tiny 0.5 per cent.

Knox placed third last year behind Emmanuel and Wycliffe colleges, and spokesmen say she is "out to win" this year. Barry Cooke, Emmanuel representative, stated today that Knox's position would be short-lived, and that the Emmanuel Brethren are banding together to maintain last year's lofty position when they finished first.

Nursing, by virtue of selling 100 SHARE banquet tickets, are well ahead of their "hated rivals from the plumbing schools," who have sold but two banquet tickets.

The Arts colleges have been singularly quiet, said Anderson, with little response so far. Trinity leads University College and Victoria at the moment, with nothing heard from St. Mike's.

Anderson said most of the faculties with no returns yet say they have collected money but haven't handed it in.

Here are the seven faculties contributing so far:

Faculties	Percent of Quota reached
1. Knox	100.2
2. Nursing	47.6
3. POT	40.0
4. Trinity	17.6
5. University College	6.4
6. Victoria	5.1
7. Engineering	0.5

With precise measurements, almost down to the last atom of C14, Egyptian mummies, ancient skeletons and manuscripts have been dated to within ten years!

The exquisite sensitivity of determination of radioactive atoms may be better appreciated when it is realized that one ounce of charcoal from wood contains 1,200,000,000,000,000,000,000 individual atoms of carbon!

Man has duplicated, even exceeded, all of Nature's radioactive achievements. He has even synthesized nine new elements! However, he may also have cooked his own goose through lack of ethical control over his achievements.

To celebrate the three-quarter century mark of its publication, THE VARSITY is going to publish a whopping 32-page (or more) issue November 29.

Articles are needed, pictures are needed, reminiscences are needed. Individuals who recall the good old days of this University, or clubs and organizations which have existed on campus for a long time are cordially invited to submit whatever they deem suitable.

Pictures of the university several or many years ago, stories of doin's in the murky realms of antiquity (before ten years ago), club histories, reminiscences of prominent campus figures — all will be welcomed.

Those who have contributions please contact the editors soon. November 20 is the deadline.

Varsity advertisers also note that November 20 is the deadline for Anniversary Issue advertising.

Varsity Fans Consoled As Gaels Bring Wael

By MICHAEL FENGELEY

Hardly had the eight-coach "Football Special" (laden down with a cargo of "breakable" suitcases) begun to slip out of Toronto's Union Station, Saturday, than things began to open up: the 700 Varsity rooters abroad were bound that Queen's University Golden Gaels were not going to cop their first intercollegiate football championship since 1937; they looked for a second successive championship for Toronto, "Toronto 16-4" and "Varsity 18-2 over Queen's" were not uncommon pronouncements.

Just to help things out, reinforcements made their appearance in the form of paper cups and surreptitiously-handled bottles of various shapes; the Blue and White band roamed through the coaches, rendering such favourites as the Engineering song and "Toronto is our University." Cheerleaders (not as yet attired in pert skirts and blouses) tried to whip up the old school spirit; but for the most part, the 200-mile trip was subdued.

There were of course exceptions: in one coach, a ukelele was pulled from its case and in the same general area a square bottle, reputed to have contained snake oil was unblushingly displayed. These accoutrements, however, were moved into a rear coach when they failed to stir the imagination of nearby fellow-passengers.

In Kingston, a few hours before game time the city's main street was alive with red, gold and blue colours. There was a general feeling that after 18 years of long waiting, this should be the year for Queen's. But as one loyal tri-colour supporter put it: "Queen's should win, but you never can tell with Toronto."

By kick-off time, Richardson stadium, jam-packed with some 12,500 rabid supporters, was bouncing to the pepped-up rhythm of brass bands and wild cat-calls from a small but still confident band (1,100) of Toronto supporters. Even at half time, when Queen's led 3-0 there was still hope that a hard-driving Varsity ground attack would begin to roll.

But after the break, when a relentless Golden Gael ground offense smashed down field and over the line for the first touchdown, Varsity hopes began to fade. And, not long after, when speedy Surplis sputted 77 yards to put Queen's ahead 14-0, it looked very much like the handwriting on the wall. In the final quarter, a second Jocko Thompson field goal sealed University of Toronto's fate for 1955.

Richardson stadium went wild. As the last seconds of the game ticked out with Toronto "white washed" 18-0, thousands of spectators swarmed across the gridiron heaving such Queen's idols as Ronnie Stewart and Bill Surplis onto their shoulders.

The impossible had been done after 18 years!

The impact turned Kingston into a city mad frolic. Downtown, main street traffic was held up for a good half-hour as exuberant students whirled their way on a victory march 10-abreast behind the college's pipers. Many a horse-laugh was doled out to University of Toronto fans who ambled disconsolately back to drown their sorrows in hotel-room parties. As late as 4 in the morning the taunting refrain was still rising from the street... "Toronto, Toronto, Toronto got a zero!"

Four New League Points Advance Blue Ruggerites

Varsity's Senior Rugger Blues picked up a total of four points over the weekend, on a shutout and a defaulted game, in the Toronto Rugger League. The Blues completely overpowered the Toronto Barbarians Seconds, 17-0 yesterday afternoon, and advanced an extra two points in the standings when the Saracens failed to show up for their scheduled tilt Saturday afternoon.

The outstanding scorer for the winners Sunday, was William Chadwick, who scored two tries and converted one, for a total of eight points. Three others scored a try apiece, for individual tallies of three points each. They were Roger Hirst, Mike Lawton and John Hill. All of the team's 17 points were tallied in the first half of the game. The Barbarians' defense tightened in the last frame, but they couldn't catch the Blues on offense.

The Blues have three games left to play, and a sweep of these remaining games will guarantee them a first place finish.

Correction

The story entitled "Erection of Board Delayed" on page 8 of last Thursday's Varsity contained some inaccuracies.

Mr. Russell, who is the Assistant Superintendent of buildings, received a letter from Mr. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC, requesting permission to erect a new bulletin board in front of the SAC office on Tuesday, Nov. 8, and not on Thursday, Nov. 3.

The request for permission was forwarded by Mr. Russell to the property committee of the Board of Governors the same day that it was received. All permanent structures on the campus must be approved in this manner.

The Editors of The Varsity regret any embarrassment that may have been caused to Mr. Russell, who is not personally responsible in any way for any delay to the erection of the SAC Bulletin Board;

Campus Profile

President Sidney Smith

By ROBERT BROWN

The genial, round-faced, grey-haired educator of 58 who runs the University of Toronto is a busy man.

President Sidney Earle Smith (known behind his back as "Sid" by students) is head of the largest university in Canada. Under his direction, the time of the university's 3,000 employees and over $10,000,000 annually is spent on the education of 11,000 students. He heads a dozen university administrative bodies, serves on another dozen, and spends a great deal of time speaking and writing on a subject dear to his heart—Canadian education.

All this makes President Smith an extremely busy man.

But Sidney Smith is also a friendly man. Enter his spacious and carpeted office on the second floor of Simcoe Hall, and—even if he has only a vague recollection of you—he rises to his feet to greet you with your first name, a hearty handshake, and a ready smile.

President Smith is always fighting a losing battle against the anonymity of this university — which he deprecates strongly — and he tries to maintain a personal approach to people as much as he can.

President Smith's friendliness comes out in other ways. He took two hours out of his busy schedule to give an interview to this reporter, and cheerfully explained a dozen aspects of university policy which he must have already explained, fifty times over, to another fifty people. He called in his secretary twice during the course of the interview to obtain extra information which would make his points quite clear.

During the interview, Dr. Smith was nattily attired in a charcoal grey suit and a striped tie. He relaxed easily against the background of his comfortable office, and smoked continually as he chatted. His conversation was aniated, and he twisted his mobile face into various expressions of amusement, disgust, concern, and thoughtfulness as he talked about various aspects of the university.

"Always glad to see you, Bob . . ."

But the President is also an extraordinarily busy man: he was interrupted a half-dozen times during the interview by urgent phone calls, and requests for information and decisions by other university officials.

Dr. Smith's broad face is now deeply etched by the heavy responsibilities of his position, and by his recent serious illness. He appeared more tired than usual.

President Smith is also a family man. He and his wife live in the Presidential Mansion on University Avenue, just above Falconer Hall and next to the Museum.

Dr. Smith has three daughters—Sheila, Moira, and Heather. Sheila, a graduate of this university, is now doing social work in Toronto. Moira is now at Oxford, while Heather, 11 years old, is still in public school.

Dr. Smith has been a controversial, although always respected figure in Canadian education for years. He has been a strong opponent of "loyalty" oaths ("an insult to the honest, while the crook can take them"), and a proponent of compulsory non-military training. (Boys should do a year of conservation work; but I don't know what I would do with the girls!)

President Smith has also become a noted proponent of the theory of "limited education"—that education on the university level should be limited to those few who can profit by it; and that the doors of the universities should not be opened to a flood of freshmen, a great many of them with no particular interest in or qualifications for, a university education.

But President Smith is by no means a snob; he has said "a college career is not the only way to heaven."

—VSP by Stan Klosevych

"Yes . . . this is a difficult university to administer . . ."

President Smith has also run into some opposition in the university. He has been often criticized for his stand that discipline of students is the sole responsibility of the administration, and that student government rests on privilege, not on right. His educational ideas have also caused some friction with some members of the staff, though in general he is well respected by the faculty.

Sidney Smith has also been generally on good terms with the students. He thoroughly enjoys speaking at student functions, and always tries to meet as many students as he possibly can. He is a famous "raconteur" of amusing personal stories.

President Smith — besides his great interest in education — has been busy in a great many other fields. He has been at various times an assistant editor of the Canadian Bar Review, a President of the National Film Society, and President of the National Council of YMCA's in Canada. University Commemorates 'One Thousand' Who Died

"Take these for your examples: like them, remember that prosperity can be only for the free, that Freedom is the sure possession of those alone who have the courage to defend it."
— Inscription on University War Memorial.

The South wind was cold. The brightly-coloured robes of the academic procession were whipped about as the deans made their way along the walk towards the war memorial.

The day was a cold one, and the cold gray stone seemed to gather up the cold, and hug it close to its chest. The words of the President's invocation were thrown about by the wind, now booming hollowly, and now fading away.

The bugle notes sounded out, and the gathering bowed its heads.

What were the thoughts that went through the gathering during that minute? What were they thinking about?

Some no doubt, were thinking about some personal loss from the war.

But what were the others thinking about? What was there to think about in that one long cold minute?

Everything.

But one minute is a short time to review the whole of human folly, to taste the dregs of international hatred, to savour the full stupidity of history.

One minute is a short time. The bugle sounded. Reville. And the heads came up.

A few more muttered words . . . a few more phrases to be whipped away by the winds. The wreaths, ironically gay and bright against the dull gray background of the stone and the weather, were laid.

The crowds melted away as the rain began to fall.

The carillon's sweet chimes rang out over the campus, again being played with by the wind so that they now sounded loud and close, and now from a great distance.

The remembrance day service was over.

And only the dead that we had come to commemorate were at peace, for only they could be sure that their duty was finished, their responsibilities fulfilled to the uttermost.

Balloons Lose Gas SHARE Is Deflated Auction To Continue

The work of three days spent painting and raising SHARE balloons above Hart House was destroyed sometime Friday night, when unknown vandals passed their time blowing them up.

Friday afternoon the balloons were flying brilliantly over Hart House, the result of hard work by SHARE enthusiasts.

Saturday morning each balloon was crumpled.

"They must have had a sadistic joy watching each one blow up," said SHARE Chairman Carl Anderson. "As balloons and gas are expensive and seeing that some people are unable to refrain from childish actions, the best we can do is forget about the colorful scheme."

The balloons were to be used to register faculty donations and were painted in faculty colours.

A cheerleader and a handsome engineer, among other rare objets d'art will go on the block at 1 p.m. today as Skule holds its 167th auction, all proceeds to go to SHARE.

The colorful event, discontinued last year because of the freshman riot, will be under the capable handling and raucous voice of Phineon H. Legree, great great grandson of Simon and alias Chris Christie, an Engineering spokesman said.

The sale takes place outside the main Engineering building, and all students are welcome, he said.

Other treasures for auction include "a couple of tickets to some event," a couple of visitors from Montreal left over from the McGill weekend, a pair of Queen's goalposts sawed off four feet from the ground, a football player, and other assorted goalposts.

It could not be learned which cheerleader and which engineer were for sale.

PRESIDENT SIDNEY SMITH — DISTINGUISHED CANADIAN

He has also been interested in the Canadian Association for Adult Education, the Canadian Youth Commission, the Canadian UN Association, the National Conference of Canadian Universities, and the commission on Uniformity of Canadian law.

President Smith has also taken a quiet fling into politics. At the Convention of the Progressive-Conservative Party that nominated Bracken, he allowed his name to go forward for the PC leadership. But he withdrew his name after the first ballot in favour of Bracken, and he has "never regretted the choice."

No one in Smith's earlier life would have predicted that he would have become a university president. He was born in 1887 to a farmer's family on Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia. His mother, a devout woman, intended him for the ministry, and read Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress to him when he was a child.

Then Smith took an Arts degree at King's College, Nova Scotia, and decided upon a career in the legal profession. He obtained his LL.D. at Dalhousie, and went on to Harvard for post-graduate work in law. All through his university education, he paid his way by part-time jobs, and by borrowing.

His education was interrupted during World War I when he joined the Canadian Artillery Corps, and spent two years in France. In March, 1918, he transferred to the Royal Flying Corps of the British Army, and was a pilot in training at the end of the war.

"I went in as a private, and came out with the rank of a sergeant," said Dr. Smith with a grip, referring to his wartime experiences.

He was called to the bar of Nova Scotia in 1921, but instead of practising he obtained a position as lecturer in the Dalhousie Law School, and embarked on a career in education that has carried him to the position of President at Canada's largest university.

In 1925, Smith went to Osgoode Hall as a professor. In 1926 he took time to get married to a girl from his home province of Nova Scotia. However, he returned in 1929 to the Dalhousie Law School as Dean, and his brilliant academic career was well underway. It was during this period that he wrote several law books, one of which at least is in use today at this university.

In 1934, in the middle of the "hungry thirties", he was appointed to the presidency of the University of Manitoba. It was a difficult position for a 37-year-old educator to fill, for the University of Manitoba had been the scene of maladministration, and was in great financial difficulties.

However, Sidney Smith acquitted himself well. He completely reorganized the university administration, and during the 10 year period that he was chief administrator of the university, greatly improved his prestige. He is evidently still remembered with affection at Manitoba, for a recent issue of the Manitoban, commenting on his visit to Winnipeg to speak at a Manitoba Convocation, said of Dr. Smith that "his guidance during the U of M's most difficult years makes his memory particularly secure in this university . . . under his administration the university enjoyed one of its greatest periods of cooperation and untroubled times . . . he has held on two continents for his contributions to the arts and sciences . . ."

In 1944, Smith came to the University of Toronto to be groomed as the successor of the late President Cody. He served one year as Principal of University College, and as executive assistant to the President before moving up—in 1945—to the position of President.

During the last ten years he has served with distinction as the head of this university during some of its more difficult years. It was he who had to deal with the great influx of veterans during the post-war years, the financial crisis caused by rising prices, the desperate need for more facilities, and the rising enrolment. Now, President Smith is busily planning ahead for another great influx of students to the university when the "bulge" of wartime babies hits the university-age group.

ASIA NEEDS SELF RULE

No Engineers Said Adamson Debate At HH

A Cambridge graduate teaching town planning in the School of Architecture will be the Honorary Visitor at the Hart House debate this Wednesday. Professor A. P. C. Adamson will speak on the motion "There is no place in the university for technical faculties."

John Douglas, III Vic, speaking for the motion said, "The present link between technical faculties and arts faculties cannot be true marriage because of their incompatibility. It is time the faculties stopped living in sin, in common law marriage."

An opponent, Leo Gray, IV S.P.S. said, "Only misguided souls, such as artsmen frustrated in their social endeavours by the fatal charm which engineers have for the opposite sex, could possibly support the motion. Remember 'envy's a coal which comes hissing hot from Hell.'"

Barry Watson, graduate, supporting the motion said, "It is the avowed purpose of the university to teach people why to do things, not how to do them. It is for this reason the technical faculties can have no possible place."

Speaking against the motion Woody Friedlander, S.P.S. said, "It is about time that someone stood up and shouted for all to hear that this aura of intellectualism that the arts faculties bathe in is as phony as the artsman himself. This is just what we will do when we prove beyond a doubt, that no one has any more right to a glorified status in this university than the technical faculties."

West Should Learn SHARE With Asia Without Interference

A member of India's delegation to the United Nations says the first condition for working with Asian countries is to let them be masters in their own houses.

Father Jerome D'Souza was speaking last night to 300 persons at the annual banquet held in conjunction with the SHARE campaign which currently is on campus.

"With the first impact of the ancient civilization and western ideologies we learned that great idea of nationalism and the democratic equality of all men," he said.

The towering, six-footer spoke with feeling of the impact of these ideas on the oriental mind with its reverence for caste, family and dynasty, and the resolution of the Indians and the Asians to press for the right to determine their own destiny.

The second thing Asia learned from the west was the scientific spirit which examined the most minute parts of nature and held nothing sacrosanct from its investigations.

"The Oriental mind held the notion of an almighty god who was imminent rather than trans-endent. This led to the view that nature was something worthy of worship."

The west came along and told us to take that cell and make it into a microscope, to take the chromosomes and other things and harness what we learned to the improvement of our own lot."

Will Asia be so-called? "We don't know," Father D'Souza said.

He went on to outline the factors which would prevent democracy in its purest form from flourishing in Asia. He pointed close alliance between religion and the state, the path which the transition from feudal government to totalitarianism can be made, the existence of certain elements which will react against the west, and the endless discussion necessary for the working out of democratic procedures.

"Who knows? Maybe some impatient Asian power will say 'You have talked long enough. Leave us in peace.'"

"What will keep these ideas in bounds? What but the continuing contact with you students of the west who here exercise in relative purity the ideals of the democratic system."

"It is you who can help create the proper climate which will be reflected in the United Nations and will help lead Asia along the proper road."

"In doing that perhaps you too will learn how to help us keep the best features of Asian life working side by side in the purity of democracy. Perhaps we can give you back some of the things you have lost. Perhaps once again we will be able of inspiring the world."

Skule Auctioned Stolen UC Chair College Leaders Show No Concern

Girls, goalposts and the Speaker's Chair from UC Literary Society were auctioned off yesterday at the annual Skule SHARE auction.

Lorraine Forbes, who works in the Skule stores, sold for $11, with two tickets for Duffydill, the Meds show, thrown in.

A reluctant co-ed, Mary Parish, School of Nursing, who was persuaded into being sold at the last minute along with tickets to a first play, fetched $8 from four skulemen.

The UC Speaker's Chair was captured on Monday morning by a group of Skulemen with comparative ease.

"They just went in and took it," said auctioneer Chris Christie. Christie later went into UC Lit office and informed a few people there that the engineers had taken the chair.

"They hardly looked up," said

Christie. "They didn't seem to care. I told them that we had taken the chair—they said 'oh.' I asked them what they were going to do about it and they said 'nothing.' They just didn't seem to care."

Tom Hammond, UC Lit Director, was unaware of the theft.

"UC plans to use this chair on Thursday for its Second Parliament," Hammond said, "We'll simply have to get it back—you can't hold a parliament without a chair," he added.

Other articles sold were two frogs from the McGill physics laboratory, the Queen's goalposts, an engineer, and the 'no parking' sign of the Lt. Governor from Queen's Park.

World War Movies In Poor Taste—Cut

Rumors that a series of World War II films currently being presented at Hart House have been cancelled were confirmed last night.

Bob Kaplan, chairman of the Art Committee said, "These films were created as propaganda films and although I no longer consider them to be propaganda, a number of people feel that they are in poor taste."

"Since the films shown are supposed to have some artistic value and since the World War II films are far from the realm of art, I have decided to discontinue them for the present."

Suicide?

Suicide—is it justifiable?

This will be the subject of an informal discussion between Medmen and POT students tonight at 7:30 in the POT Huts. Guest speaker and chairman of the discussion will be Rev. James C. Ryan, chaplain of Hart House.

Toronto (Exchange): "Shocking" is the way registrar C. Finley of Ryerson described dress at Varsity and Queen's. He visited the universities earlier this fall.

"I came from a middle class family without much money but I went from kindergarten to university wearing a shirt, collar, and jacket," he said. He explained this is one reason he likes to see students neatly dressed.

The registrar who is leaving Ryerson this year, said that dress regulation would not be altered "in the least" after his departure. An editorial in the Ryersonian was generally in favour of the dress ruling which has now been imposed for a year on Ryerson students. However, it commented that there could be a little more eye and ear in this matter.

"The University of Toronto doesn't compel its students to wear collars and ties," said the editorial. "True enough, in courses like medicine, with high prestige consciousness they must know to the same fashion law, but in many of the other courses as long as students are neat and clean nothing more is said."

A little modification in the ruling might go a long way in comfort and acceptability without sacrificing appearance," the editorial concluded.

Students should be allowed to wear neat shorts and a conservative sweater, or more to suit the occasion and mood, the editorial suggested.

The Ryersonian questioned several campus persons about their reactions to the year-old dress ruling.

"We have the nicest looking group of student in the city and should feel proud when we see the well-dressed Ryerson student in comparison with the sloppy U of T students," commented the Ryerson SAC president.

Principal Kerr thinks it is "one of the best things that has happened to Ryerson. Freedom of dress complaints from American students about what a good-looking student body we have here."

Said one Ryerson student: "The first in Electrotonic made it unbearable to wear a tie. The second is so dirty that it is practically impossible to keep the cuffs of your white shirt clean. Clean jeans and clean shirts are good enough for lab work."

needed inquiry

The University Bookstore has long been a source of dissatisfaction to students for both the quality of its service and the steepness of its prices. This dissatisfaction has culminated in the appointment of a special committee by the Students' Administrative Council to investigate both bookstore prices and efficiency.

The Bookstore management have protested on numerous occasions that their service is generally good, and that their prices are as low as economy and book publishers will allow.

These statements should be questioned.

The Bookstore generally sells its book at "list" or standard price, which is the usual price charged by other bookstores. Yet the University Bookstore has a double advantage over such other stores: it pays neither city real estate taxes or corporation taxes, and the bookstore is — supposedly — not run primarily for profit.

Yet one commercial bookstore can afford to offer discounts of up to 10% to university students, while the University Bookstore cannot.

One argument that the Bookstore have advanced in the past against any such reduction in prices — the opposition of the publishers — is no longer valid, since such opposition is now illegal.

The objection that what the other bookstores lose on discounts on textbooks they make up on boosting other prices is not borne out by the facts.

The Bookstore does have one legitimate reason for their high prices: they are forced as the official university bookstore to carry a large number of texts in very slow moving lines which must add considerably to their costs.

As for efficiency, there is great room for improvement in the speed and quality of the service in the bookstore. It is not clear that the staff is familiar with the stock of books on hand or as efficiently managed as it should be.

It is to be hoped that the current SAC investigation into the Bookstore will throw some light on the reasons for its policies, as well as providing some relief for the students.

AND WRITE

Why, Oh Why?

The Editor,

I should like to make the following points regarding Mr. Fleischmann's regrettable parking problem and his resulting pain in the neck, which he described in The Varsity of Nov. 10.

The fact that the parking space is near Hart House is no logical reason for suggesting that part of the money paid to maintain House facilities should be spent for extra parking space.

Also, why should the 85% of the students who use the TTC or walk pay for the parking of those 15% who drive?

Open a parking lot yourself Mr. Fleischmann. Perhaps you can operate it profitably. At least you will be able to park your car without getting a scraped rear fender.

Light On CUP

The Editor,

As a NFCUS exchange student from UBC I would like to shed a little more light on two of your comments in CUP Runneth Over. First, the Bellingham invasion by UBC (or vice-versa) is always a big event at UBC (similar to the Queen's Varsity feuds) and it is no wonder that UBC students would go after Western Washington (Bellingham) goal posts.

Second, the no-drinking policy, is, I believe, written into the UBC Constitution (point 3 under discipline if I remember right) though at dances it is often honoured more in the breach than in the keeping.

Capek's Play

The Editor,

It was with surprise that I read Mr. Rockman's review of R.U.R. in Friday's Varsity. I have no comment to make on Major's play but Capek's could use a more critical analysis. When the curtain closed on "Adam and Eve," the two adjectives that occurred to me were "manipulated" and "sentimental."

I will only sketch the most obvious faults.

I view manipulation to cover the "5 minute" proposal—the invaluable formulae, basis of a billion dollar industry, available in the one document only and accessible to the caprice of Miss Glory—the fantastic harmony in that little band of men and the one woman they all loved. By sentimental, I refer to Capek's shaky scientific edifice supported only by the most blind, unreasonable faith, the faith of men who would make relative truths their god.

Doctors Chop Down Woodsmen Druckman Gets TD In 6-2 Win

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Meds ended their season on a winning note last night by edging out a 6-2 win over Forestry. The victory evened up the Doctors' record at 2 wins and 2 losses.

The Medsmen, forced to make up a 2-0 half-time deficit, scored their TD in the 3rd quarter on a one yard quarterback sneak by Paul Druckman. The touchdown came after a heated discussion between the Foresters and the officials. Doug Baird of Meds had carried to the Forestry one yard where he was hit and fumbled. After unpling the players, referee Barry Fine discovered that Baird had the ball between his legs. However, 2 Woodsmen also had their hands on the ball. Fine ruled that Baird was in possession and on the following play Druckman scored. Forbes Andersen added the extra point.

Forestry scored their points on a 2nd quarter safety touch. Kicker

John Fowler of Meds, after fumbling the 3rd-down snap on his own 5, ran behind his own goal-line and was tackled by Jim Osbourne.

Osbourne was a standout on both defence and offense for Forestry. He did the major share of Forestry's ball-carrying and intercepted a Meds pass. Doug Baird; Paul Druckman and Larry Edwards starred for Meds.

The loss ended a drastic season for Forestry which lost all its 4 games. It should be remembered however, that Forestry has a very low enrollment and are thus to be congratulated on fielding a team that gave its utmost in all 4 games.

Wrestlers Start Training

The Senior and Intermediate wrestlers have commenced training, under the guidance of coach Kirk Wipper and his able assistants Jack Amos, Harry Holm and Phil Radel. Radel was formerly with the Penn State squad as heavyweight and will give special help to men in the heavyweight division here.

Returning to the fold this year are the 1955 champions Walter Kami-Lakahara at 123 lbs., Paul Hickey at 157 lbs., and Bobby Waugh at 191 lbs. Other senior members returning are: Jack McQuat, who is moving up from the 130 lb. class to the 137 lb. class; Veteran Rae Smith at the 147 lb. class and John Wesley, who made the senior team at 177 lb. in his first season.

Intermediates who will try to move up to the senior squad are Freeman Roth, the 123 lb. champion, Jim Dart at 130 lbs., Joe Procter at 147 lbs., Ben Hooyes, Captain and 157 lb. champion, Jim Rowney, John Bell and Bill Chykaliuk, a former top-notch competitor for the Blues.

Anyone interested in trying out for the squads should contact immediately the senior manager, Charles Logue, or the coaches any evening after five o'clock in the wrestling room in Hart House.

Vic Loses 18-2 To Sr. Nurses

In the first game of the evening last night at the OCE gym, Senior Nurses downed Vic Jr. in a fast hard-checking game.

The ladies in white and the arts-types battled it out during the first half and it appeared as if it was anyone's game for both teams seemed evenly matched. At the end of the second quarter, the score was 5-0 for the nurses. The second half saw more outstanding ball, as the nurse's forged ahead.

Marni Jones was a powerhouse for the "Florence Nightingales" as she intercepted pass after pass. Outstanding guarding was done for Vic by Mary Buckley and for the Nurses, by Ruth Eisenburg. High scorer of the game was Sandra Ricketts. Marilyn McNeil sank the lone basket for Vic.

on the sideline

By FLO MIDDLETON

The week of November the 28th will witness the oddest intercollegiate sports event for the ladies of this university in the annual national bowling tournament. Its distinction is that it is a telegraph tournament and that the members of the intercollegiate team stay in their own home town to play and never meet their opponents. Bowling is even better off than the usual run-of-the-mill intercollegiate sport as it is the only activity which sees participation on a national level.

The host university is responsible for the compiling and sending out of the results after each university has sent in its teams' totals. Last year there was a grand total of ten Canadian universities taking part in this unique competition.

The system is simple and every gal on campus has an opportunity to get in on the fun. You do not have to be a queen of the local bowling alleys or the star of your neighbourhood or church bowling league. You do not even have to have taken bowling as your option in those first year PHE classes. The only qualification is that you must be an undergraduate of this university. Of course, we do take for granted that you have bowled at least once before in your life.

If you are interested in this sport and would like to get in on the tournament, all you have to do is whip over to the Midtown Bowling Alleys, Monday, Wednesday or Friday this week or next, for some practice. In order to bowl free of cost, for the University Athletic Association foots the bill on these days for those interested in the national telegraph tournament, approach your bowling "rep" on your college athletic executive and she will give you a card that will admit you free of charge to the alleys.

Having arrived at the alleys, you report to the staff member in charge and after you have tried your hand at knocking the pins down, you will hand in your score sheet. Ladies, you must turn out to these practices, because it is from the girls that bowl during the next week and a half that the five girls will be chosen that represent Varsity in the tournament.

If your score is one of the five best, you will bowl the week of the 28th of November and during that time you will bowl only three games. Your total score plus the four other scores of your team mates will be totaled and the results will be sent to the host university where all the totals of the competing universities will be compared and the college with the best will be declared the 1955-6 bowling champion.

Last year, Toronto was third so come on gals, let's see if the Blue team can't be first - take your bowling shoes on now and show that we can strike victory.

Interfaculty Summary

St. Mike's A's moved a step closer to UC Firsts in interfaculty lacrosse action yesterday afternoon, whipping Meds Firsts 8-5.

Kurt Russell potted three goals for the winners while Bolls scored two and Donovan, Wheeler and Shepherd added one each. Smith with two, and Jones, Schatz and Bull with one apiece scored for the Doctors.

In a lone game in University League volleyball competition SPS A's overwhelmed St. Mike's in straight games 15-0, 15-1.

Bookstore Prices are Higher

UofT Bookstore Volumes Dearer Downtown Gives 10% Discount

Books may be bought at lower prices in a downtown store than at the University Bookstore, students are finding.

An investigation by two Varsity reporters yesterday showed that prices at this store are generally the same as those at the University Bookstore, but students are given a 10 percent discount on presentation of ATL cards.

This would mean a $30.00 saving to a medical student on the purchase of $300 worth of books during a six-year medical course.

There was a 10 percent discount at the University Bookstore until 1949, when the Macmillan Company of Canada began to raise objections. At that time John Gray, Managing Director, said then that the Macmillan Company would withdraw their books from the University Press Bookstore to protect retail booksellers in Toronto who were suffering from a loss of trade due to the discount.

This boycott of the Bookstore was abandoned in 1950 when the discount was decreased to five percent.

With still further objections from the Macmillan Company the discount policy was dropped completely by the Bookstore.

In 1953 the Retail Price Maintenance Act which came into effect forbade any wholesaler or manufacturer to maintain the price of their products. This means that if a bookstore were to give discounts, the wholesale company or publisher cannot legally object.

Officials of the University Bookstore say they cannot offer general discounts because of the loss in profits which would result. This loss would have to be paid by the University.

A special committee of the SAC has just been appointed to investigate Bookstore prices and efficiency.

Eye Witness Report

Ninety-nine students entered the University Book Store between 4 and 5 p.m., yesterday, a Varsity reporter found.

While the busiest period was from 4:00 o'clock to 4:20, when 47 people passed through the store, the quietest period was 4:20 to 4:35 when only 16 people entered. Until 4:35 the three salesgirls provided prompt service. But the service from 4:35 to 5:00 was slower, for although 36 people entered the store during that 25 minute period, only one salesgirl was available at the book counter until a second salesgirl returned from her coffee break at about 4:54. At 4:45, 14 customers were waiting for service from the one salesgirl.

Ryerson Librarian Shuns Reporters

Toronto (Exchange): A Ryerson librarian, the daughter of retired Chief of General Staff Guy Simmonds, reports she was held prisoner for some hours on the night of Friday, November 4.

Ruth Simmonds, who works in the Ryerson library from 5 to 9 each night, says that a young man, who was apparently trying to rob the library, kept her typing in a back room until closing time of the library, and then made her take him to her lodgings. After drinking coffee, he left at 10:30 p.m.

Ruth said she thought he had a gun. He put his hand in his pocket, where there was a bulge. Apparently he said he had a gun, but no one knows whether he did or not.

Last Friday, when she heard that reporters were coming down

Ruth Simmonds locked herself in the washroom of the radio and television arts building. She said she didn't want to speak to them.

Telegram reporters called the police, and the police came and spoke to her. Finally she came out and talked to reporters, but she still didn't want her picture taken. Photographers were waiting at both entrances of Ryerson to get her picture as she came out.

Prices High, Service Rotten

Students Want Reform: Cut Rates, Added Staff For UofT Bookstore

When University of Toronto students notice any discrepancy between prices at the University bookstore and those elsewhere, they find that prices range higher at the University store.

In fact they find the bookstore "outrageously expensive;" the prices "rotten." This was revealed last night when 22 students were questioned about the Bookstore.

More concrete examples of the difference in price were given by students who said that the Vic bookstore is cheaper, with perhaps a 30 difference on a $5.00 book; and that sports books required for Phys Ed courses are cheaper at Wilson's.

Students were almost unanimous (18:4) in their opinion of the service at the bookstore. It is "grim . . . snail-like . . . disgraceful . . . absolutely appalling." Or, at the very least, "poor." Four students gave grudging approval—"fair . . . O.K. . . . not bad."

The criticism was accompanied by a number of constructive suggestions. (Only one student considered the case "hopeless"). Apart from the inevitable requests for better-looking salesgirls, the suggestions were aimed at providing efficiency and economy.

Most common advice was that the bookstore make a greater effort to gauge the number of students likely to require texts and to have a larger number of the prescribed texts in stock.

Ideas for speeding up the purchases of books, once in stock, included a catalogue of the books available, a ticket system as in the Arbor Room, and open-shelf self-service or at least an orientation course for the salesgirls.

The idea of a SAC-operated bookstore was approved by fifteen of the students, provided it was strictly non-profit and had adequate space, supplies and staff. One student believed it wouldn't last; the others made no comment.

Other suggestions were part-time jobs for students; a permanent second-hand book department; and indirect lighting.

HH To Debate University Place Of Professionals

The controversial question, "There is no place in the university for technical faculties," will be debated at 8.00 p.m. this evening in Hart House.

John Douglas, III Vic, speaking for the motion said, "Technical and arts faculties are a burden on each other organizationally; the presence of each intimidates the other until they pose and posture their real character away."

Speaking against the motion, Woody Friedlander, S.G.S., said, "When the day comes that an artisan can look upon women as something other than a Freudian concept which he cannot understand, then he can tell the gentlemen of the technical faculties to leave these 'hallowed halls.'"

The other speakers will be Barry Watson, graduate, for the motion, and Leo Gray, IV S.P.S. College chapel choir will sing a group of liturgical motets in the opening concert of the series.

Trinity Chapel Evening Concerts

A special series of five evening concerts of liturgical music will be presented during the week of Nov. 20, following consecration of the new Trinity College chapel, it was announced yesterday.

The evening events will be presented in the chapel, which seats 300 people, and will be in two parts: an Evensong at 6 p.m., each night followed by a special musical evening beginning at 8 p.m.

On Monday, Nov. 21, the Trinity College chapel choir will sing a group of liturgical motets in the opening concert of the series.

Suicide For The Outnumbered?

Insanity A Factor

Suicide Problem Unresolved Debated By Meds And POT

Divided opinion was the keynote of the informal debate, Is Suicide Justifiable?, held Tuesday night in the POT Huts between the Meds and the POT students. The discussion ended unresolved.

Leading the discussion, the Rev. James Cunningham, Chaplain of Hart House, traced the various forms of suicide through the ages, from self-willed Euthanasia in famine-stricken primitive societies up to fairly modern times, when in 1897, in Tiraspol, Russia, twenty-eight people buried themselves alive to evade the census which they thought sinful.

"In the Eleventh Century," said the Chaplain, "the body of a suicide victim was not allowed burial. After being dragged through the streets, it was strung on the gallows to decay in the sun. As late as 1783 such bodies were buried at the crossroads with a stake piercing them to prevent their ghosts from rising."

Opinion varied among the scholars cited during the debate. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote of abortion and infanticide as a cure for famine in the South Sea Islands. Emmanuel Kant thought suicide an insult to humanity in general. But Sir Thomas More felt it justifiable in great pain or incurable disease.

"Christianity values the individual life too highly to accept suicide as justifiable," said the Chaplain, "No man is a law unto himself."

"Suicide to me is an admission of defeat," said Paul Walfish. "But the person who commits it must think it's justifiable at the time."

Gwenn Leslie (III POT), said, "Physical handicaps and illness should be regarded as a challenge, and not as a reason for taking one's life."

"What about Socrates?" asked another POT student.

"He probably followed the Stoic Philosophy which regarded suicide as the highest virtue," commented the Chaplain.

"If suicide's an act of insanity, what is the criterion of mental illness? Who really knows if a person is mentally ill or not?" asked one POT student.

All agreed that was the major problem.

Battle Of Money At Washington U

Seattle, Washington (Exchange): Students at the University of Washington are battling with the Administration for control of the student council.

In a proposed constitution revision, control of student finances would be entirely in the hands of the administration, with the university president having final say in all council financial transactions.

Off-Campus Profile

Queen's Editor

By ROBERT BROWN

The pert, pretty editor of the Queen's Journal hardly looks the part of the chief of a college newspaper.

But appearances are deceiving, for Frances Code's pleasing face and figure and her demure manner hide an intensity of purpose and a determination that fit her well for her position.

Miss Code, a five foot seven brunette with blue eyes, comes originally from Noranda, Quebec. She has had four summers of journalistic experience on a small English-language weekly in her home town, while during the school term she has worked her way up on the Queen's Journal to the position of Editor.

The Queen's Journal, one of the oldest college papers in Canada, is published by the Queen's Alma Mater Society (the equivalent of our students' council).

Frances said that the Journal possesses exceptional freedom in its editorial policy. "The AM&S never interferes," she said.

Even though the Journal is only published twice a week, Frances still finds that it is a big job to be editor of a college newspaper.

"I sometimes get extremely tired of the whole thing," she said. "But—it is interesting work."

Frances doesn't know what she'll be doing when she graduates from her honour English course this year — although it probably will be some aspect of journalism, or a related subject. But she does know what interests her while she is still at Queen's—and that is the development of a responsible student body, governed by the students themselves.

"We have an exceptional amount of student government at Queen's," said Frances, "but we don't use it enough." Frances is deeply concerned with student democracy: she has written several articles in the Journal about student vandalism, and about the Queen's student court.

Queen's student body has a special student court—composed solely of students—that acts to discipline Queen's students for actions "unbecoming to a member of the AMS."

Frances is vigorously opposed to the rowdiness that has marked Queen's activities for some years past. The Journal has come forth with some strong words against student vandals' irresponsibility.

Although journalism takes up much of her time, Frances does find opportunities for other activities. She was in Toronto this last Friday night to attend a concert of the London Philharmonic Orchestra, and dropped down to the Varsity office for a friendly visit.

Of course, she headed back to Kingston the next day for the Yates Cup finals.

Runneth-Over

Toronto: Student high jinks are not confined to the senior inter-collegiate level alone, apparently. A Ryerson student was recently arrested by Waterloo police following his attempt to bring down the Waterloo goal posts after a Ryerson-Waterloo game. The student was released after a warning by police.

Parades, bands, and floats greeted the Ryerson students in Waterloo. Although the Students' Council President described the Ryersonians as an "orderly group," five windows on the train to Waterloo were broken. The passenger agent on the train said it was "the best group I ever had. They were very orderly."

Edmonton: The engineers on the University of Alberta campus kidnap boys, not girls. Four out of five candidates of the "King of the Campus" were kidnapped by the engineers before the Mardi Gras ceremony. The fifth, a medics student, was reported hiding in the basement of the hospital, well guarded by his fellow classmen.

The Gateway reports that the engineers will probably return the candidates, after they have crowned their own King. "This plan may be altered at the whim of the engineers," the Gateway reports.

London: Paint has been sloshing around the Western campus again. This time it was Western students themselves who were the artists — Arts students to be exact. They painted up the steps leading to the Science building.

"Campus vandalism" was the name applied to the painting job by Dr. Frank Stilling, the principal of Arts and Science.

Engineers '57 and Meds '60 have been other offenders along the same line, already this year, the Gazette reports.

Montreal: Plans for the winter carnival at the Sir George Williams College are going full steam ahead. Student exchanges with both Canadian and American colleges have been arranged by the College, and it is planned to hold the carnival the same week as the exchanges. This way the exchange students will also take part in the Carnival.

Halifax, Nova Scotia: The Dalhousie Alumni are out to raise $100,000. A donation of $5,000 has started the drive off with a bang. A new men's residence is one of the projects the funds raised will support.

Power Needed By UN Council Say Students

Twenty-five students from U of T, McGill, Carleton College, Royal Military College and Assumption College attended the conference "The UN in Review" held at Hart House from Nov. 11 until Nov. 13.

Brigham Day, conference leader, led discussions on the admission of new members to the United Nations and charter review. Mr. Mowat, who had just returned from Israel, spoke on the tension between Israel and Egypt with special emphasis on the accelerated arms race. Marvin Yelber, national president of the UN Association in Canada, spoke on the need for an informed public.

In his summary of the conference's findings, Brigham Day concluded that collective security within the UN was insufficient. Charter review is difficult because of the present mutual distrust between the USA and Russia. As it becomes increasingly difficult for the foreign ministers to solve the world's problems, more power is being given to the General Assembly to take action on security measures.

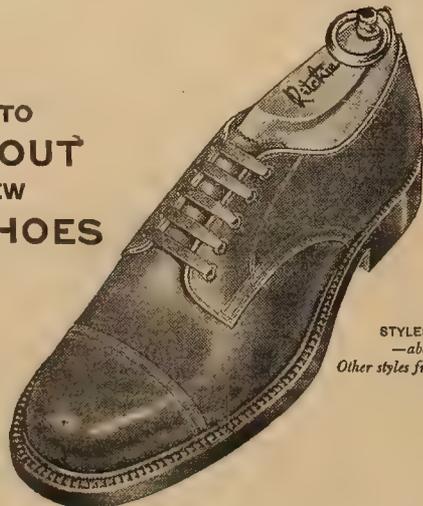

Hillel Lecture Held Tonight By Hebrew Prof.

"The American Jewish Community—An Estimate" will be the topic of the second major lecture of the Hillel foundation series, to be held today in the Museum Theatre.

Dr. Oscar I. Janowsky, eminent historian and Professor of History at the College of the City of New York, will deliver the lecture starting at 8:30. He has for many years taught history and international relations, and is considered equally at home in traditional Jewish lore and current Jewish history.

He has travelled extensively in Europe, and throughout the Balkans and Israel, to observe conditions there.

Trinity Topped 27-7 By Skule Meet Again For Playoff Position

By JOHN BROOKS

The Trinity Black Panthers, hard hit by injuries, called a pair of ex-TCS'ers out of retirement for their game against SPS yesterday, but it wasn't enough as the men of Skule rolled to a lopsided 27-7 victory. The victory created a tie for the third and last playoff spot in Group One, and the same two teams go at it again this afternoon to decide which one will go into the Mulock Cup quarter-finals on Friday against the UC Redmen.

It was SPS all the way as they unleashed a powerful ground attack which completely smothered the Panthers. Dave Smith was the lone bright light on the Trinity offence as he raced around the ends for several long gains, but it was to no avail. Skule, facing elimination from further competition, was up for this one and was not to be denied.

Trinity opened the scoring in the second quarter when Brook Ellis hoisted to the deadline for a single point. The Engineers roared right back to take the lead when successive passes to Russell and Eckles sent the latter over for a converted touchdown.

In the second half, Skule broke loose and piled up the points. They picked up a Trinity fumble, and on the next play, Eckles gathered in a pass and went all the way for a major. Aldie White, who played a top defensive game for the Panthers, broke through to block the convert try.

A bad snap paved the way for the next Skule touchdown as Selby barreled through the line to score standing up. Smith added another score for SPS before Ellis struck Johnny Cumberland with a pass to the right flat and the little wingback scooted all the way for a touchdown. The final score by SPS was a major by Stewart which MacDonald converted.

Interfaculty Summary

Two upsets occurred in the opening day's play in the Interfaculty soccer playoffs as Pre-Meds and Forestry took twin 1-0 victories.

The Doctors turned back Victoria in a quarter-final fixture in the First division on a goal by Goldman. Van Bors scored in the second-half to give Forestry a berth in the second Division finals, after defeating highly-rated Knox.

Skule Seconds turned back Meds Seconds 5-0 in a noon-hour lacrosse contest yesterday. Rosebrugh did the hat trick for the Engineers while Lansky added two more goals.

One volleyball contest in intramural league competition saw UC Omegans overcome Trinity A's in three games, 15-2, 10-15, 15-13.

Victoria Tops SMC 7-6 Creates A First Place Tie

By JOHN VOJTECH

Victoria came through with a last game victory over St. Mike's yesterday by the narrow margin of 7-6. The victory tied the two teams for first place in the Group One standings. At a meeting held last night, however, the first place spot fell to Vic by lot.

As for the game itself, it was a thriller. Early in the first quarter, Ian Macpherson picked up an Irish fumble on the St. Mike's twenty yard line. Consecutive smashes by Ron Bertram and Paul Newman brought the ball to the Irish two. Frank Ebenhardt jugged the ball over for the major. Norm Williams converted. In the second quarter Ebenhardt picked up a single point as Frank Kielty was rouged behind the Irish goal line.

The Irish came to life in the second half, but were unable to finish off scoring opportunities. With three minutes left in the game Frank Kielty intercepted an Ebenhardt pass on the Vic thirty and carried the ball to the six yard line. Jack Fenn brought the ball to the one from where

Interfaculty Squash

In the Interfaculty Squash opener last night St. S.P.S., Dents A and Dents B were all winners.

In the first match Clarke, Orde and Brown of S.P.S. trounced Sr. U.C.'s Grey, Goldhar and Weinrip 3-0.

The Dents A team of Hoppe, Witchei and Kerr squeezed out a thriller over Sr. Meds, with Hoppe losing to Charendoff 15-10 and 16-14, Witchei splitting the first two with Hamilton 15-6, 12-15, and winning the final in overtime 18-14, and Kerr eking out two wins by identical 18-17 scores.

The final match saw Dent B's Lerrich, Schodt and Kruezel handily defeating M. Wilson, Willoughby and Schlesinger of Trinity A 3-0.

Vic freshies was Pru Smith with four points followed by Sandy Grant with three points.

Both teams showed strength in the defense lines, with the fast PHE guards just slightly battering the lanky Vic guards. However, there was an obvious lack of coordination in the game as it became rougher as the time ran out.

UC Beats Victoria 39-2

The UC Jr.-Sr. team took the Vic Juniors to town last night basketball-wise with an overwhelming 39-2 victory. The Vic guards were completely defenseless against the skilled attack of the winning forward line.

Elaine Bassin and Marnie Littlejohn led the scoring action by netting 14 points each. They were assisted offensively by Dorothy Schiller and Jean Simpson. The UC defensive ranks showed powerful play by Meredith Robinson and Lou Martin. The lone scorer for Vic was Di Wingate, who found the basket only once in the opening minutes of play.

In the following game PHE I took over the floor to outshoot the league-leading Vic Freshie A team by a close score of 15-12. This game was more or less a life or death affair for the athletic types, who fought for every point they made. The Vic team put up a tremendous fight to remain undefeated but they were no match for the dauntless Phys-ed goals.

Coming out on top was Ruth McIntyre who sunk seven points for the victorious team, while rookies Jackie Davies and Jan Tennant combined to add another eight points. High-scorer for the

The female swimming squad is off to Buffalo this week end for a meet with the girls at the University of Buffalo. This is quite an occasion for the swimmers because it is the first, in what we hope is one of the many firsts this year, in starting invitation meets with sports teams across the border. It is another first for the swimmers in that they will have a chance to discover their ability against a comparable college swim team, not just one of the Toronto collegiates.

Since the interfaculty meet, the girls have been practising, and as yet the swimming team that will represent the old blue and white at the Intercollegiate Meet at London on November 26 has not been named. The official list of swimmers who are to make the jump to Buffalo has not been posted, but a tentative list has been submitted. Those who are likely to be splashing their way Sunday are: Jan Cunningham, Ada Macpherson, PHE II, Barb Glack, PHE III, Jo Housely, St

Mike's III, Jean Crowther, Sandra Grant and Pat Laird.

Off the boards will go Patti Evel and Rosemary Whealy. Trinity II, and in the synchronized routines, Barb Heenan will be swimming the solo number and Joan Davies and Mary Lou Nash, the duet. Best of luck, girls!

While these ladies are away swimming for Varsity, those who did not make the team or, for that matter, any girls who are interested in swimming either for pleasure or with a summer camp or recreation job in view, should be thinking seriously of signing up for the Bronze or Silver Life-saving Classes that will be held next term. Also, the Red Cross Society will be conducting an Instructors course here on campus, starting the first of next term and the registration is limited; consequently, it is a case of first registered, first issued of getting into the class. Having your instructor's certificate is almost a must for any camp job, so girls, don't miss out on this opportunity. phone the PHE office at WA 3-9530 now.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Among the fifteen-odd members of this year's football Blues who will be collecting parchments come next spring and heading out into the cold grey is one young man who comes under the somewhat colorless title of an unsung hero.

We are thinking of none other than B. Brock, as he is officially termed by the boys who depend on his initiative and foresight, who, among other things, has been kind enough to afford us a small space on the floor of his hotel room these past football week-ends. Fortunately it is the other things he's done that have contributed so much to Varsity football in the past two years, and it is for this tireless effort that we'd just like to pat Bob Brock, the Blues' student manager, on the back with a few quasi-kind words and hope he's not embarrassed.

Bob is currently completing a year at OCE after graduating last spring from PHE at Toronto. Before casting his lot with the other 10,000-odd students on this campus he attended Bloor Collegiate Institute where he starred on the half line in football and spent some time at guard on the basketball court. In the fall of 1953 Bob managed the Baby Blues and then joined the seniors in 1954, continuing as manager this season.

Saturday morning Bob paused in the middle of ordering a bus to transport the football team from the La Salle Hotel to Richardson Stadium. With some pride, he pointed out that he had always been with a winning hall club, forgetting the years at Bloor. This and countless other stories have wandered down this way with Bob's aid and it's a sure bet that we'll be among a number of people who will miss young Robert's presence when next fall rolls around.

We know it's not much of a tribute for a guy who's done so much but there it is. Happy now, Brock?

Believe It Or Not

. but we have before our very eyes a copy of last Friday's Queen's Journal, and if we are to take any stock in what we read in this rag the University of Toronto's undergraduate press and several staff members thereof must be looking and feeling a little bit foolish about now.

Word has it that these same staff members had already prepared a layout page for Monday's victory issue last Friday, and not only that, but the lucky Varsity staffer who was assigned the chore of covering the Intercollegiate final was supposed to have already written his story and was only attending the game in order to get in on the extra-curricular benefits of a football week-end in Kingston.

Further information disclosed in black headlines in the aforementioned journal, proclaimed the somewhat unfortunate fact that the Sports Editor of the Varsity had been rash enough to be applied, to post a small wager on the Blues. One-eyed Benny, reported the Queen's newspaper, had been swamped with bets on the Blues. Just to clear things up we would like to point out that we have discovered in past years that One-Eyed Benny is the only person on this campus who bets on the Blues, and we happen to know that he had trouble doing this because nobody would bet on the Blues except the editor of the Varsity whose wager, so she says, was in the form of an inspiration to the Blues.

Unfortunately the rest of it is all too true. We have a personal interest in the thing because, for those of you who believe in the operation of a jinx, we happen to have been responsible for the outcome of Saturday's game. But that is neither here nor there, and the first feeling of disappointment that pervaded the atmosphere of the small group gathered in 212 after the game has at length been replaced by a somewhat grown-up attitude of "that's that for this year."

Maybe it's wrong to write like this, revealing the secrets of the trade and all that, but when you come right down to it, the whole thing was rather ridiculous.

Blue Notes Queen's Gaels lost nine regulars this season, among them Al Kocman, Ron Lane and Lou Bruce. Blues graduating next spring are: John Bodrug, Wally Buchak, Don Cheeseman, Dave Cresswell, Earl Ford, Don Johnston, Phil Muntz, Dick Risk, Jack Rogers, Jim Rowley, Fred Smale, Don Smith, Bob Waugh, Harry Wilson and John Wismer. Wilson and Rowney may go to OCE, though. Baby Blues open the hockey season Saturday against East York Lyndhursts in Varsity Arena. Students can get in for twenty-five cents and an ATL card. hockey Blues begin their defence of the Queen's Cup against McGill December 9th in Varsity Arena. Plan early to attend.

Hockey Seconds Have Top Club Meet Lyndhursts Saturday Night

With the sports interest focused on the approaching Mulock Cup finals, Varsity Arena has become a beehive of activity as the various hockey teams prep for their season openers.

Coach Jack Wheldrake has the toughest job, as his Baby Blues open their schedule on Saturday night against the East York Lyndhursts. The Seconds have foregone intercollegiate play this year to enter the reorganized Toronto Hockey League Major Series. This series has been defunct for the past few seasons, and will operate this season with what promises to be a top-notch brand of hockey.

The four teams comprising the league are, besides our Baby Blues, the Lyndhursts, who have had a taste of Russian hockey somewhere along the line, Kingsway Lumber and Pickin' Chuckin'. East York and the Lumber boys have, according to Wheldrake, good clubs, and he feels that his boys will benefit a great deal more from the competition they will face this year than they possibly could from play in the Intercollegiate Intermediate League.

Wheldrake tells us that his big weak spot to date is on the blue line. The team seems fairly well set in goal, and up front no trouble is forecast at all.

At least four former Junior "A" players will wear Baby Blue uniforms this winter. Larry Stacey played with Hap Emms' Barrie Flyers last year, while Grant Mills has had experience with the Port Arthur Beavers. Mike Elik was on the roster of St. Michael's Majors last season, while Dunc Brodie played with the Biltmore Mad Hatters, of Guelph.

The "spirit" of UC seems to be as dead as ever. University College has always come in for a lot of ribbing on its lack of school spirit. An editorial in The Varsity of 1885 took UC to task for its lack of vitality and spirit, and successive generations of critics have kept up the complaints.

These critics call UC the very soul of apathy and the incarnation of laissez-faire. They lambast UC for its lack of college "ethos" or spirit, and they deride the poor turnout to UC athletic events and student society meetings.

These same critics could be heard snickering behind their backs when a group of Skulemen walked off with the UC Speaker's Chair last Monday, and no one at UC seemed even vaguely concerned.

These poor, ignorant critics.

For UC does have a school spirit — and that spirit is the lack of "Spirit." UC's strongest tradition is the lack of tradition. UC's ethos is founded in freedom, and dedicated to the liberty of the individual.

Indeed, UC's spirit is the most vital and dynamic on the campus, as is evidenced by the disproportionately high number of scholarship winners, business leaders, statesmen, and other distinguished personages who have graduated from the college.

For the very essence of University College is freedom from social pressures, from established dogma, and from institutionalized restraint.

The very lack of "spirit" or of enforced unity has enabled each student to develop in his own manner, free from the rah-rah tradition of other colleges and schools, or from the cloying spirit of an "established" religion.

This spirit of individual freedom produces smaller crowds at football games, but it also produces wiser citizens.

Why should UC concern itself with the loss of its chair? Why should any sane and sensible student go hooting and whooping across the campus in search of a hunk of wormy wood unless he has been so indoctrinated by "spirit" that he believes that the loss of six feet of carved-up walnut means the loss of a school's honor?

It seems far more likely that the impairment of the ability to think and act independently will prove to be a greater loss to a college than the abduction of a chair.

Even though UC lacks its chair, it does not lack its liberty.

life begins at 40

It's tough to be young. It's not yet a crime, but it comes pretty close to it.

The entire educational system of the country is supposed to be geared to the production of a youth that can think for himself. And yet — just try a little independent thought!

You'll be labelled with every epithet from pinko to reactionary. The only socially acceptable course is to parrot the opinions of your seniors.

President Smith has urged us to be characters. Some of us tried it, and succeeded in burning the odd effigy, growing the odd beard, and writing the odd epic in a garret.

And we were then referred to by our elders as everything from vandals disrupting international relations to punks with ingrown inferiority complexes.

But on the other hand we can't even be dowdy and conservative in peace. The least sign of conformity, of conservatism, of respectability is met with cries that the youth of today is losing its adventurousness — that it is becoming security-conscious and staid.

You just can't win.

The Intimacy . . .

That Is Oxford

BY IAN MacDONALD

Mr. MacDonald is a lecturer in the department of Political Economy and has just returned from two years on a Rhodes Scholarship reading Philosophy, Politics and Economics at Balliol College, Oxford, England.

"Good morning, Sir. You will find that your 'scout' has prepared your room on Staircase 10." Such was the tone of my first greeting in Oxford, a greeting which marked the beginning of a healthy affection for the Balliol College head porter, the late Cyril King.

"You will find your Tutors' notices on the Fellows' board in the porch, Sir."

After some effort at deciphering the virtually indecipherable, I discovered that my Tutor "would be pleased to see me at twelve noon on the following Saturday."

Among the scatter and flutter of these notices — an early sign that Oxford is a place of academic rather than administrative efficiency — I unearthed a note naming my "moral tutor," a card with the hours of chapel service, and a declaration that "the Dean would be in his office to conduct official business between 12:30 and 1:30 p.m."

Furthermore, much to my surprise I discovered that my mailbox was stuffed with personally addressed letters and leaflets exhorting me to join the University Sculpture Society, advising me of the advantages of the Oxford Union, persuading me to consider the ideological and practical advantages of the various political clubs. Later, I was to discover that one could spend one's entire career at Oxford with the various College and University societies; on the other hand, membership in such exclusive clubs as Vincents' — a University Club for those distinguished in sports — was a privilege that extended to only a chosen few.

In surroundings apparently so stoic in all other ways, it was heartening and comforting to discover that even in a University of 7,000 one was to be first and foremost an individual. In turn, of course, the success of an undergraduate's career at Oxford rises and falls with his ability to maintain some degree of individuality.

There is a strong prejudice against someone who "does nothing for the College." On the other hand, there is no silly resentment against nonconformity or the attainment of heights in unusual ways. The Scholar is as admired for bringing a First to his College in the University examinations, as the Rugger player for gaining the distinction of being a "blue" and representing the University against Cambridge.

There is none of the perfunctory necessity of being a "good mixer" at all costs provided one can make others aware of one's presence, however unusual that presence might be. Of course, the complete crank or the conscious actor is as much of a blight in Oxford as he is here.

Undoubtedly, the reason for both the intimacy and the individuality of Oxford is the nature of the College system. Divided into twenty-three men's Colleges and five women's Colleges, Oxford affords the opportunity to live in a small, tight, compact community. In fact, it would be possible to compress one's entire University life within the four walls of the College that shield the quadrangle from the inquisitive glances of the outside world (except at the height of the tourist season).

The fellowship of dining in Hall, the heated soul-searching conversations at tea, or over midnight coffee, and the clash of mind and wit between undergraduate and tutor, stimulate, in fact, often intoxicate the keen mind.

Of course, such a system is not entirely without fault. Each college has its own ethos made up of a number of intangible elements, and nourished by a stream of tradition that is as pervasive as it is perpetual. Although, as we have said, slavish acquiescence, conformity and the suppression of individuality are no part of the Oxford system, yet it is a particularly resolute individual who is not in some way transformed by the corporate spirit of the college to which he belongs.

Each College member comes under influences not quite the same as those of any other College, and for better or for worse, he bears its mark. As Dr. Johnson pointed out long ago: "There is here, Sir, such a spirit of progressive emulation: the students are anxious to appear well to their tutors; the tutors are anxious to have their pupils appear well in the College; the Colleges are anxious to have their students appear well in the University." In Oxford, this progressive emulation has been most fruitful!

Happily, in my own college, Balliol, the greatest force making for unity is its fundamental disunity. It is a strange phenomenon that around Oxford, one can usually recognize a Balliol man (apart from his scarf or tie) although each is quite unlike the other.

To find oneself in Oxford then, one has not far to seek. One is constantly surrounded by a series of prototypes rather than the machinery of mass production. In turn, the proximity of example if nothing else molds one into one's own prototype, combining the elements which appear most desirable, although some inevitably choose all that is undesirable.

Despite the present size of Oxford, then, one is rarely, if ever, aware of the anaesthetic power of large numbers; there is always faculty for deep and buoyant breaths of intellectual ozone, albeit these breaths are often fettered by the "dank humours of the Thames Valley" — a subject of description itself.

To this single feature of Oxford, I must attribute the difference in University life from the one we know at Toronto. As a student at Toronto, I had felt too often that as a member of a large lecture class I was on a one-way street of communication. As a lecturer, I must say that the isolation is even more remote and infinitely more dangerous.

As a result, the demands on student and teacher must be even greater at Toronto than at Oxford. Fortunately, these demands do not appear incapable of fulfillment, for the very recognition of the problem by both sides can go far in overcoming it.

Subversion!

The Editor

This is a response of several lower class students who have gone from kindergarten to fourth year university in their opprobrious: shabby hand-me-downs.

We feel that the article regarding U. of T. dress represents a gross invasion of personal rights, and an attempt to subvert free expression. Perhaps before C. Finlay casts his scurrilous remarks upon our apparel he should attend to the collar and shirt he has been wearing since kindergarten. His remarks indicate a narrow-minded, prissy, and altogether unwarranted attitude towards the University.

The Ryerson SAC President should be tweaked by the nose for his magniloquent vociferation concerning our blighted state of disrepair.

THE CAT'S MEOW

BY DAVID DUNSMUIR

"THRICE THE BRINDED CAT HATH MEW'D"; Robertson Davies, Tyrone Guthrie, Tanya Moiseiwitsch, Boyd Neel. Clark Irwin, Toronto. pp. xii: 178. $5.00.

In three short years, the annual record of the triumphs and tribulations of Ontario's Stratford Shakespearean Festival has grown from an over-hasty and over-boosty occasional piece to a cogent, critical, and eminently entertaining account of artistic progress.

In solid, unpedantic criticism, the work has progressed to an amazing extent. Man-about-letters Robertson Davies again takes the main critical burden upon himself, and gives one the suspicion that this year he is being

"DEMOCRACY IN WORLD POLITICS"; Lester Bowles Pearson, S. J. Reginald Saunders. pp. 123. $2.75.

The wisdom of attempting to discuss the role of democracy in world politics in little more than 100 pages is highly questionable.

It appears that Mr. Pearson is aware of the magnitude of the topic and refers to it as an "omnibus" which he proceeds to overhaul with his "rusty" scholarly equipment.

It is necessary to remember that the book contains the material delivered at the Stafford Little lectures at Princeton earlier this year.

The public utterances of one nation's leading international figure could scarcely escape the blight of triteness and the confining force of national and supra-national political exigencies. For anyone expecting profound and original insights into the problems of democracy, there is much in the book which is disappointing.

The writer's discussion of the limits which must be applied to any scheme of "instant massive retaliation" is timely, if superficial.

One regrets that the book's abundant scope is surpassed only by its lack of depth. There can only be sympathy for Mr. Pearson who has sincerely tried to take the "longer, deeper view."

Judged within its own limits, however, the book is reasonably good and for brief moments—as in its treatment of Asia—achieves a distinct success.

It should at least be chewed.—C.C.B.

Protocol...

"CANADA YEAR BOOK, 1955"; Dom. Bureau of Statistics and Queen's Printer, Ottawa, pp. 1374; insets, maps, index. $3.00 (special student edition, $1.50).

The Canada Year Book is a fascinating document to anyone with a sense of curiosity about Canada, for it reveals in its own prosaic way the vast growth and potentialities of our nation.

But the Year Book—put out annually by the Federal Government as an official record of Canadian statistics and facts—also reflects a few typically Canadian idiosyncracies: for instance, the makeup of the federal government is described and analyzed under the incorrect and constitutionally unsound headings of legislative, executive, and judicial. These headings, while applicable to the U.S. system of government, simply do not apply to the Canadian situation, modelled after the British pattern. Perhaps the fact that the Year Book is prepared in the Department of Trade and Commerce under the direction of U.S.-born C. D. Howe has something to do with this error.

The information contained in the Year Book is well displayed, and on the whole is adequate in scope. Its "special articles" are usually informative although not particularly well-written. However, most of the statistics are not as recent as the 1955 title would indicate.

Its 1374 pages hold up a mirror to Canada and its statistics provide a ponderous cross-section of our nation. If you are really interested in your country, this book is a must.—R.D.B.

a little more honest in his opinions. If he didn't like a principal's portrayal, he says so, and then blessedly gives the reason for his opinion. Stratford apparently can now stand some genuine criticism—a fact that is a promising thing in itself.

Director Tyrone Guthrie, designer Tanya Moiseiwitsch, and conductor Boyd Neel have added their diverse talents to Mr. Davies' scholarly wit, combining to form a bundle that has been beautifully packaged by the publishers. In matter and manner, the Brinded Cat is undoubtedly one of the finest things ever to come out of a Canadian publishing house.

An interesting change has been made this year by the substitution of Miss Moiseiwitsch's original costume sketches for Grant Macdonald's palely impressive portraits of the past two seasons. I for one am all in favor of the change—though the designer certainly cannot be called a highly skilled graphic artist, still there is a real appeal in these roughly blocked-out figures, while the reader who has seen the plays has an unusual opportunity to set stage-achievement against intent. He can see how the fused Guthrie-Moiseiwitsch genius conceived the characters, and compare those conceptions with the finished product as tempered by the actor cast in the part.

In general, as aided by the widely varied design-illustrations, this year's record has tried to show how last season was, rather than what it was. Hence, no more empty enthusiasms, but a careful analysis of each of the three plays (The Merchant of Venice, Julius Caesar, and Oedipus Rex); also an examination of the successes and failures of the inaugural music season by Boyd Neel, Dean of the Conservatory and founder and conductor of the Hart House Orchestra, who recaptures in the telling some of the miraculous scrambling that surrounded Stratford's first year.

A heartening concern with the art of theatre again figures prominently in the book, with notes by Mr. Davies on that now-nebulous thing, a Canadian style in acting, and by the itinerant team of Guthrie and Moiseiwitsch on how they went about staging Oedipus. By far the largest essay in the book, the Oedipus treatise ranges from the bases of Greek myth and theatre as ritual to the difficulty of placating an actor who is growing too tubby for his costume. Those reading the article should feel a deepened respect for Guthrie's directoral aims—and, incidentally, for his literary style.

Paintings..

"CANADIAN PAINTINGS IN HART HOUSE"; Hart House Art Committee, University of Toronto Press, pp. 50; illustrated, including nine color plates. $3.50.

For members of Hart House who have been impressed by the large number and intriguing qualities of the paintings on its walls, and for non-members, whom the House's long-standing policy of apartheid has prevented from seeing them, we have a spot of encouraging news. The University Press, under the aegis of the Art Committee, has put out a reasonably cheap book of prints containing most of the collection.

The habitue will recognize such old companions as Young Canadian and Dark Girl, whose mournful eyes have suffered with him through many a tasteless sandwich. He will recall Frederick Varley's Open Window, whose spaciousness contrasts strangely with the Gothic narrowness of the real ones.

But he will also be amazed at how few of the paintings he has ever seen. He may even be seen, in the near future, chasing down the labyrinthine corridors of the old building, looking for Gordon Webber: Design No. 5, Vermont 1947 or Cornelius Knighoff, Coureur De Bois.

The book has sections on different periods of Canadian art, and scholarly dissertations by Joseph McCulley, Vincent Massey, and others. It would make an excellent Christmas present for anyone interested in a broad survey of Canadian Art, as well as a nostalgic souvenir for passing generations of Hart House dwellers. P.G.

Like the Festival itself, this annual record has continued to increase in scope. Mr. Davies, responsible for this year's coy title, perhaps even now has begun ransacking Shakespeare for next year's. He promises it won't be "Thrice and once the heige-pig whin'd", we wait, agog.

Musical Flairs

By MICHAEL OLVER

"MUSIC IN CANADA"; ed. Sir Ernest MacMillan. University of Toronto Press: pp. xii: 232. $5.00.

Is there any significant music in Canada, and is there such a thing as Canadian Music? The answers, as they appear from this first attempt at a survey of Canadian musical endeavour are 'Yes' and 'No,' respectively.

This survey is a collection of specialized articles, each covering a different aspect of musical practice and performance, as it appears in this country. It sets out, rather self-consciously, to fill a long-felt want, but, I am afraid, does very little towards showing the current state of musical tastes and opinions, and the effect that this state has on the training and maintaining of artists, the encouragement or the discouragement of composers, and so on.

The temper of most of the articles is factual, but to no great extent analytical, and very few of the writers attempt to present a problem, either with or without a solution. A notable exception to that generalisation is the essay on Music Education by Dr. Arnold Walter, Director of the Faculty of Music of this University, and president of the International Society for Music Education, sponsored by UNESCO. This essay offers some interesting philosophy about the development of Music Education on the North American Continent, but deals, of course, with principles rather than with practice.

An article which stands out among those dealing more with factual presentation, and which tries to explain some of the current problems involved in its topic, is that on Film Music by Louis Appelbaum, Musical Consultant to the National Film Board. Here the writer discusses matters favourable and unfavourable to the film composer, and shows why so many young writers are interested in this challenging branch of the profession.

John Beckwith, in his contribution, Recordings, was faced with the ungenial task of turning a record catalogue into an interesting article, and he manages well enough to make one suppose that he would have been better employed on some more profitable subject, less considerably treated here. Colin Sabiston and Miss Pearl McCarthy put forward some stimulating aesthetics in Opera and Ballet, and Dr. Marius Barbeau, while not pretending to any conclusions in his discussion of Folk Song, realizes his own hope that he has shown how immensely rich is the field.

For the rest, it would seem that three articles, carefully planned, could have done the work of twelve, and left space for more enlightened criticism and comment on current musical affairs, and where they may lead us. A singularly weak link in the chain, on a subject that perhaps calls for a more careful approach, and a more critical analysis than any other, is the article on Composition, and it seems that here is the place for Mr. Beckwith's talented appreciation.

It is a real disappointment to find that this book has fallen so far short of its ideals, and one can only hope that it will not be too long before the resources are available to bring out a second, drastically revised, edition of Music in Canada.

Border Battles

"The Struggle For the Border," By Bruce Hutchison; Longmans Green and Co., Toronto pp 489 $6.00 and Co., Toronto, pp 489, $6.00

BY ROBERT BROWN

The Struggle For the Border begins its introduction by proclaiming that it has little to do with any theory of History, and Hutchison has been as good as his word.

This is a book of romance, of drama, of adventure, and (primarily) of personalities; but it still manages to cast considerable light on the men and the forces that have gone to make up this nation. It is the story of a nation's difficult birth and struggling childhood, with a few glimpses into its coming adulthood. The Struggle For the Border is the struggle for Canada for a separate nation and a separate people.

There is a good deal of truth in Hutchison's thesis that the history of Canada has been an unending struggle for separateness; and it is this thesis about which Hutchison has woven his book.

The book is one of personalities; and it is probably at once its main strength and weakness. The strength comes from the dynamic vitality and directness that Hutchison achieves through recounting the story of Canada through the character and actions of a few men who have helped make this nation.

The weakness comes from the fact that I cannot quite bring myself to believe that Canada's early days were populated by as many fascinating characters as Hutchison claims; and from the distorted and discontinuous picture of history that is given through this personalized approach.

There are other errors of omission and commission which could be dwelt on at some great length. But these are of only minor importance because the book is on the whole both interesting and informative; and this double virtue covers a multitude of sins in any book.

Gifts of Sentiment and Surprise

One's A Crowd

The passing parade, whose quicksilver caprices so often come and go before we have had time to stand and stare, has been successfully brought into captivity by Ruth Draper and her "company of characters" (Miss Draper allegedly in her seventies) can be seen at the Royal Alex this week for what is purported to be the last time. I for one can see no reason why she should stop now.

If I were faced with the task of placing her art for a younger audience who had never heard of her before, I would set it somewhere between that of French mime Marcel Marceau and comedienne Anna Russell. But unlike Marceau, Ruth Draper is no wordless pantomimist, and the characters she creates do not spin wordlessly through the seven ages of man in less than as many minutes. And unlike Anna Russell, she is not a blatant and rousing funny personality who can elicit waves of laughter.

She rather utilizes a genuine mimetic talent and a persistent sense of mild humour to create people who talk and act their way through a bounded social milieu ("Darling, how are you? whether it be a slice of life she gives her audience is a meagre one—to some, it may seem hopelessly dated—yet her own version of the comedic humaine has a flavour which I thought the last twenty years of sociology textbooks had completely killed.

I can hardly go on to say that Ruth Draper is truly "great" for her scope is undoubtedly limited. However, she accomplishes a great deal out there alone on the stage; the delight of it all is that her art stays within its own self-appointed bounds and never strays into the totally sublime or the totally ridiculous.

She gives us a luncheon party where tongues clack incessantly like castanets, and where everyone is on a diet. Slowly she rounds these people out until we begin to feel a twinge of understanding for them. Then, just at that moment when our deeper emotions are beginning to rally a tumult of sympathy, Ruth Draper drops her creations and goes on to characters and situations altogether different. These transitions, whether they took place on the stage or were accomplished by a swift and almost miraculous entrance and re-entrance, were the best part of the evening for me—sudden deaths, in which everyone seemed to go on talking, and the audience was left waiting for that someone else whom they knew would be along in just a minute.

Fittingly enough, the final sketch, In a Church in Italy, concluded with no exit for Miss Draper; as an Italian peasant kneeling before the altar, she raised her hands slowly, pietalike, towards the audience, in an all-inclusive gesture barely visible through the dimming stage-lights.

MODERN JAZZ AT MASSEY HALL

In the last few years the big-name jazz promoters have favoured concert tours featuring several big-name jazz groups or bands. This usually fills the house, especially if the artists are picked on a "something for everyone" basis, but the musical quality usually suffers since no one group plays long enough to warm up to its peak of performance. Such tours have also been plagued by groups led by big name artists like Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington, nowadays but sad shadows of their former glories. And lastly, owing to the number and diversity of the groups, the evening as a whole has lacked that excitement on the part of both musicians and audience which contributes so greatly to the success of the playing.

On Monday night, however, a large audience at Massey Hall heard the Modern Jazz Show of 1955, in which three small groups overcame all the obstacles to present a wholly successful concert. The cause of success was the groups selected — none of them was led by celebrities but ages backed by inferior sidemen. The Gerry Mulligan Sextet featured the brilliant arrangements of its leader and was dominated by his first-rate technique, and highly developed ability as a soloist. Mulligan's arranging talents were best displayed in Sweet and Lovely. In this piece, as elsewhere, Mulligan has written in terms of a melodic line for each instrument, forming the melodic and harmonic fabric of the arrangement.

The Australian Jazz Quartet did not live up to the promise of its recordings. Concentrating on the novelty effect of their unusual instrumentation and on their versatility, they played very little of musical significance although all of it was interesting and cleverly conceived. What was lacking was extended solo work or arranged development of the thematic material.

The Quartet was soon joined by Carmen McRae, a singer who has that effortless air about her which bespeaks complete technical assurance. To this are added taste and inventiveness in the treatment of her material and a distinctive voice quality. However, Monday night's performance seemed to lack some of the more subtle and subdued aspects of her style. Possibly she chose to emphasize the more brazen, swinging side for concert performance in a large hall.

The second half of the concert was filled by the Dave Brubeck Quartet. Dave has been coming under a lot of criticism lately for the eclecticism of his style and for the fact that his group does not use the sort of swinging rhythmic base usual in jazz. Dave's characteristic style is not deeply rooted in jazz—it has equally important elements it derived from the European classical tradition. However, Monday's performance seemed to show that Dave is moving towards a more jazzlike style—a more swinging beat was noticeable a number of times and elementary thematic material of a blues sort seemed to be oftener present. The quality of his performances was unusually even—none were comparable to his best, but all were well done. Paul Desmond was similarly in good and characteristic form.

The evening ended with an altogether incredible and delightful improvised duet by Gerry Mulligan and Paul Desmond when the former joined the Brubeck Quartet to play Tea for Two. The manner in which Desmond and Mulligan, both superb improvisors, complemented each other, was especially satisfying to hear.

Brubeck and Friends

Interview With D. Brubeck

By TED SCHAEFFER

Dave Brubeck came into the room of press people gathered at, of all place, Helena Rubinstein's plant, and immediately everyone swarmed over to that corner to meet the man who is so prominent in the field of modern jazz.

Brubeck is tall (for a Californian, though not for a Texan), has dark eyes, dark horn-rimmed glasses and black hair. He was eager to find a joke and his wide mouth often came into a grin, as he gave his hand genially to each person in turn.

Then naturally there were questions.

"Yes, he would class himself with the romantics. Some people had complained that his music was too optimistic. He liked it that way. Besides as someone pointed out, pessimistic music runs the danger of being called communistic these days.

As Turk Murphy was also in the gathering, the question naturally came up the scope of more progressive jazz compared to the scope of the traditional Dixieland jazz.

Both Dave and Paul Desmond, the relaxed alto-sax in the Brubeck quartet were of the opinion that there was a greater challenge in progressive jazz simply because the harmonic structure and tempo and melody are freer, depend upon the ideas of the minute.

The age old question of the artist's creation for self or others also came up. Dave sided with the school that says that art is communication. Canadian audiences he added, were very receptive and often more courteous than those he has met in the United States.

In another part of the room Dave was still debating the question of artistic creation with a young man who was becoming rather heated on the subject. However time was up. The jazz men were off.

As we all proceeded down the stairs at the Rubinstein plant, Dave noted the huge fig tree in the stair well and learned that there were only two in existence.

"Only two," he said. "And they kept them separated."

Up, Up, and Away

Here the new 60-cycle switchboard for Hart House is seen being unloaded by a huge crane at the side door of Hart House late last night. The electric switchboard, weighing 7,000 lbs., is for the 400 volt power sub-station being installed in Hart House for the changeover from 25 to 60 cycle.

Eye Witness Account

In one hour sixty students entered the University Bookstore, yesterday, making an average of one student per minute. Between 4:15 and 5:15 p.m. there were two salesgirls on duty all the time, although there were seldom more than six people at the counter at once. As a result of this no one person was kept waiting more than five minutes.

The majority of the customers, about 35, came between 4:50 and 5:15 p.m., but even at that time there were never so many at once that the salesgirls could not deal with them.

In the interval between 4:45 and 5:00 p.m. only six customers came in, while at one point there were no customers waiting to be served at all, the only occupants of the store being two people browsing around, looking at the books out on the counters.

This is a contrast to the situation observed during the same period on Monday and reported in yesterday's Varsity.

Treasure Van and Carabin Highlight Small EAC Meet

Students at the University of Toronto are just beginning to recognize the importance of external affairs work and interests, Thomas Symons, Dean of the University Residence, told last night's meeting of the External Affairs Committee.

However, he admitted that many students, particularly in Engineering, still resented the organizations which attempted to maintain contact with other students. This he attributed in part to the large number of initials which confront them, but also to their unwillingness to learn what the abbreviations stand for.

Symons, who as an undergraduate helped form the EAC eight years ago, described its history and importance, with special reference to the role it played in keeping the student well-informed after he left University.

Main business of the meeting was the presentation of the itinerary for the Carabin weekend,

Dec. 1-4, when 40 University of Montreal students descend on Varsity for four days of discussions, dinners and sightseeing. The visit will be returned in February, when 40 U of T students journey to Montreal.

The sparsely-attended meeting also heard reports on the national scholarship campaign, Students' Discount Service and Treasure Van.

Treasure Van, a sale of mid-east handicrafts, comes to the campus Nov. 28 to present exotic ornaments, pottery and jewelry.

Smith Accepts WUS Headship Of All Canada

In accepting the National Presidency of W.U.S.C., Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto, has sent the following message.

"No formal inauguration or installation could match the significance and, indeed, the warmth of the greetings "to our President," signed by the delegates, both English-speaking and French-speaking, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, attending the W.U.S.C. Assembly in Saskatoon.

"In accepting the Presidency I pledge my best efforts to work with all of you in advancing the humanitarian objectives of the W.U.S.C. The principles of the Golden Rule are found in all the great religions of the world. The success of the W.U.S.C. can be measured by our fulfillment of that ideal—common to all mankind."

(signed) Sidney Smith

The W.U.S.C. has transmitted $500.00 for emergency relief in Japan, India and Pakistan. In Japan more than seventy students of Niigata University, host to last year's Japanese seminar, are destitute as the result of fire following a typhoon. In India some 15 million are affected by flood and 1500 students are in need of aid.

The Treasure Van, however, is having a record breaking success. Sales have increased and many have doubled because of the relatively low price, good quality and wide variety of goods.

Fund raising campaigns for the W.U.S.C. have been held at Alberta and Manitoba. To aid the drive the U. of A. paper "Gateway" advocates a $1.00 W.U.S.C. student fee at Registration time. Such levies are now in effect at U.B.C. and Saskatchewan.

Dance Finale For SHARE Nursing Leads Campaign

There is no football game this weekend, but there will still be a dance at the Drill Hall Friday night.

The dance, sponsored by the Circle K Club, is being held as a grand finale to the current SHARE campaign. As at the pep rallies there will be square and modern dancing till midnight. All proceeds will go to SHARE.

SHARE chairman, Carl Anderson, said yesterday that: "Initial returns as they come in prove very promising. We hope to reach half our goal tomorrow. Over 400 reps are approaching staff members and students, and they are assured they will reach the objective this week. The objective is $7,500.

Monday night's SHARE banquet was the largest ever held. Nursing went all out in sales for Other sidelights on the campaign are the popcorn sales held by first year POT, and the higher shine drive which the higher years are hoping to have this week. The banquet, selling more tickets than any other faculty. This puts them far ahead in their race with Skule.

Latest comment on the Skule-Nursing contest: "The Engineering Society is extremely dismal as Nursing pulls farther into the lead. But," said SHARE rep Bruce Wallace (IV SPS), "We are confident the engineers will uphold the honour of Skule in a last ditch drive."

Last year Nursing collected 91.6% of its objective: SPS made 11.2%.

Carabin Lunch

A luncheon at the Royal York Hotel sponsored by the Toronto Telegram is another feature which has been added to the coming Carabin Weekend.

Donna Lough, Weekend Exchange Chairman, said last night that at least ninety applications had been received.

A Selection Committee meeting was held yesterday, one will be held to-day and another tomorrow. The results of these meetings are expected to be announced Thursday or Friday.

Question UN Charter Revision At Caledon Five-College Meet

This weekend at Caledon Hills Farm representatives of the U.N. Clubs of five Canadian Universities meet for the fourth successive year to discuss the achievements of the United Nations, under the general theme "Review."

Brigham Day, the former National Secretary of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, just returned from a summer in Yugoslavia, acted as Chairman and led a discussion on the Charter.

Mr. Herb Mowat, the President of the Canadian Association for Israel, spoke on the Israel-Egyptian problem. He said that the balance of power in the Near East, which had been so carefully sustained by France, the U.S., Canada, and Britain, was ruined by Russia's sale of armaments to Egypt at fantastically reduced prices.

Mr. Marvin Gelber, president of the United Nations Association for Canada, spoke on the influence of public opinion on U.N. decisions, and told the delegates that they help change Canada's attitudes by expressing their opinions as a group.

Dr. James Kidd, President of the Canadian Association for Adult Education, spoke in conjunction with Mr. Harry Edmison, President of the United Nations Association Toronto Branch on the technical assistance programmes of the U.N. Both speakers were very critical of the amount of assistance which Canada feels able to give these programmes, and their arguments were so strong as to inspire the convention to pass a resolution on Canadian foreign policy to be forwarded to Lester Pearson.

The delegates, from McGill, Montreal and Toronto Universities, Assumption College, Carleton College, and the Royal Military College, all joined equally in the discussions and the Saturday-night dance. Thanks to Carol MaHood and the other cooks, meals were served, and a harmonica-player from RMC provided accompaniment to the dance.

One delegate who cut his foot open with an axe and refused to return to town until the end of the weekend!

HH Votes Engineers To Stay Not Just 'Do-It-Yourself Kits'

By a vote of 26-14 the debaters at Hart House last night defeated the motion "There is no place in the University for Technical Faculties." Professor A. P. C. Adamson of the School of Architecture was the Honorary Visitor. He said, "Our problem is that there is an urgency in everything we do in Canada. In our urgency we do not have time to be wise. We should be wise in our actions but we must be technically efficient."

Barry Watson, graduate, speaking for the motion said, "A university does not exist to disseminate knowledge but to disseminate the way to knowledge. The university trains thinkers, the technical faculties present the set of instructions to a universal do-it-yourself kit." "A university is a community of members who undergo a search for knowledge," said Leo Gray, IV S.P.S. for the opposition. "As a community it must be related to the society surrounding it. If a university is to have any relation to the society around, it must have the technical faculties in it." John Douglas, III Vic, asked the debaters to "divorce these faculties and bring an end to the common law marriage which has brought dire results."

Attacking the motion, Woody Friedlander, S.G.S., said "It is really not important which faculty a man graduates from. It is much more important that it be said he graduated with honors from the faculty of life."

J. B. Bickersteth, ex-warden of Hart House, was introduced at the debate and then called on the debaters to "guard the traditions of this House and also its independence."

Save Those Precious Dimes Stores Hesitant On Discount

The student discount scheme, sponsored by the nineteenth NFCUS conference, has so far met with mixed success.

The scheme, designed to give students discounts at stores which are members of the scheme, is still in the planning stage, but has already gotten much criticism.

Reports from the University of Western Ontario indicate that it will be a failure in London. A story in the Western Gazette intimates that the local merchants are antagonistic to any discount scheme.

On the other hand, the McMaster Silhouette carried a story last week revealing that through the efforts of NFCUS, students would probably receive discount rates at Hamilton movie theatres.

As far as Toronto is concerned, SDS officials have begun approaching local merchants, again with but varying success.

One of these feels that "apparently because of pressure from local trade groups, SDS has had difficulty making headway with retailers near the campus."

Some of those opposed claim the scheme provides unfair competition. Students on the campus were quick to deny this criticism.

"We can only state that students are definitely underprivileged class in our rich country," said one.

Such a scheme as the NFCUS has proposed is nothing new. Peter G. Martin, NFCUS president, had this to say to retailers who are hesitant: "You have more to gain than to lose from SDS. You may lose ten percent for four years, but will probably save yourself a hundred dollars for 14 years after that."

Bedbugs? Student Flees Turkey

How do you say in Turkish: "Can you lend me the price of a plane fare to Vancouver?" It's a bit of Turkish that Paul Romeril, a UBC student, is now bobbing up on in his Turkish phrase book right now.

Romeril was given the chance to go to Turkey on an exchange program. Since he is extremely fond of New Eastern culture, according to the Ubussey, he accepted the offer. But there was a small catch when he arrived in Turkey he found that he was expected to stay in a hotel with whom he had arranged the exchange had done so without informing their university administration.

Matters became somewhat tense when it was learned that the student who was responsible for the arrangement had become involved in a riot a few weeks earlier and had fled the country.

In such a situation, one might have easily become discouraged. "The food was terrible and there was no lodging to be found," Romeril reported, except in what he described as "a bedstead-studded hotel."

However, things are now becoming rosier for Paul. The World University Service has heard of his plight. A preliminary gift of $200 was sent to him. The Canadian branch, through its president Louis Perinbam, has contacted headquarters in Geneva.

Perinbam said that Geneva has sent Romeril "a considerable sum of money . . . enough for his passage home."

Unless the "exchange" student decides to remain in Turkey and continue to enjoy Turkish hospitality, he will be home soon, possibly in time to see his class in its graduate.

Back To Bookburning? Berate Brash Banning

Student representatives from the Arts colleges do not approve of the Catholic Women's League move to ban "indecent" books from stores, a poll conducted yesterday indicates.

Opinions of four students questioned varied from calling it a "very questionable misapplication of energy" to a "good idea with doubtful methods."

Controversy arose after 500 members of the CWL started a campaign Tuesday to eliminate 300 "objectionable" books from bookshops and news-stands. Members, mostly housewives, began to check dealers' books and periodicals against a list "Blacklisted" by the National Organization of Decent Literature of Chicago.

Any condemned literature was brought to the attention of the vendor who was requested to return it to the distributor.

Gay Sellars, president of the University College WUA, said dramatically: "As a student of the Liberal college, down with censorship! I am not in favor of boosting sales by banning books in Boston."

She felt that government regulations against pornography were quite sufficient. "Then we go from definite to questionable — and then to book-burnings," she said.

Yvonne Adams, senior vice-president of St. Michael's College, thought the campaign was a good idea "to protect the interests of the young people by preventing them from reading the books." But she thought that some other method should be used to "prevent unfavorable publicity."

Fred Caleren, President of the Victoria College Student Union, said: "The aim should not be to ban books which somebody thinks are harmful, but to encourage the reading of books which everyone knows are worthwhile."

"This must be done in the home and in the school — not in the corner store by a board of self-appointed censors. The program would then reduce to book-banning being unnecessary.

"It isn't up to the CWL to set standards or to apply them to other people's children. Let them take nasty books away from their own children."

Ann Jeffrey, SAC representative from St. Hilda's College, refused to comment because there's enough trouble on campus. "I mean Timmy and St. Mary's without my adding to it."

SHARE Auction Bikini Bought Bidding Bold

A woman took a bikini to the SHARE Auction on Wednesday to have an object to bid on. Duke of Edinburgh was the bidder yesterday for $4.00.

The occasion was the SHARE Auction held at the Hart House.

The highlight of the sale was bidding on the head of John the Baptist plus a peg from the convocation chair. The beating of drums heralded the arrival of this auctioneer from Wycliff College. Keen bidding upped the price to $21. Timmy took the prize.

A Brownie camera and a book were sent straight from the movie "I Am a Camera" went for a buck.

A bikini bathing suit, alleged to be direct from the sale of Christian Dior. Only men bargained until one brave young man gained applause. Ato he, he.

Especially for men were a dems: a shaving mirror with a cat attached, and the original T. Zoo leopard skin. The latter had double purpose of breakfast bib and football-game foot-warmers.

NFCUS Out

Winnipeg. (CUP): Students at the University of Manitoba have voted to secede from NFCUS.

In a student referendum taken on Tuesday, students voted 1284 to 888 to withdraw Manitoba from the National Federation. This will mean the withdrawal of Manitoba from NFCUS, and the loss of over $2000 in fees to NFCUS from the U of M. 4,600 students.

OUR READERS WRITE:

On Israel, I have judged

The Editor, Varsity: "Suffer yourselves to be blamed.... it is not a right, it is a duty." Alright if you say so! In lieu of what was written by Mr. Gabriel Heday in the Nov. 14th issue of The Varsity may I ask: Just how "ignorant and misinformed" does Gabe think his "antagonists" are when he says "For example you will find in those countries slavery, mutilation for theft and decapitation for non capital crimes. The existence of elaborate systems of discrimination and fearful poverty. It might be new for you to hear that in some Arab countries labour enjoys neither the right of free association nor the protection of elementary social legislation" that was in the days of Davy Crockett. "I recollect the cheering and contented Beduins welcoming the Jewish pioneers and their water pipe lines in the Negev desert in 1946."

It is easier to make water go uphill than to have a Beduin (few of whom still roam the deserts) resort to artificial means of getting water! Yemen and Tunis are about 1200 miles (border to border) from Israel; I can't see how "the weak-looking, persecution-ridden peddlers" got there. I wonder if they used flying carpets' Aladdins lamp maybe?

How does he expect us to "judge" when he plays the role of both parties in the court; how fair a verdict would that be? To that end may I suggest reading two of the dozen books written concerning the subject he discusses. "What Price Israel" and "The Arabs" by Atiya (both in the library).

Does he think it is fair to call his "antagonists" "misinformed or ignorant." Maybe he is. What say Gabe?

Ray Kurkjian, SPS

Please!

The Editor, The Varsity:

Mr. Kaplan of the Art Committee seems somewhat confused. Who has threatened him? Is it the students from "Various parts of Central Europe"? Or is it this unnamed group of taste-pacers which seems to know so well what is and what isn't in the realm of "art."

Sure the War films are propaganda, but they are at the same time information—clear, black and white, and tragic.

Let have the remaining two of the series, please.

compulsory music?

Plato, in a work with which many of you, Dear Readers, are familiar, mentions "Music" and "Gymnastic" as the prerequisites of a sound education. This university has gone only half way to the attainment of Plato's ideal.

"Did you ever observe," Plato has Socrates ask a stooge, "the effect on the mind itself of exclusive devotion to gymnastics?"

"Yes," replies the gentleman, "the mere athlete becomes too much of a savage..."

Therefore, instead of subjecting our frosh to two hours a week of compulsory PT, we humbly suggest that, for one of those hours, they be frogmarched up to the Hart House record room by a qualified Mus. Bach. instructor, wearing special acoustically treated Blue and White uniforms, and exposed to the most edifying music obtainable. Points could be awarded for membership in bands, glee clubs, and choral societies.

Otherwise, the University of Toronto will have no one to blame for any future outbreak of savagery among its graduates, except itself.

Five Teams In Mulock Playoffs UC Meets Senior Skule In Opener

It's Mulock Cup time again! On Friday afternoon the Redmen of University College go against the Blue and Gold of Senior Skule at Varsity Stadium in the lone quarter-final match. Game time is 1:30.

Back on the fourth of October the Intramural Sports Committee decided that the first three teams in Group One and the top two in Group Two would meet to fight it out for the title. Little did they realize the mixup that would result. In the final standings in Group One Victoria and St. Mikes tied for first spot while Trinity and the Senior Engineers were deadlocked for third place and the final playoff position.

The first problem was dealt with Tuesday evening when a flip of the coin gave Victoria first place. The second problem was not settled until yesterday morning. Trinity was supposed to meet Sr. S.P.S. in a special playoff but early yesterday morning the president of Trinity's Athletic Association, Jim Loucks, announced that his school would withdraw from the finals because he felt that his injury-riddled team would not do as well as the fresh Senior Skule squad.

With all the difficulties ironed out, the schedule for the playoffs looks like this. The winner of tomorrow's U.C.-Skule tussle will meet Victoria next Tuesday. On Monday, a power packed Jr. S.P.S. squad engages the Irish of St. Michaels. The winners of these two contests will face each other in the big game one week from Friday. All playoff games will be played at Varsity Stadium and will begin at 1:30.

Saints Defeat UC With 42-27 Win

In the 5:30 women's basketball game at the Ontario College of Education gym last night, St. Hilda's Juniors downed UC Sophs 42-27. It was a fast, hard-checking game, high-lighted by many dead-eye shots and fast aggressive plays.

Penny Linell, the starry forward for the Saints started the scoring off and during the first half popped in five more baskets to lead the Saints attack. During the first quarter, the Saints were ahead not only in scoring, but on floor play as well and led the Sophs 12-7. Keeping up their fast and superior play, the Saints were ahead 23-14 at the end of the half.

The UC guard line was unable to stop the Trinity forwards headed by Penny Linell, who penetrated the line time after time for baskets. By the end of the third quarter, the Saints had found the basket so well as to lead 38-17. Continuing to play the superior brand of ball against the UC team, who were handicapped by lack of reserves, St. Hilda's were out in front 42-27 when the final bell went.

High scorer of the game was Penny Linell with 22, followed by Pam Miles with eight points. For UC, Anne Miller was tops with 12.

Injuries Force Trinity Out

Early yesterday morning, the president of the Athletic Association at Trinity College, Jim Loucks, announced that due to injuries Trinity was forced to withdraw the Black Panthers from the football scene. This decision allows SPS Seniors to enter the semi-finals against UC tomorrow.

The following is the text of the letter received by Mr. J. E. McCutcheon at the Intramural Office:

"Due to injuries, the coach and players of Trinity College feel that it would be silly to play the game tonight. If we won tonight, we would be in no condition to play Friday. Therefore, we feel it would be better for the league if we dropped out of the running and allowed a fresh Sr. SPS team to represent our league in the playoffs.

(Signed) Jim Loucks."

Interfaculty Summary

UC racked up an almost unbelievable 11-0 win over Junior Skule in Division I soccer semifinal action yesterday. Norm Dysart paced the victorious Redmen with four goals while Rintoul picked up a hat-trick. Singletons went to Heal, Scott, Brown and Golubar. In other soccer action, Emmanuel rolled over Law to the tune of 7-0. Kirkwood paced the winners with four, with Filsinger, White and Bauld counting one apiece. The victory gives Emmanuel the lead in the Division II semifinal.

Box lacrosse action in Hart House saw SFS I overcome Meds I by an 11-6 score. Reese scored six times for the Engineers, Wawrichuk had two, and singles went to Folby, McMurphy and Chabrian. In the other lacrosse game, Jim Wright won the game singlehanded for Meds VI as he scored both goals in the doctors' 2-0 shutout over Victoria II.

On the squash courts, Law edged out Trinity B 2-1.

Basketball Blues To USA Meet Top College Teams

A tour of action against several of the better American Basketball teams will mark the first real tests of the Varsity Blues for the coming season. Starting December 1st, the Blues will play three teams from in and around New York in a series of almost certain defeats. But it isn't for glory that the Blues will be travelling, rather for experience, testing of their patterns and to pick up pointers from the high-class opposition they will meet.

On paper this year, as in the past few, Varsity's Blues stack up well and seem good bets for the Intercollegiate honours this year. Paper judgments, however, have a bad record and it is impossible to properly assess the Varsity chances.

To go anywhere of importance the Blues will have to find the big man they have lacked for the past two seasons. With Ray Monnot and John Girvin back at Western, trouble looms for the Blues unless they can come up with someone to give these fellows competition around the basket. One Blue possible is John Dacyshyn, high man for last year's Baby Blues, but at the moment John is out with torn ligaments, though he will be around when the season opens. Al Vaichulis, one of last year's big Blues is taking a while to round into shape, so that the big man problem has yet to be solved.

The Blues have their usual abundance of small fast men, good ball-handlers and dead-shots. With both Pete Potter and Leo Madden back, supported by Rube Richman and rookies Joe Stulac and Gerry Edelist, they have probably as good a group of outside men as any club in the league, and very likely better. Adding to this bunch the medium sized giants like Vic Kurdyak, Doug Scott and Florian Matsaala, there seems to be a well-balanced club.

Varsity's stock defence, the zone, will have a boost from the rule book this season with the enlarged keyhole limiting offensive scope and cutting down the area to be defended. In this new situation the zone which has failed the Blues on larger courts may well be the league's most effective defence.

SCM Hears Frye Address

"Relations of Christianity to Culture" was the theme of an address by Professor Northrop Frye of Victoria College to an open meeting in University College yesterday.

Prof. Frye, who was sponsored by the Student Christian Movement, claimed during his talk that the student is engaged in a 'professional' activity when in the process of studying.

Turning to the importance of religion in student life, the professor explained that "religion removes the 'blinkers' from the intellectual seeker and helps him, indeed is necessary, when his fundamental categories dissolve as they must, somewhere along the line."

Prof. Frye told his audience that culture, on the other hand, with its intellectual honesty, "controls the tendency in one to defy a limited understanding of spiritual things."

There will be no issue of The Varsity on Friday, November 25; Monday, November 28, and Wednesday, November 30. A special 75th Anniversary Issue of The Varsity will be published on Tuesday, November 29. This issue will not contain regular campus news.

Beer Drinking At Football Games Debated By Nurses and Engineers

Beer drinking at football games will be the subject of debate between Engineers and Nurses today, as the resolution "That beer drinking at football games should be prohibited" comes up for discussion.

The debate begins at 1:00, in Room T 102, in the Mechanical Building.

Setting forth the position of the affirmative, Cathy Armstrong, (II Nurs.) stated, "We are of the opinion that the money, time and energy of these ardent citizens is being simply wasted away in profligate pursuits."

Her opponent, Nordy Morgenstern, (IV SPS), countered, "What might appear to be an extravagant waste is a mere display of that highly commendable, but rarely appreciated, true university spirit."

"The flying beer bottles at these games might be a thrill to some aeronautical engineers, but the danger involved in this pastime is apparent to all," warned Jose Smith, (II Nurs.), another speaker for the affirmative.

Ian Harrington, (IV SPS), had other views.

"Our sacred right to individual initiative is being usurped by these wanton Nightingales," was his opinion of the matter.

WUS Seminar Next Weekend

Mr. Hugh Gillis of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Mr. Tom Everly of the Toronto Daily Star will speak of "Press, Radio and Propaganda" at the weekend seminar at Caledon Hills Farm, November 25-27.

"Press, Radio and Propaganda" is the topic for discussion at the World University Service Regional Seminar being held the weekend after next.

Two students have been invited from each of the universities in Ontario and Quebec and also from the Buffalo State Teachers' College.

The cost of the weekend will come to approximately five dollars. Applications for the weekend can be picked up at the SAC office. Deadline for these is 4:30 p.m. on Monday.

UC Debate

The existence of a Canadian Culture will be debated today at 4:00 p.m. in University College's newly-renovated JCR as the UC Lit discusses the motion "Resolved that Canada's Culture Isn't."

Guy Fawkes Hero? Topic For Today; SMC-Vic Debate

One of the most famous incidents in English history will be debated tonight, when the Senate Club of St. Michael's College entertains the Victoria College debaters in an interfaculty tilt.

Commencing at 8:00 in Brennan Hall at St. Michael's, speakers to the resolution "That this house deplores the failure of the Guy Fawkes' Plot," will attempt to determine whether Guy Fawkes was martyr or traitor.

Outlining the government's position, John Pierce, (I Classics), had this to say, "Out of a glorious display of fireworks, resulting from a successful plot, a happier and less turbulent England would have blossomed. If this is treason, make the most of it!"

He is opposed by Bob Saunders, (III Mod. Hist), who commented, "Historical scholarship is on our side. These people are preaching sedition."

Richard Pegis, (III Math & Phys), a government supporter, quoted

"And they that ruled England, In stately conclave met; Alas, alas, for England, They have no graves as yet."

Carl Jaffary, (I Phil & Hist), who will oppose the motion, said, "If the honorable members of the government adopt the line which I expect, I firmly believe they should be impeached for high treason."

Physics Seminar MacRae Speaks Radio Astronomy

At a Physics department seminar in the McLennan Laboratory today, Professor MacRae will discuss latest developments in "Radio Astronomy at Jodrell Bank."

Jodrell Bank is the University of Manchester's radio astronomy station, where the world's largest antenna for the detection of radio waves coming from the extragalactic universe is under construction. Dr. MacRae attended a conference at Jodrell Bank last August and will talk on the scientific aspects of the conference.

The talk will be illustrated by coloured slides, and takes place in room 135, McLennan Laboratory, today at 4:00 p.m.

Gun Powder Plot

Debate Favours Guy Fawkes St. Michael's Not Intimidated

Amidst loud explosions, cries of "Point of order," St. Mike's debated the resolution "That this House should Deplore the Failure of the Guy Fawkes Gunpowder Plot." The upholders of the affirmative, represented by John Pierce and Richard Pegis, won a victory over the Victoria men—Wes Turner and Robert Saunders.

The first concern of the speakers for the opposition was that the crypts, vaults and cellars be searched. "An incredible slander has been foisted on the house," cried St. Mike's. Amidst pleas for search and cries of indignation because the Honourable Members from St. Michael's were wielding fencing foils, it seemed that the debate would never start. A mysterious man in a black, hooded cape crossed the hall, nodded to the speaker in order to gain his permission to cross the floor and then scampered off carrying a keg loaded apparently with gunpowder. Shortly afterward a loud blast was heard and the meeting was thrown into turmoil.

Although at one point John

Pierce, a speaker for St. Mike's, burned the chairman in effigy, the meeting ended on a friendly note with the members of the Opposition inviting the other team to a house-warming. A quiet and cordial blowing up of the House of Commons.

U.C. Parliament Debates Canada "Is" Culturally

Canadian culture is. At least, so think University College undergraduates, who defeated by a vote of 11 to 10 today the UC Parliament motion "Resolved that Canada's culture isn't." There were considerably more abstainers than usual.

Largely figuring in the debate were the Canadian beaver, held up by the opposition as the symbol for Canada and her accumulating culture, the griffin, suggested as an alternate symbol by the House, and an Eskimo translation of the Bible, as given in digest form by Rhonda Strauss, second speaker for the opposition.

Dave Dunsmuir, as Prime Minister of the House, lamented Canada's cultural chaos, with its "inchoate recognition of widely differing ethnic groups, failing to take the best of each, and instead trying to reduce them all to the lowest abysmal common denominator."

Orest Rudzik, first speaker for the opposition, pointed out that Canada's culture deserved the name, as a varied and individual ethnology founded on the best of Britain, with built-up strata laid by other ethnic groups.

Speaking for the House, Cathy Oliver pointed with pride to "provincialism," indicating that Canada was composed of "Little wide-flung glimmers of culture that do not make up one national illumination. The noble Red Man and the Eskimo had both had their individuality crushed by commercialism, and hence "Canadian culture was, and (we hope) will be, but at the moment, isn't."

Quoting German philosophy and Eskimo bibliography almost simultaneously, Rhonda Strauss attempted to prove that Canada's soul-searching was a sure sign of culture.

Dunsmuir's rebuttal included the statement that Canada was really a "medium for culture" as displayed in the Connaught laboratories discovery of "the first completely synthetic culture medium for living mammalian cells."

In place of the beaver as symbol of Canada's culture, he took a leaf from St. Michael's College's book, and suggested the griffin—"half the lion of England, half the eagle of the United States, and wholly mythological."

Movies, Slides Depict Indian's Cultural Clash

A cultural clash has been occurring between the Indian and White ways of life. This was pointed out by Bill Angus at the meeting of the Hart House Exploration Society last night.

Bill Angus described a trip with Alex Gigeroff to the Peace Pass area of B.C. Four movies and about 75 slides were shown covering the entire expedition.

Mr. Angus said the Indians in the area are unable to cope with the great influence of the white man's ways and have therefore changed their ways by ceasing to hunt and fish. They live off their winter trappings and summer government relief. A great number of them have tuberculosis and live in very unsanitary conditions, he said.

Plans for a similar trip for club members into the Canadian north this summer will commence in the near future.

Barter Baptist Bean Auctions Attract All Show Share Spirit

Races End On Saturday 29.7% Fund Collected

Four days ago a Trinity student bought the Lieutenant Governor's private parking sign for two dollars at the Skule auction. Yesterday Mike Shoemaker auctioned it for $38 at Trinity's annual SHARE auction.

The head of John the Baptist, which once went for a dance, went for a song as Divinity students outbid visiting Wycliffites to raise the price to $21.00.

Individual students appeared to be the most valuable commodity as the auction closed its two day run yesterday. First year cornered most of the market as the year's women won a heavily disguised college figure for $30.00. Adding a considerable proportion to the record-breaking sales figure of $325.00, a brace of freshies, Cathie George and Glenna Hart, stepped off the block into the arms of first year men following spirited bidding which closed at $61.00. 517 men pooled $40 and walked away with Adrienne Phillipson (II St. Hil-da's).

The higher bidding was mon-opolled on the whole by year syndicates and groups of resident students which were able to override the resources of individuals.

Similar fund-raising "gimmicks" are being organized by other colleges and faculties. Nursing students have offered to pay the expenses of a date with any engineer who contributes more than $2.00. So far only one engineer is eligible.

The Skule auction held earlier this week netted $45.00 to bring the total contribution of that faculty to $120.00 — 7.5% of its objective. Nursing which stands second in the SHARE contribution race seems reasonably sure of winning a challenge to the engineers to beat the Nursing percentage.

$100.00 was collected last Friday at a dance held by St. Mike's.

It is rumored that 2nd Year P.O.T. will shine shoes next week in an attempt to step above the bottom rung in the contribution ladder.

Details about a SHARE dance to be held in the drill hall this evening appear elsewhere in today's paper.

The campaign closes next Saturday. So far, Toronto students have turned in $2,210.63, or 29.7% of the objective. A considerably larger sum has been collected but not yet turned in by faculty representatives.

A Real Education P.C. Chief Finds Maritime Jaunt

"A real education," was how Ted Rogers, Executive Vice President of the Progressive-Conservative Student Federation summed up his tour of the Maritime universities.

In a rushed five-day tour, Rogers visited Dalhousie, St. Mary's College, Acadia, St. Francis Xavier, Mount Allison, Mount St. Vincent and the University of New Brunswick.

He spoke to students of the seven Maritime universities. Afterwards there were round-table discussions and meetings with the local political clubs.

Rogers, who is also president of the U of T Conservative Club said that the knowledge and interest in political affairs of the students in the Maritime universities is substantially higher than ours, and plays a significant role in university life.

Wallberg Memorial Lecture Highlights 75th Anniversary

D. Lewis K. Silcox will give the Wallberg Memorial Lecture on Tuesday evening next in Convocation Hall.

Hees To Speak

George Hees, the National President of the Progressive Conservative Party, will be the guest speaker tonight at a meeting of the University Progressive Conservative Club.

Mr. Hees will speak to the Club on National Issues facing Canada today.

His lecture, on the subject of Engineering and Enterprise, has been co-ordinated with a symposium on Atomic Power which is being held the same afternoon to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Dr. Silcox is well-known for technological and managerial contributions to railway power engineering and for his active work in engineering society affairs. He has lectured on railway subjects and applied mechanics at Purdue, Yale, Princeton and other centres.

CUP

Runneth-Over

Queen's Journal: Headline comment on last Saturday's tragedy was a jubilant "WE TRIED IT AND DAMMIT WE DID IT!" They didn't need to tell us . . .

McGill Daily: MacDonald Campus was suggested by Principal James as a possible site for new buildings to accommodate the increase in university enrolment expected in the next ten to fifteen years. The proposal provides for the handling of undergraduates in the first two years of Arts, Science, Commerce and Engineering as well as certain post-grad students in Medical and Technical Research in the enlarged campus. In addition, a vast expansion programme in the Medical, Technical, and other graduate schools would attempt to raise the general academic level of McGill.

McMaster Silhouette: A Silhouette editorial strongly criticized an article by Vic Obeck, former McGill coach, speaking in Weekend Magazine in favour of subsidized university football. Obeck's views on athletic scholarships, his "bet project", were said to be not at all original but "simply the American way of looking at college football." Obeck's ideas for large-scale subsidization were restricted by university authorities during his tenure at McGill.

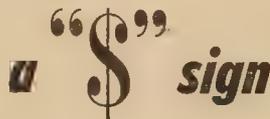

The Ubyseye: Charges may be laid against four students who LPP Club officials say took part in a platform fray following a speech here by National LPP Leader Tim Buck, November 1. UBC President Al Thackray expressed satisfaction now that the investigation committee is gathering information on the incident. "If charges are pressed, we may be able to deter further conduct of that kind," he concluded.

Montreal: If Varsity men think they have a gripe because of the noisy atmosphere of the Arbor Room, they should lend an ear to McGill's miseries. Students are complaining that the campus library is so noisy that they can't hear themselves think. And they don't even have a juke-box!

Morgantown, W. Virginia: A rip-roaring party raid at the University of West Virginia led to the suspension of an undisclosed number of men with undisclosed names. In one women's fraternity house alone, three hundred students, of which only the small undisclosed fraction was apprehended, caused $500 worth of damage. Officials are certain that the long arm of university law will bring the remaining culprits to justice — in an undisclosed length of time, of course.

Montreal: How about this! The McGill Daily claims the calibre of first year students at that school is so low that they are being taught Grade IV grammar. A movement is underway to raise entrance requirements.

Is Your Mark of Success

Probably not . . . but you certainly want to make a monetary success of your chosen career. Equally important, however, in your hopes for the future is your desire to have an important place in your community and a position of leadership in its affairs. Right now, at university, is the time not only to learn a career, but to train yourself for leadership.

The Canadian Officers Training Corps can give you this vital training. Your membership in the COTC will tell your prospective employer that you are the type to assume responsibility. After a three-year training period (one night a week and summer holidays) and your qualification as a Commissioned Officer, you may continue your Army interests if you desire. The choice is yours . . . but in any event you will have gained invaluable knowledge in making decisions and in handling men.

The COTC offers you guaranteed summer employment for three years with take-home pay competitive with civilian summer jobs. By taking part in the full range of COTC activities it is possible to make up to $1,000 a year — with board, clothing, medical and dental care provided during the summer.

Classes start on December 5th, so you must have the foresight to make your decision now — a decision that will contribute much more than mere dollars toward your career. But you must act now! See the Resident Staff Officer at 119 Saint George Street for full details on this excellent opportunity for Varsity freshmen who are aiming high for the future.

MULOCK FOOTBALL GETS UNDER WAY

Senior Skulemen Will Battle UC Vic Is Waiting For The Victor

Sunny and cold weather is forecast for today's opening Mulock Cup playoff game, featuring University College and the Senior Engineers at stake in a berth in Tuesday's semi-final encounter against Victoria.

The UC Redmen, who finished in 2nd place in Group 2 with a 3-1 record, will be minus regular guard Norm Bergstein and 2nd string tackle Dave Walker, both out with injuries. Centre Mary Grossman will play despite a bad shoulder. Coach Gerry Banks, who played 2 games this season, will not dress since he has a full quota of twenty-four players raring to go. However, if an emergency arises, Banks will be ready.

UC's starting backfield will consist of Dave Sutherland at quarterback, Ken Harrison at wingback, Jim Trenton at fullback, and Bob Nadin and Dan McComb at the half spots.

The Redmen, who plan to unveil some new plays today, are up for this game and are just itching to get into the finals and another possible crack at their only conquerors—the Junior Engineers.

Over at the Skule camp, Coach Wally Mellor expects that only Al Wong and Bob Leask will be missing. Wong is out with a knee injury but the Engineers didn't seem to miss him in their 27-7 rout of Trinity. Leask suffered a broken leg in the Trinity game.

Trinity's default enabled the Engineers to meet UC and Skule doesn't intend to let this golden opportunity to move along the playoff trail slip by. Both Skule victories were scored at Trinity's expense. However, 3 of their 4 losses were by less than twelve points, so the Engineers' chances aren't to be treated lightly.

Mellor will start Mary Larson at quarter and Ken Selby, Bruce Smith and Doug Stewart on the half-line. Larson, a recent addition to the squad, has picked the boys up with his fine play. He's given the team a better passing attack.

Game time today at Varsity Stadium is 1:30. All students who haven't any classes and also those who have, are invited to attend free of charge.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

The world of sports certainly has its absurdities and there is one phase which is becoming more and more ridiculous as the years progress. How many people, we wonder really enjoy watching a hockey game in the middle of May when the temperature outside is in the mid 70's, or a football game in a blinding snowstorm and the mercury pushing the zero mark? This has become necessary because of the ever increasing number of athletes playing our Canadian games. Ten years ago, we would have scoffed at the idea of ice even existing in our arenas in the late spring, and the pigskins were stored away long before Santa Claus made his appearance in Eaton's Toyland. Now, with more and more participants and competing leagues, the playoffs go on and on. And when we call this ridiculous, we are certainly not singling out our own University Athletic Association for criticism. On the contrary, the organizers of our Intramural Leagues, with special regard to football, merit a well-deserved pat on the back for being able to get the football finished up in a comparatively sensible time.

However, in the big time it's a different story. The Grey Cup finalists suffer considerably from the change in weather and this year that will be more true than ever. We've been shivering under four blankets listening to the announcer of the Edmonton-Winnipeg series constantly remind us that "the boys are finding that handling the ball in five-below weather is a little tough." But the Eskimos will be used to it. Sam "the Rifle" or Mr. Sunshine's Dublinski may find it a bit difficult to throw the long pass when the missile used is as slippery as ice (and just as cold) and the intended receiver is lost somewhere downfield in a slight snowstorm. It may not be as bad as that, but it is as cold in Vancouver on the 26th as it is here now, it's no weather for football.

Hockey, especially the junior series, is just as bad. A couple of years ago we watched the Ontario final over in St. Catharines at the Garden City Teepees and the Toronto Marlboros battled it out in the fog. And back in the early fifties, Barrie Flyers went out to Winnipeg to meet the junior Maroons for the Memorial Cup, and the series was delayed twice because the water just wouldn't freeze. Absurd? You bet!

We mentioned earlier that it was the greater number of leagues and players that was responsible for this, but that isn't the only reason. The big one in hockey is the pocketbook. A junior club with a pro sponsor and playing out of a fairly large city such as Toronto or Hamilton doesn't have many financial worries. If the club is in the red at the end of the season, the impression that the public gets is that no one is particularly worried about it.

A small town team, trying to operate on local money and fan support has a tough time making ends meet even if the team is packed for every home game. Barrie is a good example of this. They had the crowds and a good team, but without the pro support they have this year, they still a few seasons very much in debt. The league would prolong the schedule if not for the team losses such as they in the black, but the longer the season went on, the more it cost, even if the team reached the playoffs. And of course, for a team making money, the sponsors were just in pocket that much more.

And so the story goes. Far be it from us to offer any solutions to the problem. The people up in some head office somewhere who are responsible for this situation certainly ought to be brilliant enough to come up with an acceptable solution and anything is acceptable in comparison to the state of affairs which now exists. So we'll see you in snowshoes, heating pad and two or three bearskin coats for the Shriners' East-West game on December 3rd in the Stadium.

Just Jols . . . The Rugger Blues take on Toronto Scottish Fists at St. Andrew's College Saturday afternoon . . . We understand that the Sports Editor (alias the wild man of Borneo) is deeply hurt because he was only worth $31 in the Trinity SHARE auction and the Lieutenant Governor's Reserved Parking sign drew $33. Let's get out and support our hockey Seconds . . . They take on Lyndhursts in the Arena at 8 on Saturday night . . . You see a doubleheader for only a quarter and your A.T.L. card.

Beaches Defeat Rufferites 11-5 Hirst Gets Try

Varsity's rugger Blues suffered their second defeat of the Toronto League season last night at Millen Stadium at the hands of Balmy Beach Fists 11-5 on a snow-swept field.

Conditions were hardly conducive to good rugger and the opposition even less so as the Blues failed to cross the Beach goal line more than once.

Leading 5-3 at the half after John Hirst had scored an early try, converted by "sure-foot" Chris Jacques, the Blues were unable to cope with a strong second-half surge by the East-enders. Balmy Beach kicked two penalty goals and scored a converted try in the second half to create the margin of victory.

Blues suffered one unfortunate casualty as well as defeat when three-quarter John Hill left the game with a concussion in the second half.

Ice Blues Battle Irish Tuesday

First opportunities come flying next week as Varsity's hockey Blues prepare for a six-game exhibition schedule before beginning the defence of their Intercollegiate crown the second week in December.

Tuesday afternoon the fans get their first opportunity to see this year's edition of the Blues in action when St. Michael's College Majors will be visitors on Varsity ice, while at the same time several newcomers to a Blue uniform will be fighting to retain a berth with the veterans under game conditions.

Coach Jack Kennedy has made up his mind in the case of two of the regular three forward lines, but positions are still wide open on that all-important third unit in goal ex-intermediate sensation

Al Fleming will share the duties with ex-NHA netminder Al Cecutti.

Last year's captain Dave Stephen and ex-Marlie Dave Jackson make one part of the blue-line, with ex-Marlie John Tolton and former Port Arthur Bruin Sam Ashton going as the other duo. Barry Smith and Len Morrison are currently battling it out for the fifth spot on defence.

Centred by Don Cossar, John Akitt and Ken Linsenman work together as one of the strongest forward lines the Blues have had in years, while ex-St. Mike's flash Brian Anderson spins pivot on the second unit. A gimpy leg has kept right-winger John MacDonald out of action this week, but Kennedy expects him back Monday in time for the clash with St. Mike's. Other third of the second line is Sandy Morrison and Montreal junior Royals.

Mert Wright is holding down the third line centre spot at a moment while George Whyte from UTS, and ex-intermediates Ted Rogers and Bill Naylor are fighting for the wings. Greg Bourassa, a former U. of M. Canadian, has been hospitalized for the past three weeks, but Kennedy expects to see action from him by Monday also.

Kennedy will use all these men against St. Mike's on Tuesday, but will probably make a cut or two here and there for Friday's game with East York in preparation for the trip out west to Colorado. The Blues leave November 29 by plane for four exhibition games in Denver and Colorado Springs with Denver University and Colorado College.

Blue Seconds Meet Lyndhursts Saturday

Tomorrow night Varsity Arena will be the scene of the first Toronto Hockey League Major Series' games in quite a while. The University's Baby Blues get the ball rolling as they take on a power-packed East York Lyndhurst club in the opener at eight, with Kingsway Lumber and Pickin' Chicken, the other two teams in the League, meeting in the nightcap at 9:30.

For Jack Wheldrake's College Seconds, it will be their first taste of real competition this season, and since the Lyndhurst are rated the team to beat, they are starting off the hard way.

The players last night voted Ross Woods as their captain. Woods, who is ineligible for the Blues this year, finished sixth in Intercollegiate scoring with the Seniors last year. Clare Fisher, an ex-Blue who finished one point up on Woods in scoring last season, was chosen alternate captain along with former St. Michael's Major star Mike Elik.

Wheldrake, although he has not settled upon a definite line-up for the game, indicated that Larry Irons will likely get the nod over Hugh Curry to start between the pipes tomorrow. Larry Stacey, who hasn't been on skates too much this year and is pretty much out of condition will be available for defence duty. Fisher, who has been converted to defence this year will go along with Stacey. Glenn MacLean, Don Stewart and Ray Savijarvi bring up the remainder of the blue line corps.

Dunc Brodie, Tom Riley and Woods make up the first forward unit. Brodie played with Guelph Biltmore last year, while Riley saw action with both the Seconds and the Blues. Bob Church, who played with Trinity last year, is filling in for the injured Mike Elik at centre on the second line. Elik is out for at least a week with an elbow injury. Grant Mills, who played with Port Arthur Bearcats is at left wing and Don Borthwick is back at right wing.

Ian Morrison, who is travelling to Colorado with the Blues as a defenceman, is centring the third line between Bill Naylor and Ted Lotocki. Naylor is on loan from the Blues for this game, while Lotocki returns to his old left wing spot in the Baby Blue lineup.

The Lyndhursts boast a strong club, so the game promises to be a real contest from the word go.

The Sportswoman

By MERLE OVERHOLT

The gala announcement for the girls at this time of year is an inducement to appear at basketball try-outs. Under the capable coaching of Mickey Barnett, the varsity and intercollegiate teams will be picked to represent U of T women's basketball. A position on the team will insure its members of a good time and provide them with the opportunity of visiting the other universities in the league.

In the new league there are three to four teams which are played twice, once on the home court and the other time away. For the games played away from home, the women's athletic association provides the transportation, foots the food bills and anything else that goes with a plush weekend. Gals, there's a sure guarantee that, if you go out for basketball and have the slightest athletic inclinations, you'll secure a position on the teams. Most of last year's varsity crew graduated; here's your opportunity to fill the vacancies.

Besides, there are two big added attractions this year. The intercollegiate team will have its own league this year for the first time playing the junior squad from the various schools and enjoying the same advantages as the varsity players. Also, under the new physical education rule, all those taking the P. T. courses will be able to eliminate one hour of gym.

This is your golden opportunity to make new friends from the various faculties and have a good time. So, gals, we'll see you at O.C.E. next Tuesday at 5:30. Don't forget.

Interfaculty Summary

Trinity A's defeated Pre-Meds 4-0 yesterday, to advance to the final round of the first division soccer championship series, against UC I, Monday at 12:30.

The Trinity club jumped into the finals on goals by Gibson, Clarkson, Christofolakis, and Weynerowski, and kept the Meds men completely on the defense. In a previously decided semi-final, for the right to play off for the second division soccer championship, Forestry will tangle with Emmanuel, Wednesday afternoon at 12:30.

In lacrosse, Vic edged SPS II 7-6, on a hat trick by Kerr, a brace of markers from Little, and singles by Kuznic and Vickers. For SPS, Caswell and Rosebrough each scored twice, and Park and Luskly potted one each.

In interfaculty volleyball, Pre-Meds II knocked off SPS II, in two straight games after dropping the first of the series. They lost 11-15, then won 15-10 and 15-10. Both St. Mike's B's and Trinity A's picked up winners' points, when no official turned up to handle their game.

Junior Skule defeated Pre-Meds 2-1, in the lone bit of squash action yesterday. Cowie, Wilkinson and Cathers led the Skulemen to victory over Brown, London and St. Michael's of the Pre-Meds squad.

faith, hope and charity

Another organization has flashed across the country's headlines to join the ranks of the ingenious clubs and associations, who stand on their rights to the point of trampling them, and who fight for God, Decency and Truth.

The organization is, of course, the Catholic Women's League, devoted, among other things, to the removal of obstreperous literature from public circulation.

This is not a novelty. Indeed, if it were not for the fact that such activity arouses both the faithful and the skeptics, the entire group could be conveniently tucked away in some quiet corner to plot further stratagems.

They are, as Morley Callaghan put it, "terribly misguided."

But we cannot blame them, nor others like them. They are fighting for principles and ideals, which, while somewhat indefensible, still influence our minds.

The eager housewives of the CWL typify the petulant, fanatic people who are fighting for concepts they feel are in danger. They have not enough moral wherewithal to ask themselves, "Is what I approve of actually meaningless?"

If they were honest, they would probably answer that it was and start over again. Unfortunately they somehow feel there must be absolutes somewhere, and they spend futile lives hunting in corners, emerging occasionally to defy the world with a handful of dust and cobwebs.

The old ideas are disappearing as Science comes forward. We must not disappear with them, nor cling to their coat-tails as they retreat.

We live in the Twentieth Century. Our mission is to build.

Model Parliament Elections:

Politics On The Farm

The elections for the U of T's Model Parliament will take place this year on Thursday, November 24. In preparation for this event, The Varsity presents a series of articles by the four campus political clubs on the current issues of the day. The first of these issues is on the farm problem: what is to be done with falling gross farm income, high consumer prices, and accumulating surpluses?

C.C.F.

Taking 1949 equals 100 as the base year, DBS figures show that Real Net Farm Income has dropped from 115 in 1951 to 58 in 1954. The farmer is caught between falling market prices and rising production costs.

The CCF believes that there are many and fundamental faults in the Liberal Government's policy of price supports and parity prices. The CCF feels that the best answer to both the farmers' plight and how to allocate efficiently our agricultural resources is guaranteed forward pricing.

Forward prices are simply estimates based on the best information available to the technical and administrative machinery of the Government as to the level of farm prices most likely to prevail at some date (determined by the period of production) in the future. This policy would remove much of the guess-work and insecurity in farming, advise the farmer (well aware of his production costs) what he can grow profitably, and give the Government a non-compulsory means of regulating agricultural production. And guaranteed forward prices will lessen the burden on the taxpayer-consumer.

Labor-Progressive

The crisis in agriculture is essentially a product of the sacrifice of Canada's foreign trade due to the Federal Government's subservience to U.S. cold war policies. Our traditional wheat markets in the sterling area are restricted because of insistence (at U.S. instigation) on receiving payment for exports in dollars.

At the same time the U.S. is disposing of their surplus wheat and increasing their share of markets. To regain these markets Canada should accept sterling.

Geneva, while undermining the pretext for the trade boycott of the Socialist sector of the world, has opened up great possibilities for trade with these countries. Our Government should encourage further trade negotiations and exchanges of farm delegations between Canada and all Socialist countries.

Thus the L.P.P. maintains that trade with all countries on the basis of their need and ability to trade is essential to all Canadian farmers.

Liberal

The great needs for agriculture, as seen by Liberals, are: first, markets for their products, and secondly, special protection against recurring crises of the kind which have caused set-backs to farmers in the past.

Some of the crises are due to the forces of nature over which no one has any control, such as droughts, frost, excessive rains, hail, animal and plant diseases.

Others are due to economic factors within and without Canada, market gluts, trade restrictions, violent swings in price levels.

In every practical way the Liberal government has moved to mitigate the adverse effect of these crises, by controlling the harmful factors insofar as that is possible and by providing farmers with compensation and insurance against the damage.

Free trade has long been the goal of Liberal policy and has special attractions to farmers who are interested in selling their products abroad and buying their equipment at the lowest possible cost.

Conservative

After the war, Canada's wheat-producing areas entered upon an unparalleled boom. As a direct result of the policies of the federal government, policies which worked well during boom, but which are useless under the present condition, farmers are caught between declining markets and rising costs.

The policies of the Progressive Conservative party are clear cut and have been stated many times by Mr. Drew both inside and out of parliament. We believe first of all, that farmers should receive parity prices, related to farm costs, the farmers should receive representation on the wheat board. A much greater effort should be made to restore and expand our foreign markets, especially in the United Kingdom. Freer trade with other countries instead of the present closed trade with the United States would give other countries dollars needed to purchase our wheat. Farmers should get advance payment on wheat stored in the farms. They have a right to these. They consider the present system of loans an insult. Finally, there should also be a general enquiry into the handling and storage of grain.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Modern Minority

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I disagree most strongly with your picture of the modern man. I do not deny his existence—it cannot be denied. But I say that you have no grounds whatever to claim that he constitutes a majority any more than I have for claiming him to be a minority. No statistics are available.

However, from my experience of life, I am firmly convinced that your modern man is not representative of the real modern man. Even if your version does represent a majority (which I do not believe), this majority is by no means overwhelmingly large. There are enough men like me in the world to throw a monkey wrench in your philosophy.

Furthermore, I disagree with your statement that "the rapid and accelerating pace of human progress has weakened (man's) faith in all things absolute."

On the contrary, while shallow and incomplete knowledge breeds this sort of insecurity (viz. Naturalism), a deeper and more complete knowledge of the unfathomable mysteries of the universe, such as we are beginning to get a glimpse of now, are highly indicative of an absolute power behind their infinite complexities, and the great men at the frontiers of science are first to admit it (viz. Einstein).

Also I disagree with your statement that there is a great difference between a man who believes in God and one who does not. The difference is purely semantic. Atheist's is merely a different brand of God and he calls him by a different name.

Paul Wyszowski,
II SPS

What?

The Editor, The Varsity:

I would like to point out what must have been either a misprint or an error on the part of one of your reporters in Wednesday's Varsity. I refer to the article on the POT debate on suicide in which the startling statement here quoted is attributed to the Chaplain of Hart House:

"What about Socrates?" asked another POT student.

"He probably followed the Stoic Philosophy which regarded suicide as the highest virtue," commented the Chaplain.

It is inconceivable that a man in such an important position could have been so misguided as to think that Socrates committed suicide. He must have been misquoted. For this is to miss the entire point of the last days of Socrates as described in Plato's Apology and Crito. Socrates did not brew up the hemlock himself. It was given to him by a state official. He drank it because he believed he must obey the laws of Athens at all costs — even if they were bad. He had by his acceptance of the Athenian institutions in his earlier life agreed to abide by them at all times. He was the victim of a public execution.

Another amazing remark is attributed to the Chaplain when Stoic doctrines of suicide are "followed" by Socrates. Zeno, the acknowledged founder of Stoic Philosophy, did not even reach Athens, the city which in 399 B.C. executed Socrates, until about 320 B.C. Indeed he was not even born until 335 B.C. — 64 years after Socrates died!

It is hard to believe that the Chaplain of Hart House could have made such wild statements. But if in fact he did, may I humbly suggest that he take a look at the Crito of Plato and a good standard History of Philosophy before he presides over any more debates on suicide.

Bernardi Plays Sunday

Mario Bernardi, 23-year-old pianist, will be the soloist this Sunday at 9:00 p.m., at the third Hart House Sunday Evening Concert.

Mr. Bernardi has toured throughout Canada three times and has been featured in solo recitals in Italy and the United States. He has appeared on the CBC on many occasions both as a soloist and accompanist.

At the age of six Mr. Bernardi went to Italy, graduating with top honours in the piano, organ and composition from the Venice Conservatory. He is now a member of the Opera School Faculty of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Mr. Bernardi's programme will include the Organ Toccata in C major by Bach; Praeludium, Aria and Finale by Franck; Variations Brillantes, Nocturne Op. 62, No. 1, and Scherzo in B minor by Chopin.

Tickets are available at the Porter's desk for Hart House members, and their guests, including women, are welcome.

critic in the dark re hart house films

Why We Fight, the series from which the controversial films recently shown at Hart House were taken, was produced during 1942 and 1943 by the Orientation Branch of the US War Department. It was intended as propaganda and, using newsreels as raw material, a talented team headed by Frank Capra which included fellow directors Anatole Litvak (The Snake Pit) and John Houston succeeded in making an extremely persuasive set of films.

Unfortunately, few things date more rapidly than propaganda, and in the long run purely propagandist films will be of interest only to the sociologist. It should be wondered whether these films have any qualities that are independent of the changing pattern of social thought.

Prelude to War and The Nazis Strike are the first two films of the series. They deal with the events leading up to the outbreak of the war and with the invasion of Poland. The outstanding quality of these movies is in the editing. For example, there are long sequences consisting of nothing but shots of marching soldiers. This could be boring but due to the ingenious contrast between shots and the use of drumbeats in the soundtrack, they build up to an intense climax.

Unfortunately, the technical brilliance is often empty. One is left with the impression that Capra is doing a set of extremely difficult exercises. His treatment is too abstract and inhuman.

Divide and Conquer was the last film shown. It deals with the progress of the war up to the fall of France. In this and the sections of the Nazis Strike dealing with the invasion of Poland, Capra suddenly seems to suddenly become interested in human beings. As a result, the films acquire an added dimension. They become a vivid impressionistic picture of war in all its horror, taken on a poetic quality in which hate of Germany is irrelevant. These sections make the films an exciting experience for anyone interested in the film as a medium of aesthetic expression, and seem to promise more of the same quality in the films Hart House members just lost the chance of seeing.

The Hart House Glee Club will present the annual Tri-University Concert this Saturday in the Great Hall at 8:30 p.m. This year the guest choirs are from the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph and from Cornell University, Ithaca, New York.

The A Cappella Chorus from Cornell have been exchanging concerts with the Glee Club for several years. In other years they have delighted the audiences with folk songs. This year director Robert Hull has chosen several selections from a Bach motet and three Hindemith Chansons.

Ralph A. Kidd, the director of the Union Philharmonic Choir from Guelph has chosen a variety of familiar numbers including Rock My Soul and Dr. Healey Willan's Welcome, Yule. This choir took part in the last Intersarsity Choral Festival, attended by many Ontario Universities.

The third group to perform will be the Hart House Glee Club. Toronto students have enjoyed their annual performances at the Blue and White Christmas tree, the Sunday Evening Concerts, and under the windows of the women's residences. Theirs will be the only all-male chorus at the concert.

The Glee Club conductor, Ward McAdam, has chosen seven numbers for the concert, ranging from Palestrina's Tenebrae Factae Sunt to a Robert Shaw arrangement of Mesdames, Bonsoir.

A mass choir of two hundred voices will be formed when the three choruses combine. Each conductor will take his turn in conducting the combined choirs. One of their selections will be the familiar Ye Watchers and Ye Holy Ones.

Tickets will be on sale until concert time at the Hall Porter's desk, and up until tomorrow at the SAC office.

WELL SKULED

To describe Skule Nite '55 as a superb show would be an exaggeration but only a slight one. For a College production it was certainly an overwhelming effort, with its use of sets of structural magnificence and artistic merit, a cast that seemed like half or more of the Skule enrolment, and a book that might do wonders for TV if ever the worthy men of Skule could stoop to exploit their work commercially.

It was a fast show, probably paced to the action of those jet engines they have in the Mechanical Building, replete with wit and humour of every kind, slapstick seldom rearing its head. If it be true that Engineers are coarse, unlettered types, then Skule Nite '55 could not have been an Engineering show, for it has some of the best writing heard in College shows this season. One number excepted, this show ran through its two hours in good taste and in high gear.

Of the 16 skits that made up Skule Nite '55, there were only two that missed for me, but from the audience reaction, the show seemed to go over completely. The two scenes that I found not quite worthy of the show were Hot, Hot, Hot in Morocco, a farcical bit with a male chorus line wearing padded costumes not of the football variety, and the final Tribute to Our School and Our Crest, which seemed shushily sentimental at first, turning brassy and a little shallow to the end. Contrasting these with the brilliance of such groups as the Skule Quartet, The Lady Godiva Memorial Band In Concert, Keyhole Kapers, Trumpet Blues and the final "The Decline of the Roman Empire" skit, I could find very little to complain of in the show.

Trumpet Blues, in particular, was an impressive number. Whatever the musical merits, the showmanship and sets used in the scene made it one of the revue's most memorable parts. An ingenious arrangement of a huge hand fingering the valves of a trumpet filled the centre background, while a trumpeter standing in a seemingly suspended trumpet-bell on the right, and three dancers at a bar on the left, helped to set an effective blues mood.

About half a dozen individuals were outstanding in their parts. Bill McReynolds as Caesar in the final skit was the man of the last halfhour, playing a brilliant degenerate to wild perfection. Producer Jim Vasoff, with Director Bob Hill and his men of the Quartet deserve special mention, partly because this is their last year and partly because they have been the heart of the last few Skule Nites, this year winning individual honours with ease—mention also to an import from the Dental Faculty, Molly McCarthy, who sang "Mountain Call," in a show-stopping style.

A small tribute to the thoroughness of Engineering efficiency—even the programme, supposedly incidental to a show, was a masterful work of design. Moishe Reller

More U. S. Self-Trials

Trial, (at Loew's) is in many ways a shocker, following in the well-publicized "rock and shock" footsteps of the Blackboard Jungle. There are many points of similarity common to the two movies. Both take a subject currently controversial in the U.S.—The Jungle, the problem of the American school; and Trial, the problem of communism (among others)—and treat it in fairly direct, clean-cut terms. Both make use of Glenn Ford as a restrained, sincere and most convincing man of truth. And both fall flat in their glib, over-simplified answers to the big problems they tackle.

Angel Chavez is a young Mexican boy who is accused of murdering a white girl on a restricted beach in a bigoted little American town. David Blake (Glenn Ford) is the young lawyer who gets himself involved in the boy's defense. He also gets him to meet up with a Communist front group that is using the young Mexican as a fund-raising propaganda tool. The Peoples Party want the boy dead and martyred. But in a very exciting scene sequence before the presiding Negro judge Lord eloquently pins the tables on their little design.

This, briefly, is the story. It is a good, absorbing story, even if it's not always as believable as its characters are. But Trial doesn't end with its story. It is quite obvious that somewhere there is a message, an idea, a viewpoint, and this is where the film just does not quite come off. The message doesn't emerge clearly if it does because the film has bit off more than it can chew. And it has not wholly digested all its material. What about race prejudice, communism, bigoted little towns and narrow-mindedness? And isn't the thread of justice pretty thin if someone can hang because he's said the wrong thing at the wrong time? There are many loes, but this in the movie. Especially at the end, you feel this "Yes, go on, say something" kind of uneasiness.

Still, Trial is more than worthwhile. It may be that with films of this sort, the people in Hollywood are really coming of age. In any case, the Americans are looking into their own backyards. If they are using an idiom and style too much exaggerated and melodramatic and one so different to Italian post-war realism, it is because they know the American public very well. And if Trial's end result is essentially a confused and weak conclusion, it is because too many dirty-bottomed stones have been turned over.

It might be interesting to see if Mark Robson's movie gets into the European Film Festivals, or if, like the Blackboard Jungle, it is cut off because it "tends to show the U.S. in an unfavourable light."

Grahovac Recital

Borzar Grahovac, tenor John Covert, accompanist.
Songs by Monteverdi, Buononcini, Caccini, Scarlatti, J. S. Bach, Gluck, Beethoven, Giordano.

It is not pleasant to hear music at first hand if the voice is uncontrolled, rasps in the throat or blocks in the nose.

Nor is Monteverdi attacked like Wagner, Italian and German words sound chewed, the mechanical accompaniment slightly out of gear and the enthusiastic applause of the audience completely insincere.

Though varied, the programme was stifled by its execution—neither introduced nor dramatized the songs conveyed no meaning. The intimacy of the Music Room was destroyed by the harsh glare of the electric lights and the overpowering roar of Amorfi Vieta. This was not inspiring, but don't let it deter you. Other recitals have been rewarding and we are grateful for them.

How to get better marks . . .

According to many well-known educators, there's a legitimate way to improve your marks. They contend that typewritten notes and essays lead to better standing. Thoughts are expressed more clearly—spelling improves.

And speed? Fast loughand writing is about 30 words a minute. In no time at all you can do far better on a Royal Portable.

Typed notes mean less squinting and guessing at exam time too!

Just one caution—when choosing a portable typewriter, look for a Royal. The rugged Royal will last a lifetime. Small wonder it's the world's favorite.

See the Royal Portable at Dealer's and Department Stores. Budget terms arranged.

"Quiet DeLuxe"—with smart Fiberglas carrying case. Has full-size keyboard and all features of most big office typewriters.

Settlement Kids Want Skates

The U of Toronto Settlement has put out an urgent appeal for kiddies, skates. "We will take as many pairs of skates as we can possibly get," said Mrs. Ron Howze.

The skates wanted are those which would fit smaller children in the 7-8 year old group, or sizes 1, 2 or 3.

Well over 200 Settlement children are waiting for skates so that they can join their friends on the ice at Bathurst Park, she said.

Once the Settlement receives the skates, the children bring a quarter in exchange for their use for the entire season.

The money is refunded when the skates are brought back. With the coming of cold weather the kiddies will invade the Grange Park rink.

Who knows but that some Teeder Kennedy of to-morrow will wear your old skates, one settlement official suggested.

Bring them to the Settlement, at 23 Grange Road, one block south of Dundas.

home town boy made good old school hails beer king

Students at Kirkland Lake high school held a special dance last week—in honour of Tony Bombden, the 21-year-old second-year engineering student who holds the Canadian University beer-drinking title.

The University of Toronto student—a native of Kirkland Lake, Ont.—poured an incredible 3.14 gallons down his hatch in less than six hours one day a couple of weeks ago.

The 33½ pints—or 67 glasses—outstripped by three glasses, the record set by Carl Ramjit, a University of Manitoba engineer.

It took Ramjit 12 hours to do less than Bombden did, in six.

When news of his feat reached Kirkland Lake High School, students there, ever on the lookout for an excuse to hold a dance, pulled out the record albums and decorated the gym.

How did they come to hear about Bombden's record-breaking achievement?

Explained one Kirkland Lake type now attending university here: "There are about 80 Kirkland Lake students on the campus; things like that have a habit of getting around."

Sponsored by the campus Circle K Club, the dance begins at 8:30. There will be square and round dancing, interrupted from time to time for the presentation of a large number of prizes. Admission is 50 cents per person.

Treasure Van Bigger, Better Will Arrive Here In 10 Days

"Treasure Van 1955" is bigger and better than ever before! On all the camp it has visited so far the sales have been far above those of last year, Sybil Strachan, publicity director said yesterday.

Perhaps one of the biggest reasons for the unusual success of Treasure Van is the wide selection of goods available this year, she said. The sale has grown from the products of India in 1953, to the handicrafts from India, Greece, Jordan, Egypt, Japan and Canada (Manitoulin Island) in 1955.

Treasure Van, sponsored by the World University Service, will be held in Hart House from Monday, November 28 to Thursday, December 1. The proceeds from Treasure Van go towards scholarships and financial aid for the poorer universities in countries of the free world.

As if Queen's getting the Yates Cup wasn't enough for them, they also grossed the largest sales for Treasure Van on any campus this year—well over $5,000. Last year

Toronto's total sales were $5492.46.

Publicity for Treasure Van is appearing across campus and in the city now. We hope to have an even bigger sale this year and report sales in proportion to our student body. See you at Treasure Van!

Forensic Skills Placed Ten On Debates Teams

Trials were held by the University of Toronto Debating Union on Wednesday and Thursday to select representatives to the Intercollegiate Debates.

Of thirty who entered one of the most successful trials in years, ten men were chosen as Varsity representatives.

The following won the highest scores:

Clyde Batten, Pat Fleck, Leo Grey, Stephen Lewis, Peter Marsh, Sid Peck, Moishe Reiter, Jim Sawers, Bernie Warren, and John Woods.

The winners meet to-day at 1:00 in the SAC office.

Two representatives will be sent to each of University of Pittsburgh, McGill, and University of Detroit.

Four will go to the Inter University Debating League competition. The home university for this competition has not yet been

Drums, Trumpets and Allouette

Carabins Here In 2 Weeks

By DEREK HAYES

In two short weeks the shouts of "Bienvenue," the rolling of drums, the screeching of trumpets, and general confusion will again reign in the sedate halls of Union Station. The occasion will mark the ninth annual Carabin weekend from December first to the fourth. 40 French students from the University of Montreal will participate.

"Carabin" is defined in the dictionary as, "a horse-soldier, armed with a long arquebus." This statement seems to have very little bearing on the general purpose of the trip which is to combine fun with serious discussion so that both French and English students come to understand each other better. Each year 40 Carabins come down to be entertained by 40 U of T students. Later in the year the Varsity students move to Montreal to continue the party.

Plans for the weekend are now more or less complete, said Hugh Little, Co-Chairman of the Weekend Committee. The schedule begins with a noisy welcome at Union Station complete with the Blue and White Band and Cheerleaders. Provided anyone ever gets out of the station, there is to be a reception in the Trinity Buttery. Friday will be occupied with a tour of the campus and lectures in the morning, followed by a discussion at the Vic. Union. Dinner, preceded by a gathering in the Warden's apartment, will take place in Hart House. Then comes a "quiet" House party at some spot as yet unknown.

On Saturday, there will be a tour of the city for interested Carabins followed by a Telegram-sponsored luncheon at the Royal York. The afternoon will bring a discussion in the S.M.C. "Coop" and then the piece de resistance, a "Hard Times" party. On Sunday, the morning will be free for Mass. Then, after dinner at their hosts' homes there will be a Tea at the Vic. Union given by the French Clubs of the Campus. That evening those who still have the strength will have to wend their way back to Montreal.

Nearly 100 Toronto students applied for the Carabins weekend. Those finally picked were: Yvonne Adams, John Alexander, Bill Angus, Henry Best, Ann Breithaupt, Albert Cafik, Michael Cassidy, Helen Cleary, Jackie Drew, Paul Duffy, Helen Ferrie, Sylvia Fisher, Josephine Flaherty, Geographic Joy Jaunt Quests Quaint Quebec Asbestos Et Aluminum

Four carloads of University of Toronto geography students headed off for a 2,400-mile round trip to the Saguenay valley last week-end and were hosts to students at Quebec's Laval University.

The students toured 400 miles up the valley with their French-Canadian hosts and visited the gigantic Aluminum Company of Canada plant at Arvida, Que., besides watching the Shipshaw powerhouse in action.

On Thursday morning at 7 a.m. the students left the Toronto campus; they arrived in Quebec city at midnight after having stopped only once or twice to investigate some landforms with true geographic fervour. During the next day the Varsity types were shown various facets of the old city and at night they discovered the true flavour of Quebec, as well as practising the tangy language, more with goodwill than correct grammar.

Another jaunt showed them the picturesque symmetry of the Ile d'Orleans, which still spurns the smoke-stacks of industry from its green fields. In the last hours of the week-end the Geographers travelled down into the Eastern Townships to see the new John-Manville plant at Asbestos, and to get some different views of Quebec's rural and industrial face.

From the South Shore they continued west, and after losing geographers here and there and then finding them again the entourage pulled into Toronto just after dawn Monday morning. "That's about the time you get home from a New Year's party, and that's about the way they looked!" one geographer commented.

Skoolmen Defend Game Drinking; Nurses Defeated

By a vote of 71-45 the Engineers defeated Nursing on the motion "That beer drinking at football games should be abolished." The debates was held in the Mechanical Building at noon yesterday.

Speaking for the affirmative, Cathy Armstrong, II Nursing, said, "Alcohol does not stimulate, it depresses and results in a general weakening of the race. Because men are the chief drunks, they are therefore inferior to women both physically and mentally. Laws prohibiting liquor consumption in a public place, and as future leaders we should uphold the law."

Her opponent, Ian Harrington, II Civil Engineering, countered by saying, "The nurses were the biggest 'boozers,'" and he emphatically denied that men were inferior to women. He said, "If beer goes, what then will take its place other than hard liquor? Beer is a lot safer."

Supporting the motion, June Smith, II Nursing, said, "Beer drinking results in student vandalism and in general an anti-student public opinion. It also has a devastating effect on freshmen, who are supposed to look up to seniors for an example."

The final speaker Nurdy Morgenstein, speaking against the resolution said, "Any liquor prohibition is an encroachment on student rights. People have drunk beer at sports events since they began, and this great tradition is bigger than all of us."

Share Campaign Falls Short

Objective Not Met 40.7% Collected

University of Toronto students apparently think they are, too poor to SHARE, Carl Anderson, campaign chairman, said last night.

With only 40.7 per cent of the $7,500 objective collected so far, Anderson announced yesterday that "we will continue canvassing for another week."

He said eight faculties had not turned in any money whatsoever and only $3,053.53 had been handed over from the other faculties.

"This is only the second time on the Toronto campus that SHARE has not received sufficient support to make its objective," said Anderson.

"I think that given another week, we will be able to hit the mark this year," he said.

Anderson attributed last year's failure to measure up to the objective to the fact the SHARE campaign was held in the spring of the year.

The Fund-raising scheme for SHARE was explained this way by Anderson: The faculties are broken down into classes and each class is supposed to have a representative to approach people, explaining the significance of SHARE and collecting any contributions.

Each faculty also has a representative of SHARE whose duty it is to approach members of the University staff, Anderson explained.

SHARE representatives, Anderson said, may turn contributions into the Students' Administrative Council office opposite University College and Hart House, any day between 1 and 2 p.m.

Anyone wishing to make a contribution to the campaign may leave money at the same office at any time.

First HH Concert Is Next Sunday Finances Needed

The first concert sponsored by the Hart House Orchestra Associates will take place next Sunday, but things do not look as bright as was expected when the Lord's Day Alliance withdrew opposition.

Henry Best, (IV UC), Chairman of the Associates, said last night the condition of the organization was serious.

"If the students do not rally this week to support this organization and make the concert an integral part of campus life, there will be no concerts, possibly no orchestra.

"We had envisaged this project," he said, "as one particularly in the field of the student. It is something students could do to prove they are thinking members of the community and capable of action."

Alfred Pratz will be soloist in a Violin Concerto in December, and in January Ray Dudley will play a piano concerto; Best announced.

"Memberships will be on sale all this week in the Rotunda of Hart House," said Mr. Best.

Massey Visits UofT Declines Interview

Governor-General Vincent Massey was the guest of The University of Toronto yesterday.

The retiring diplomat was present at the consecration of the Trinity Chapel, and later visited the main library and the new University College Men's Residence.

He said he was quite impressed with what he saw on the tour and was "very glad to be here."

After a brief tour of the UC Residence, he closed his visit with a tea and reception, attended by staff and students of the University.

The Governor-General declined to be interviewed by a Varsity staffer, because "I never am, you know."

A Chapel Is Consecrated

Trinity Chapel Is Consecrated Under A Glitter of TV Lights

Television cameras carried the colorful story of Trinity College chapel's consecration across Canada yesterday.

In a blaze of ecclesiastical pageantry carried out by seven brilliantly-garbed bishops of the Anglican Church in Canada, the $600,000 chapel was officially dedicated to "the service and glory of God."

Governor-General Vincent Massey was one of 300 in the specialty-invited congregation.

Broadcast over a C.B.C. television network and relayed later to western Canada, the perpendicular gothic-styled chapel was illuminated for the ceremonies by an estimated 50,000 watts of camera floodlighting.

The television films of the two-hour service were hustled aboard a trans-Atlantic airliner last night for distribution over the British Broadcasting Corporation tomorrow.

The solemn tones of English church plainsong and the four-part harmony of a fanfare of trumpets added flavour to the procession of bishops and priests attired in brilliant scarlet and blue robes.

Six television sets and eight microphones were meticulously concealed behind pillars and pews by C.B.C. technicians so that all parts of the service could be picked up.

One Trinity student described the ceremonies as "a miniature coronation."

The actual consecration was done by Most Rev. W. L. Wright, Archbishop of Algoma and Metropolitan of Ontario. In dedication, the Archbishop traced the sign of the Cross upon the chapel's stone floor with his silver cross, a token that he had taken possession of the ground in the name of Christ.

The Archbishop dedicated the ornaments to be used in Holy Communion and traced the sign of the cross five times upon the altar in symbolism of Christ's wounds.

The chapel barrister, R. H. Soward, Chancellor of the Diocese showed that the building was free from legal encumbrances. The sentence of consecration was signed by Rt. Rev. Frederick Wilkinson, Bishop of Toronto.

A former Provost of the college, Dr. F. H. Cosgrave, delivered the sermon. He said that the founders of the first Trinity chapel more than a century ago felt that religion "will glide by degrees out of the mind unless it be invigorated and reimpresed by external ordinances, by stated calls to worship and by the salutary influence of example."

The Primate of the Church of England, Most Rev. Walter Battey delivered the benediction.

Red Lights Near Whitney Hall

Strange things have been happening of late in the vicinity of Whitney Hall.

It all started Thursday night when a red light appeared in place of the white one at the night entrance. The mystery was apparently solved, however, when a resident said there was a rumour that some of the girls had changed the light themselves.

She said. "It's finally very publicly announced what has been suspected of Whitney Hall for years."

Friday night the second mysterious event occurred: another red light appeared in the archway. Several girls said they thought that it was just part of the decorations for the semi-formal dance being held that night.

"It's the greatest thing that has ever happened to Whitney Hall," said one girl. Another commented that "It changes the character of the whole place."

But the weekend excitement was not yet over. Bright and early Saturday morning, before most of the Whitney girls had recovered from the night before, three men penetrated to the second and third floor tagging for the settlement house.

"It was the first time a man had got to the upper storeys since the engineering raid," said one thrilled co-ed.

Another girl said the taggers got "lots of money." She did not explain her statement.

B&W Band Toots On

By ANNE FRANKS

The Toronto Blue and White Band usually folds after the football season, but this year partly because of its high quality and partly because the members were interested in forming a concert band to play in the hockey game intermissions, the band is continuing its two hour a week rehearsals in the drill hall and even looking for new members—especially girls—to fill out the sections.

Band members come from all over the campus—University College, Victoria, Trinity, Engineering, Dentistry, Pharmacy. Many first year men join to make up P.T. credits but often musicians remain for their entire university career, attracted not only by free game and dance tickets and train fare to out of town games—the whole band goes to each game—but also by the opportunity to work with a group on their instruments which include woodwinds, brasses and drums.

Although band membership has fallen to thirty from last year's forty with only four substitutes instead of ten or twelve, Bill Bartlett, the Bandmaster, a Music Education graduate presently at O.C.E., says that the football season was definitely satisfactory. "We rehearsed longer and harder this year than I can remember," Bill said, "and I've been associated with the band six years. They can read just about anything at sight."

"The band members have never been so good individually," Bill said enthusiastically. "For instance, the other day at a regular rehearsal I decided to try out some of the music around the band room. I pulled out Weber's Concertino for clarinet and asked Murray Dresser if he'd played it before. He said he'd played the solo part once four years ago. We were half way through before I realized he didn't have the music. He played the whole thing from memory."

The band initiated a reorganization program this year which began by cleaning and painting the band room which hadn't been touched for five years. Now the members don't even butt their cigarettes on the floor. The members elected a committee to manage things like publicity. The committee also decides on disciplinary action but attendance at rehearsals has been so good this year that it has rarely been called upon to perform this function.

The assistant bandmaster, Laurie Bower, doesn't march in the band in his fourth year with it. It is convenient to have someone, not hampered by a band uniform to look after organization—everything from formation on the field at rehearsals to petty details like locking dressing room doors during out of town games and taking attendance. Laurie is well able to take over the band if Bill is ill.

Band members consider Bill a strict Bandmaster but, as Bill Maclean, IV C & F, who plays drums says, "He has to be to keep the band up to its standard." The members work very hard at rehearsals but Bill Maclean says although they are reduced to thirty, they have quality if not quantity—and a good time.

Besides the projected intermission concerts at the hockey games, the band played at the United Nations Day Service, the Float Parade and the Remembrance Day Service, and plans to play at the Christmas Tree in Hart House. Bill has arranged an Echo Song by a seventeenth century Italian composer which will be played at the Christmas Tree by two brass quartets, one on the floor and one in the gallery.

TREASURE VAN

Premier Leslie Frost of Ontario will be here Nov. 28 to open the Treasure Van sale of eastern handicrafts, Sybil Strachan, publicity director, announced last night.

The sale is sponsored by the World University Service and sends proceeds to WUS' international program, including relief work in the far east.

"The goods are all hand-made, and cannot be procured anywhere else," said Miss Strachan. "They make excellent Christmas gifts."

PROPAGANDA SEMINAR

for the Seminar on "Press, Radio, and Propaganda" held by the World University Service Committee, John Burbidge, WUS Co-Chairman, announced yesterday.

Students have been invited from as far as Quebec and Windsor and Buffalo to the Caledon Hills farm this weekend, he said. Professor David Savan of the Philosophy Department and several prominent speakers will lead discussions.

There are at least two openings for U of T students, Burbidge said, to be divided between a Canadian student and a foreign one. Applications deadline is 4:30 p.m. today.

ICE SECONDS DROP LEAGUE OPENER

East Yorkers Post 5-3 Victory Riley Leads IV's With 2 Goals

By JOHN BROOKS

Lyndhurst Motors gave indication of a rough-and-tumble hockey season for the THL Major Series as they banged their way to a 5-3 victory over the University Seconds on Saturday night at Varsity Arena. Kingsway Lumber scored a 5-1 win over Pickin' Chicken in the nightcap.

The College men, showing lack of condition and organization in the early stages of the game finished strongly in the final period, and if they improve as rapidly through the year as they seemed to in the 45 minutes of hockey on Saturday night, they should be right up on top when the final reckoning rolls around.

After a brief centre ice ceremony, in which the four coaches were introduced to the fans on hand, Lyndhursts started out strongly and piled up a 4-1 lead in the first frame. Bob Kennedy started the ball rolling at the 1:40 mark as he banged a pass from Brian McAllister past Larry Irons in the White's net. Don Couch gave the Motormen a 2-0 lead at 8:43 as he raced around Don Stewart and slapped the disc past Irons.

Tom Riley got one back less than a minute later as, with Bob Fryday in the penalty box, he took a pass from Clare Fisher and dove it past Junior Johnson. Lyndhursts roared back with two more before the period ended. Fryday got the first at 12:35 from Moe Galand and Normie Gray. A Couch to Nick Dubick to Tom McKillop play produced the fourth East York goal at the 13:30 point.

Couch counted the lone score of the second period for Lyndhursts from McKillop at the 3:23 mark. The Whites held the edge in the third frame, and scored their second and third goals in the last 80 seconds of play. Bill Naylor

Senior Skule Wallops UC 23-7 Moves Into Semi-final With Vic

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

The combination of Mary Larsen's clutch passing and Ken Selby's great running proved more than enough to lead the Senior Engineers to a 23-7 win over University College last Friday at Varsity Stadium. The win earned Skule the right to meet Victoria College tomorrow in a Mulock semi-final encounter.

While Larsen completed only five of 10 passes, three went for touchdowns and a fourth set up one of the three TD pitches. The Skule quarterback fired touchdown passes of 16, 23, and 59 yards, to Steve Eccles, Cal Weaver and Ken Selby respectively. In contrast with the poor pitechouts by UC's two quarters, Larsen's pitechouts and ball-handling were a thing of beauty to behold. His fine faking enabled the SPS backs to romp for large gains, especially in the second half when the UC defence fell apart.

Besides scoring a major, Selby was Skule's top runner. When yards were needed for a first down, he was usually the ball-carrier, plunging up the middle or sweeping the ends.

UC's halfbacks were afflicted with a passion for dropping screen passes, thus accounting in part for the team's poor passing mark of six completions in 17 attempts. John Lambier was five for 14, Dave Sutherland zero for one, and Harvey Salem one for two. Lambier was continually

Skule Tests Artsmen

On Wednesday at noon the soccer classic of the year will be played on the back campus. A representative team from Engineering will play one from the rest of the University. As most of the players on the team are either Blues or past Blues this promises to be a terrific contest.

Last year this annual challenge match was won by the Engineers but they will have a tough time repeating the feat this fall.

Playing for the Engineers will be Blues' leading scorer Ed Bracht, team captain Ron Williams, defencemen Patton, Ounpuu and Gubb, and forwards Ula Sarna and Karl Tamberg. Intermediates are Ochrym, Tilt, Nittenberg, Papahill and Timma.

The Artsmen will have the high-scoring Blue forwards, Green, King and Rava. Other Blues are star goalkeeper Ed Duru, fullbacks Bill Leach and Ron Finch, and halfback Bill Webb. Baby Blues St. Rose and Van Bors plus star interfacially forward Gold Rintoul will be in the line-up.

Unfortunately this will be the last game for Blue fullback Bill Leach and right wing Rod Green. Bill, who will be preaching next year, is a five-year veteran, and Rod, who has played Blues for three years, will be entering Osgoode.

Except for these two players all the remaining Blues should be back next year and the team promises to be just as strong as it has been for the past few years.

All players in Wednesday's game will practice tonight at four o'clock.

Trinity Battles UC At 12:30 For Arts Cup

Four teams battle it out early this week for joint possession of the Arts Faculty Cup, emblematic of interfaculty soccer supremacy. The Division I game goes on the Front Campus this afternoon at 12:30, while the Division II championship is decided Wednesday, same time, same place.

In today's action, Trinity A's take on University College I. The red-and-black won the Cup in 1953-54, while the Redmen haven't had a share of the championship since 1951-52. Trinity gained a spot in the final by defeating Pre-Meds 4-0. The doctors had recorded one of the season's biggest upsets when they edged Victoria to earn the right to play off with the men of Hoskin Ave.

The game on Wednesday will see the defending champions from Emmanuel meeting the Faculty of Forestry, which will be after its first championship in the 60-odd year history of the Arts Faculty Cup. The Woodsman upset Knox College to win the right to enter the finals against Emmanuel.

The teams which win in their respective groups are declared contenders for the Cup but only the winners of the two groups created together on the trophy

The Squash Committee of Hart House has arranged for some introductory lectures on squash to be given by Mr. Derek Boquet, professional at the Badminton and Racquet Club.

Derek is well-known as a player and more particularly for the clinics he has conducted in both tennis and squash.

The first two talks will be in the Music Room on Tuesday and Thursday of this week, from one until two o'clock. If there is sufficient interest it is hoped to have him back at a later date.

The talks will be aimed primarily at those beginning or interested in beginning to play the game.

Irish Face Jr. Skule Prize Is Final Berth

Last year in the final game of the Mulock Cup finals, the Engineers snatched the trophy away from St. Mike's with a last minute touchdown. This year, the Irish are out for partial revenge as they take on Jr. Skule this afternoon at Varsity Stadium in the Mulock Cup semifinals. Both teams are at full strength and both camps have expressed confidence of winning.

The Irish hopes will be riding on the fine passing arm of rookie quarterback Frank Kiely who has passed them into a first place tie with Vic in Group I. Other factors, which place the Irish as pre-game favorites, are the hard running backfielders who have been plaguing the opposition's lines. Veteran Leo McGuigan and rookies Jack Fenn and Ken Stanton are expected to keep running as they have to date. Curt Russell, Tim Donovan and Ray Kostuk will make the Irish line a tough one to crack.

Jr. Skule, although youthful in immaturity, are loaded with potential. They have Joe Whitmore and Izzy Pastushak, former Baby Blues, and, coupled with Wally Adams in the backfield, these three players will be the ones to watch this afternoon. They've all come on coming spruces in Group 2 as they led the team to a first place finish. Defensively, Fred Zorzi, Chuck Laywine and Nels Thompson will be out trying to cripple the Irish machine. The Engineers have begun to march and the march has not yet stopped.

All in all, today's game promises to be a thriller. Both teams have good running and passing attacks which promise to keep the fans on the edge of their seats right down to the last play.

ended by the hard-charging Skule line led by John Stoen.

The UC Redmen led off the scoring in the first quarter on first year's runner Brown's 40 yard punt play. After a timeout in the backfield the ball was flipped back to fullback H. J. Salem who threw from the Engineer thirty-five to end Sid Weinrib. The Skule five yard pass Weinrib ran the remaining ten yards, dragging two Skule men with him. The convert by Weinrib was no good.

Larsen put the Engineers back on the ball game with two passes. A 42 yard strike to Eccles at the UC fifteen, followed by a 100 yard TD pass to Cal Weaver to tie the score at 5-5. Jim MacDonald missed the convert.

With Selby among the biggest stars of the running, SPS needed up the field in the second frame and scored on Larsen's twenty-three yard aerial to Eccles. Larsen then passed to Weaver for the convert, making the score 11-3 for Skule.

The Redmen had a great opportunity to tie the score after a Lambier to Harrison pass took play to the SPS thirty-five. Weinrib manoeuvred himself into the clear but dropped a sure touchdown pass at the five.

UC added two points via a safety touch when Selby fumbled a punt at his five and finally was tackled in his own end zone.

The Redmen snuffed another chance to score after Lambier passes to Weinrib and Gary Vipond brought play to the Skule 16. Two plays failed to pick up ground and on a third down draw play, Myron Sidenberg made only eight of the required 10 yards, allowing Skule to take over on their own eight. After that, UC wasn't in contention.

Selby was almost entirely responsible for Skule's third TD. He ran the UC second half kickoff back to his 51 and then scored on Larsen's pass. MacDonald converted Don Ashley's five yard scoring sprint and MacDonald's convert left the final score tied 23-7.

Torontonensis!

FACTS and FIGURES

By BILL McLEAN, Torontonensis Sales Manager

Producing a year-book for a university the size of Toronto entails a great deal of work. Here are a few facts and figures on the production of the '56 Torontonensis.

—Total production cost—$10,000. This year Torontonensis will again try to break even through the sale of books and the sale of advertising space. 1954 was the first year in the history of the University that Torontonensis was able to be published without a subsidy.

The '54 Torontonensis made a net profit of $45 while the '55 Torontonensis made a profit of $300. These profits are "ploughed back" into the yearbook so that in future years the book will be able to be offered to the students at a reduced price.

It is estimated that for the '56 Torontonensis, revenue from subscriptions will amount to $5500 (with 1300 yearbooks sold), and revenue from advertising and space contracts will amount to $4500.

Each organization which desires write-ups in Torontonensis signs a space contract at $16 per page. This space contract is mainly for the write-ups in the sports, student government, clubs and residences sections of the book. No charge is made for the write-ups in the graduating class section.

It is hoped to increase the number of advertisements in the '56 Torontonensis, so that the student can obtain the benefit of this additional revenue in having a reduced subscription rate. However, the editors will not allow the number of advertisements to increase to the extent where they will detract from the high quality of the book.

Expenses include $1300 for photo costs, office and sundry expense, mailing and delivering, staff salaries, agency commission and publicity, and $8700 for printing and engraving. This year Torontonensis is being printed by Alger Press Ltd. of Oshawa with the engravings being done by Photo Engravers, Ltd.

—Total number of pages—Torontonensis is the largest university yearbook in Canada, each year having at least 450 pages. This means that the cost of the book to the student is only 1 cent per page. McGill's "Old McGill" has 300 pages, while Western's "Occidental" has only 224 pages. It contains over 1000 engravings.

—Cost to the student—$4.00 per copy until November 30. Then $4.50 per copy until March 1 deadline. This price is less than that of the McGill yearbook which is sold to the student at $5.00 per copy.

—total copies printed—last year, 1500, of which 1300 were sold (actually this figure does not compare well with other universities. McGill, with about 5000 students, sells the same number of its "Old McGill").

This year 550 copies of Torontonensis have been ordered so far, with Engineering in the lead with 85 orders. There is only 1½ weeks left until the deadline for the reduced price of $4.00, and it is hoped that sales will increase rapidly during this period, and result in the highest number of sales as of November 30 that Torontonensis has ever had.

A quick visit to one of the many Torontonensis booths on the campus (see adjoining notice) or to your faculty representative before November 30 will ensure you of the best bargain ever had.

comment

We find it ironic that a college which does not deign to have TV in its common rooms should have it in its chapel.

the wheels go round

Ours is an age of mechanization; the automobile has inherited the world.

This nation, once a proud independent country, has become a slave to the newest, shiniest, chromiest, and gaudiest three-tone job just out from Windsor, Oakville, or Oshawa.

This has been increasingly true for years, but the final evidence came just a few days ago when we heard several students arguing in loud voices that the university administration should put up a large free parking building for students.

These students were in effect suggesting that the university should finance a new parking building, when there is a crying need for new facilities in a dozen different departments of the university. These students were asking that the costs of such a building be borne either by student fees (less than 15% of students drive to college) or out of other university funds, sorely needed for other purposes. These students were suggesting that a place to park was the most important criterion of a university.

But we cannot blame these students too much.

Recently, the Metropolitan Toronto City Council agreed only after much soul-searching and furor to appropriate two and one-half million dollars for public transportation as a grant to the Toronto Transit Commission. This same Council, however, had no qualms in authorizing an expenditure of 250 million dollars for a new road network in Toronto, and of the population served — and taxed — by this council, approximately 50% do not own automobiles.

Auto owners have cried for years that they are a persecuted class: that they are over-taxed, and under-privileged. They have claimed that they have no place to park their ever increasing fleets of mechanized behemoths, and that they have no place to drive them without getting their chrome-coated fenders squashed.

Yet these same automobile drivers have never thought that they represent only a portion of the public; and that the vast contributions which their political pressure has forced city councils to make for their relief have come in a large part from those who do not own or use automobiles.

They have never stopped to consider that their insatiable demands have forced the various governments to curtail expenditures on other projects, such as sanitation, parks, and human welfare.

There is some justification for a provincial government using tax revenues derived from gasoline to finance highways, but the spending of civic funds on the building of huge and costly arterial roads represents a novel approach to public finance: taxing the tenement dweller to pay for facilities for the suburbanite; taxing the poor to pay for roads for the rich.

But the automobile is here to stay; and it must be accommodated, at whatever cost to human welfare and to justice.

The automobile will have its parking space, even if the whole university has to be torn down to provide it.

Torontonensis Profiles

Dave Wood

By CLYDE BATTEN

Riding the comeback trail this year is Dave Wood, senior partner in the firm of Wood and Tough, co-editors of the university's yearbook — Torontonensis.

Last year Dave had the whole throne to himself but this year is sharing it with Al Tough, sports editor under the Wood regime.

Now working on his master's degree in Geography, Dave says he came back in order to see some of the reforms and innovations of last year carried through.

"When it is your first year and most of the staff is green it's almost impossible to do all the things you hoped. With a year's experience under my belt I believe many of these things can successfully be done."

Bringing to the job a wealth of past experience, Dave recalls how he once sold seal fat to undernourished caribou in the wilds of Newfoundland.

Another time — at the age of three — he wrote an epic ode for publication in Harper's Bazaar, signed "G.B.S."

Reaching university he turned his attention to more serious pursuits — chiefly academic — and died of a surfeit of

DAVE WOOD

Al Tough

By ANASTASIA

"Getting to know people and participating in curricular activities is more important than says Al Tough.

As Co-Editor of Torontonensis Al is no comment. His responsibilities on the yearbook include letters to deans and clubs, handling the sales manager supervision, make-up and layout office.

"It's sort of inconvenient, doesn't Al. "While the book doesn't take too much time now, things will start to pick up later. When things get really busy, I'll be writing my exams."

Al, a tall, thin second year Honour Psychology student with blue eyes and a short brown crew cut, plays soccer and tennis, swims and roller-skates. For the last two summers Al has worked in a Muskoka resort hotel where he did a lot of swimming. "It was a real ball," says Al.

"Sure, I'm happy to be working on Torontonensis. There's a good bunch of kids to work with down here," Al said when asked about his impression of Toronto.

Al has big plans for the yearbook. He is interesting, not just a collection of deadpan facts. We've combined some of the sections together for a better layout and interest," he said.

In high school Al was Co-Editor of the Pentagon, and when he entered first year he went to work on Torontonensis as Athletics Editor. Wood, the other half of the Editorial Staff, is both playing soccer. When Dave heard of Al's experience, he immediately asked him to work on the yearbook.

The two editors discuss all big decisions between themselves and come to some agreement. Conn Clark, the 'Nensis secretary, thinks the team both world and campus goings-on show themselves.

The subjects are as varied as can be—all the way from the limited "to the class of '36" to the far-reaching "Victory of the United Nations." One printed line served the purpose in 1948, while the 1934 dedication covers the grand total of thirty-three lines. This letter is an excerpt from President H. J. Cody's funeral service in Convocation Hall in Dec., 1933.

A brighter tone is observed in '47 on reading "To University Expansion" (here a giant picture of an excavation) "...to huge pits dug in the ground out of which may emerge great buildings" (do we detect a note of uncertainty?) "...to milling, jostling, unaccommodated throngs" etc.

The editors of the '37 book must have been truly impressed with the 1928 dedication, for he copied it word for word—"To those, who finishing, have just begun" etc. The 'Nensis staff of '27 looked with great optimism to the future in "To the men and women who are yet to make history within these walls." I wonder, can they see us, now?

Around 1928 the pages took on a decidedly yellow hue, with dust everywhere, and after '24 the books are much wider than high. The 1922 dedication was in huge "I" letters, printed over a crest and filling an entire page.

Many famous men are remembered with respect, names we now associate with our residences etc. Sir Robert Falconer, president of our university for a quarter of a century, has the unique honour of being twice the subject of a dedication, in '08 and gain in '32. The 1946 'Torontonensis' was warmly dedicated "To Dr. Sidney Earle Smith."

Nor were all the faculties and colleges forgotten. Between 1930 and 1913 every single faculty appears by itself in a dedication. In 1899 "to the Arts Faculties," while in 1952 our yearbook was dedicated to "Trinity College and Saint Michael's College" (both celebrating their 100th anniversary that year.)

Horror! I nearly forgot to draw your attention to the 1938 dedication. We feel it's one of the best yet. "to the vast corps of TORONTONENSIS staff members of the past forty years in whose anonymous service, symbolic of the true University Spirit, may be found that sacrifice of self which is, and ever will be, the world's greatest need."

Perhaps we could dedicate the 1956 yearbook to the 'Nensis workers of the next fifty years!

Athletes And Dancing Girl On Torontonensis Staff

A drummer, a female hockey player, debaters, athletes, photographers, singers, former yearbook editors, artists, and even a Skule-Nite dancing girl can be found on the Nensis staff. These staffers seem to have a greater variety and quantity of activities than any other group of twenty on this campus.

Staffers come in all shapes and sizes, from all years and many courses. They come from many strange places such as Northern Rhodesia, Napanee, Pickering, and the next-door Varsity office.

These twenty student staffers, along with co-editors Dave Wood and Al Tough, are responsible for the entire make-up and production of Torontonensis '56, except for the mechanical aspects of printing and engraving. Despite their hours of hard work on the yearbook, most staffers keep up several other interests.

For example, Sales Manager Bill McLean (IV Vic) finds time to pound a drum in the Varsity Band and tympanies in the orchestra when he is not palming off a $4.00 Nensis on some cute Vic freshie.

Nensis secretary Connie Clarke (III Trinity) looks after the money for the St. Hilda's Lit. when she's not busy trying to locate photographer Ed Hoshkiw to take some pictures or other. And Athletics Editor Gord Sheppard (II Vic) keeps up on the sports scene by playing several sports and by managing the Vic football squad.

Several staffers have editorial backgrounds. Margot Hill (II Vic) edited Forest Hill Collegiate's "Forester". Now she is in charge of injecting bright and original ideas into the brand new section in this year's 'Nensis. This is the section which will cover Organizations, Student Government, Residences and Publications.

Sheila Rubin and Sandy Stern, the two gals who were co-editors of North Toronto Collegiate's Pentagon last year, are finding the work on 'Nensis even more interesting and challenging.

Anne Breithaupt (a convert from The Varsity) edited the yearbook at Kitchener-Waterloo Collegiate for two years.

"The gal with all the ideas", Robin Colling (I Nursing), is so enthused with yearbook production that she has been campaigning to have a Faculty of Nursing yearbook published next year. It is expected that Robin will be tried and convicted this week of the grave charge of treason against Torontonensis.

The Editors suggested that the 'Nensis paper-cutter be set up as a guillotine for Miss Colling. Only one objection has been raised to this suggestion—it might make the office a bloody mess than usual, the Editors feared. They also said Miss Colling could be convicted on a second cause—that of traitorously expending some of her energies on their rival publication, The Varsity.

While Torontonensis staff have not found their duties too onerous up till now (so far they have been handing out biography sheets to students who hope they are in their final year) they expect the tempo of work to increase sharply after Christmas, till it reaches its peak—right before the exams.

An Editor's Plea

By ROBIN COLLING

You, gentle reader, may take a picture destined to appear in the 1956 Torontonensis. You see, this yearbook covers every event of note all year long, and, of course, our staff photographer can only be in one place at a time.

So, ten chances to one, come next term, your own 'Nensis Rep will be running about begging for pics of that cat or that name or you'll read an urgent plea in The Varsity from some harassed section editor. Why not be sure there's a camera on hand the night your club's doing something lively?

Now, like everyone else, we have a few likes and dislikes in this matter. First of all, gals, leave your U. of T. blazers home that day. Then your club executive won't look like so many quintuplets. Then, pul-lease, move out of those straight monotonous rows.

Action, please. Try having someone let a cage full of wild canaries loose in the room just before that shot! Something unpractical!

Well, one of the most natural pics received last year was of a house of fraternity brothers laughing at the antics of their de. Another suggestion. Say you're a camera club. Why not have someone scribble a huge funny face on a paper and hold it up while someone else draws attention to it with a long pointer?

More don'ts. We'd rather you didn't take up half your section with pictures of inanimate objects.

Finally, just in parting, Phys Ed please let our editors do a little trimming of your pics. We've never recovered from the shock of receiving those rugged gymnasts all cut out like pieces of a giant puzzle!

So Ya Wanna Buy One?

"But damn it, man, I don't want a beautifully bound, 456-page permanent record of my years at this university. As a matter of fact, I don't want ANY kind of a record. I know you and your Torontonenses or whatever you call it; you print pictures of poor guys like me at some frat party, when I'm too stowed to duck a photographer. Instead I grin idiotically at him, with one hand around a glass and the other around some doll. So in twenty years what's my wife going to think of a permanent record like THAT?"

But I'm graduating this year, you say? Damn it, I sure hope so. So that means I get a write-up in Torontonensis, eh? What? What's that? Half a buck? Hell, man, that's enough for four beer. You're not kidding that I get fifty cents as a courtesy free gift from Nensis if I order my copy before November thirtieth? Well look it, bud, it just so happens that I have four bucks right here, so if you'll just sign me up for one of those Torontonensis...

"CANDIDA" Gill's Latest

Another season, another Shaw — something that Hart House Theatre habitués certainly have no quibble over. This year, following the success of last year's The Apple Cart, director Robert Gill goes on to Shaw's classic situation-comedy, Candida, to be presented at the theatre from this Saturday till next.

"Shaw's situations are still contemporary, and the way his characters talk themselves out of them still lively," says the director. "And a man who has a place in most undergraduate English courses should be brought out of the study onto the stage for students to appreciate him fully."

Candida will be the sixth Shaw play presented at Hart House by Mr. Gill, who began his directoral duties here with Saint Joan ten years ago.

This latest production presents Shaw on a favourite tack — showing that man is not all that he thinks he is. Also, a new change is rung on the eternal triangle theme, with an extra-marital problem solved in a surprising and typically Shawian way. Largely figuring in the action are the teacher and the poet — both of whom lose their pretensions as the play progresses — and the cleric's wife, who must choose between them, and very coolly does.

As with many of Shaw's plays, Candida offers an acting plum in the leading female role, with a wide diversity in approach that has been utilized by many of the greatest English-speaking actresses of the past two generations.

The cast of six includes Jane Griffin, last year's Cordelia in King Lear, as Candida, and veteran Henry Jackman as Morell, Candida's harried husband. Jackman, now appearing in his seventh Gill play, goes all the way back to Captain Brassbound's Conversion, his other plays including The Wild Duck and Richard II. Also in the cast are Michael Spivak as Marchbanks, the tremulous third side of the triangle, Marilyn Bevis as Prossy, Les Lawrence as Burgess, and William Copeland as Lexy.

Henry Jackman as Morell and Jane Griffin as Candida in this scene from the Shaw comedy which opens a week's run at Hart House Theatre under the direction of Robert Gill on Saturday, Nov. 26.

The worst part of the undergraduate show at Hart House is the surprising inefficiency of the usually alert art committee in taking care of it. The call for entries (which should go out in time for people like me to blow the dust off my crayons) was given only a week before the show. Admittedly, matted work of all shapes and sizes is a challenge to hang, but the appearance of the gallery suggests that the man with the hammer and nails studied up unrelated heights to hang many of the pictures. Worst of all, the committee is hiding from us the titles of the paintings and the names of the artists. Since artists are under no obligation to sign their names clearly, this places a heavy strain on both the eyes and the imagination of the viewer.

It is a surprise, then, that the show stands up as well as it does, even though many of the men who kept up the exhibition's standards in the past have left us, and taken with them the skill in oils that made it an oil-painting show. Only Jean Galt and Gerald Finley remain to remind us of the days gone by. Miss Galt contributes a sensitive portrait study, Mr. Finley a competent landscape, of the sort that I'm sure he does almost effortlessly by now, while a sketch of some bottles shows us the more playful and interesting side of his painting personality.

The show has been given a different flavour by the entry of so much work of a more "graphic" nature. King Oakes has produced the most arresting of these. A dribble of some substance which repels water-color becomes nucleus for two drawings, the better of them a study of an agitated jazz-player.

There is a danger in this movement away from oil painting to less complex media, that is, the temptation to be slick, just because the actual technique is so effortless. Architects' presentation drawings and modern magazine illustrations are not art in themselves; they are not even trying to be. Unfortunately, some of the best graphic work tasted somewhat commercial. However, if the trend brings a single Sunday student-painter to realize that he can rid himself of his frustrations more easily by expressing himself in a simpler medium than by fighting a valiant losing battle with the complications of oils, then something of a sort will have been achieved.

Massed Minds

Mob psychology is an interesting subject, and CBC's Exploring Minds did a good, if not a thorough, job on surveying the situation last night on the Vancouver-produced television programme.

The programme reached its zenith with the excellent films of mob scenes during Hitler's meteoric rise to power in Germany. Scene after scene of marching feet, rhythmic shouting, impassioned speeches, rolling drums, and the paraphernalia of power had an impact seldom achieved on the screen.

Unfortunately, the rest of the program was therefore somewhat anticlimactic, although some excellent juxtaposition was achieved by contrasting the shots of Hitler's Germany with films of the Richard Riots last spring in Montreal. It can happen here — and

The quiet discussion between the programme's two authors — Dr. Earle Birney and Dr. Neelke of the University of British Columbia — was illuminating, although decidedly dull after the previous violence.

All in all, however, it was an interesting and frightening hour.

Tri-U Choristers at Hart House

I suspect that the first snow on Saturday, the Santa Claus Parade, and Welcome Yule, the carol that opened the Tri-University Concert Saturday evening at Hart House, are all omens of great things to come in the month of December. Welcome Yule, considered solely as the opening item on a concert program given by three university choirs, could lead anywhere — and led everywhere.

The Union Philharmonic Choir from the Guelph O.A.C., the first choir on the program, plunged into Rocks My Soul, Brahms Love Song, Jacob's Ladder, and (of all things) a Cowboy Carol. The spirituals and the Cowboy Carol were sung with zest and vigour, although time and enunciation left much to be desired. The Brahms and the plainsong did not come off too well; a deficiency in the latter presentation reminded me of Dr. Healey Willan's remark that choirs as a rule are reluctant to attempt this kind of music because it offers more glory to God than to the choir.

The Hart House Glee Club, under conductor Ward McAdam, delivered the second part of the concert, and I think, acquitted itself admirably. I felt that the Alma Mater, Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray (in which soloist Jerry Epstein stole the show) and Bonnie Dundee were particularly commendable. The final number by the group, Good Night Ladies re-affirms, I suppose, the choir's intention of rolling merrily into the future as an all-male chorus despite the noticeable variety which the other two co-ed choirs on the program brought to their presentations.

The A Cappella Chorus from Cornell, a small and select group, rendered a more ambitious program than the other two choirs, including the Bach motet, Jesu meine Freude, Monteverdi's Il mio son giovinetta and three of Hindemith's Six Chansons. These three chansons were a new experience for me, and so lightly and delicately sung that conductor Robert Hull deserves a special word of praise for attempting these difficult musical miniatures. The Bach motet, too, received a treatment as moving as it was disciplined.

Along with all the other women in Massey Hall Saturday night (about 77% of the audience) I enjoyed hearing the Obernkirchen Children's choir sing immensely.

The Choir has a dual appeal; musical and emotional. They undoubtedly sing very well and have received excellent training from their conductor, Edith Moeller. Their enunciation, their breath-control, their tone and their pitch are all such as could be envied by the most mature artist. And their expressiveness was obvious, even though the content of the songs was always relatively simple.

That their expressiveness was so obvious was the only deterrent to my complete enjoyment of the concert. The tiniest tots in the

The final section of the programme consisted of three numbers done by all three choirs, conducted by Ralph Kidd, Robert Hull and Ward McAdam in that order. As is usually remarked at the opening of a musical review, the choirs sang to a capacity audience, and Great Hall was an ideal setting for this satisfying evening of voice.

Anne Carnwath

obernkirchen choir

front row wagged their heads, with their huge solemn eyes rolling. It was a sight to see, and I suppose showmanship is justified in taking advantage of this to a certain extent. But sometimes it seemed that those young "angels in pigtails" were moving their heads not from an unconscious delight in the music but from a conscious delight in the audience's sentimental reaction, and then I felt bad.

The majority of the songs on the programme had some story to them, or else consisted of a musical imitation of creatures in nature, a whirlwind, a dandelion, a pee-wee bird, an echo and so on. There were sung with a consistently lively tempo and a sense of humour that was quite delightful. Particularly successful was A Little White Hen by Antonio Scandello and the madrigal Soldier's Serenade and Echo Song by Orlando Di Lasso.

The most entertaining event of the evening was a Leher-ib musical fantasy composed by Friedrich Wilhelm Moeller on the Grimm fairy tale about the dove, the dog, the cat, the cock, and the robber's den. There were four soloists, dressed in appropriate animal suits. Due to the clarity of their tone, their slight voices carried remarkably well in Massey Hall. This is quite an achievement, for young solo voices are usually breathy, unsure in pitch, and uncontrolled in tone, and these voices were susceptible to none of these faults. The cat's meow's stole the show. The chorus, including the six solo singers who blend remarkably well, provided an oratorical background of narration and commentary.

The end of the programme threatened to be an anti-climax after this. However the fourth, or was it the fifth encore, was the record-album favourite, Happily Wanderer, and the audience content to wander away happily.

P.S. It seems that having more recordings is one of the chief audience drawing factors these days. It's too bad we Canadians can't get more records made.

Runneth-Over

Rock Island, Illinois: Student raids on the Augustana campus have led to much criticism. The Student Union Board of Control went so far as to pass a motion condemning such actions on the part of Augustana students, and also to send a letter of apology to the St. Ambrose student government — representative of the other campus involved in the raid.

A Student Union proclamation stated that, "The Board of Control expresses dismay and alarm toward the irrational and destructive actions on behalf of Augustana students in certain interschool relations during the last ten days."

Incidents in the affair had been the stealing of Homecoming banners and signs from St. Ambrose, and the rooting up of Augustana coalpits.

Ottawa: All college students in Ottawa are admitted to movie theatres at the same price as those for high school students. The arrangement was worked out last year by Carleton College and Ottawa University.

Morgantown, West Virginia: Eleven students of the West Virginia University were released by police after a short stay in jail. They were arrested for painting the Pitt campus with West Virginia slogans.

Pitt's Athletic Director asked that they be released, and pointed out to police that such things are to be expected in the Pitt-West Virginia rivalry.

Apparently no action will be taken against the students.

Wolfville, N.S.: Maritime university papers want a third classification for trophies at the annual Canadian university press conference. They feel there is too much competition for the Jacques Bureau trophy.

Consequently they have recommended a classification which would include any university with an advertised enrollment under 1800 students and publishing a paper less than twice a week. This will give the smaller universities a fairer chance, the Maritime conference felt.

If the third classification is accepted, R. J. Rankin, editor of the Halifax Herald, said that he would be glad to donate a trophy for the purpose.

Halifax, N.S.: In no other country do the young people have the opportunity that the youth of Canada have today, the Honorable George Drew told students at Dalhousie University, last week. Mr. Drew, who has just completed a two-month, 15,000 mile tour, said that "Graduate students now have the brightest prospects known."

Montreal: NFCUS is trying to make students think on a national scale and is trying to foster national unity through its program. Peter Martin, NFCUS President, told the student executive at Sir George Williams College. He used as examples the Canadian Debating Association and the Canadian University Press, which were formed by NFCUS.

While CUP came into existence with NFCUS as its parent organization, the two soon severed any direct connection, and CUP has since been completely on its own, sometimes supporting, sometimes criticizing NFCUS activities.

Ottawa: Five students have been fined by the Judicial Committee of the Students Council at Carleton College — for drinking or carrying alcoholic beverages into a college building.

Ithica, New York: The United States Supreme Court unanimously overruled a lower court decision and declared that the controversial movie "The Moon Is Blue" could not be banned on the grounds of obscenity or sacrilege.

A stage production of "The Moon Is Blue" was cancelled in Ontario last year because of protests at a Catholic college.

Model Parliament Elections

Politics And Labor

The Mock Parliament elections will be held this Thursday. In an effort to inform campus opinion on political issues, The Varsity today presents the views of the four contending parties on Labor: Are Labor's demands reasonable: should labor legislation be liberalized?

Conservative

The two primary interests of Labor today are first, the provision of plenty of good-paying jobs, and secondly, Social Security.

The Progressive Conservative party believes that the only way to meet these demands is by an expansion of Canadian industry. Canada must take vigorous steps to encourage new industry in Canada, and halt the complete export of all our raw materials to the U.S. and the U.K. This would have the double advantage of increasing the number of jobs available, and also lowering prices.

With the resultant increase of sales, Canadian management will be much more willing and able to meet the just demands for Social Security and higher pay. To aid this the P.C. party would institute a government research program, and would reduce income and sales tax. This would not lower government revenue, because with the increase in consumer buying power there will be an overall increase in the National Income and in tax revenues.

The Progressive Conservative party believes that the Liberal Government has betrayed the Canadian worker in the field of Unemployment Insurance.

A Progressive Conservative government would recognize this federal responsibility, and would give benefits to all unemployed employables for the duration of their unemployment.

Labor-Progressive

(COMMUNIST)

To protect and extend the hard-won gains of labor, the following steps should be undertaken:

- (a) Enactment of a Bill of Rights which will include guarantees of the rights to picket, organize trade unions and of free assembly.
- (b) Removal of the anti-democratic, anti-labor sections in the recently revised Criminal Code.
- (c) A new Labor Relations Act should be enacted to eliminate delays and to guarantee union security.
- (d) A national minimum wage should be established, and a shorter work week without reduction in take-home pay.
- (e) Revision of the Unemployment Act is urgent. All time limits on payments should be abolished. As long as the wage earner is unemployed, the fund should pay full benefits (regardless of contributions) until the worker finds a new job.
- (f) The enforcement of equal pay for equal work legislation for women and young workers.
- (g) The Fair Employment Practices Act must be strengthened by providing adequate penalties in order to make the law effective.

Liberal

We believe that the greater freedom labor has to organize and to act collectively through trade unions, the greater in the long run will be the sense of responsibility of labor to the whole community.

Freedom is sometimes abused; but the occasional abuse does not alter the fact that freedom does promote a sense of responsibility.

It was a Liberal government which established the Federal Department of Labor and practically all the measures in the federal field of benefit to labor have been enacted when our country has been fortunate enough to have a Liberal government.

The Liberal party has encouraged the organization of labor and promoted collective bargaining without which labour cannot deal on a basis of equality with management and investment.

The Liberal party has always been the friend of labor, but we have always stood for equal rights for all citizens and we do not believe, as some parties seem to think, that labor alone should expect to control society.

C. C. F.

The CCF program for labor is designed to set certain minimum standards throughout the Dominion, to protect the rights of all wage-earners, and to guarantee an adequate living standard to unemployed workers. After the necessary constitutional amendments, a national labour code will:

- (1) Guarantee the right of every employed person to join the bona fide union of his choice and provide penalties for interference with this right;
- (2) Streamline conciliation procedure;
- (3) Apply fully in the case of civil servants and others not at present covered;
- (4) Guarantee the right to strike;
- (5) Establish a minimum wage of 90¢ per hour, with provisions for periodic adjustments;
- (6) Establish a 40-hour week and time and a half for all hours over 40;
- (7) Provide a three-week vacation with pay after a year's employment for all employed persons.

Finally, the Unemployment Insurance Act will be amended to liberalize benefits and to coordinate the Act with guaranteed annual wage schemes. Administrative changes will be necessary to eliminate abuses of the Act.

Grey Cup Game Will Stay West If UofT Rigid

Vancouver (CUP): Unless the University of Toronto makes substantial rental concessions on Varsity stadium, the President of the Canadian Rugby union does not want to bring the Grey Cup game back to Toronto.

Jim McCaffery said he was not in favour of alternating the game and would rather leave it in Vancouver.

McCaffery also said that if the game was to be brought back to Toronto the Union would have to be given assurance by the Toronto Hotel Owners' Association that more accommodation at a cheaper rate would be available.

UBC Parade Death

Vancouver (CUP): One death and one casualty resulted after the Float Parade at the University of British Columbia on November 5. Two passengers fell off one of the floats and under the wheels of an oncoming electric bus.

Jon McArthur, 16, was killed almost instantly after being thrown from the float. A fourth year Arts student, Margie McNeil was also thrown under the bus, and her injuries are described as "serious but superficial."

The two were passengers on the Publication's Board Float after the Homecoming Parade was over. The accident took place about 2:00 p.m. in the afternoon.

He Likes Guy's Jacket Other Slugs Him Back; Path Gives One Willies

Complaints that students have been "approached" on Philosopher's Walk have been received by Varsity staffers.

The dimly-lit path, leading from Hoskin Ave. to Bloor St., has for some time been notorious among Toronto students as a meeting-place of homosexuals.

One student reported that he was followed one night recently by a young man half the length of the walk. When he stopped to light a cigarette, he said, the fellow came up and told him he "liked his jacket."

The student said: "I slugged him."

Many other reports have been received of the "flitting figures" which patrol the walk and the grass slopes to either side. One student, who preferred to remain anonymous, commented: "When you do walk down the path, you hear them all around you."

A St. Hilda's coed said: "There are yells and screams coming out of that area all the time." St. Hilda's College is adjacent to the walk on Devonshire Place.

Two lamps have been put out on the walk this year and have not been replaced.

Several persons stated it gave them "the willies" to walk up the path. They added they would not do so unless absolutely necessary.

One first-year student said: "I didn't know what the walk was like but I sure found out fast enough. I walked up there one night and a fellow came up and talked to me.

"He said he was a Varsity graduate, and we had an interesting conversation. Then he asked me: 'Would you believe me if I told you I were a homosexual?'"

The student said he talked for a while and then left—hurriedly.

University officials were not available for comment on the situation.

SPS Doubts Collection All Goes Into SHARE

"Feeling that money given to SHARE is not all reaching its proper source, may be the cause of its failure on campus," said Lee Broderick, External Affairs Rep. for SPS yesterday.

He based this statement on an article on "charity graft" in a last year's issue of Maclean's. He quoted the article as stating that often only about 18% of the money given to charitable drives ever reached its proper source. "People don't there is no use in giving if those who run the campaign don't turn everything over," said Broderick.

One member of SPS said that while engineers are the most generous group on campus, they just don't believe in SHARE and therefore won't meet the objectives.

And still another engineer said that SHARE wasn't doing any good.

Carl Anderson, SHARE campaign chairman, refuted these statements. "We have definite proof that well over 50% of our money does go to definite causes in foreign countries," he said. Another 15% went directly to Pitna University last year to bring an exchange student to U of T. The rest goes to pay necessary expenses, and to the world organization to aid overseas students.

"Out of all the money collected at U of T no more than $1,000 stays within Canada," Anderson stated.

G. D. Kelly, First Vice-President of the Engineering Society, felt that the recent Red Feather Drive was an important factor in the failure of the SHARE campaign.

In reply to this Anderson stated that the average U of T student gave 20 cents to the Red Feather campaign. This would have amounted to $100,000.

An 11 per cent increase, from 40.7 to 51% of the $7,500 objective was reported yesterday by Anderson. "The SHARE campaign is beginning to look a little more encouraging, but students still will have to put on a big effort to meet the objective," he said.

The campaign is to continue for another week.

Architects Say New City Hall Just Inhuman Pile Of Stones

Toronto's proposed new City Hall was condemned in an open letter to Mayor Phillips from students at the University of Toronto's School of Architecture. "Why have we been presented with this monstrous monument to backwardness? Should the Toronto City Hall become another member of the insipid collection of Insurance buildings on Bloor St.?" asked the Architectural students, calling the planned building a "funeral home of vast dimensions."

"These two colourless and inhuman piles of stone do not satisfy our feeling for beauty," said the students.

"This structure represents nothing more than a monument to our city Fathers rather than a symbol of the progressive attitude our administration is supposed to support in a democracy."

The students' letter referred to the Massey Commission report that all civic buildings should be the object of competitions to insure good design and free enterprise.

They recommended a national competition for Toronto's City Hall. If competition is impossible at this time, the letter continued, "a special Architectural committee of critics could be chosen."

UofM Secedes

Winnipeg (CUP)—The University of Manitoba will probably secede from the National Federation of Canadian University Students as a result of a student referendum vote held here Wednesday.

Fifty-five per cent of the eligible voters turned out and voted 1,284 to 888 for withdrawal.

The U of M Students' Union is now expected to vote themselves out of NFCUS, leaving the university with an extra $2300 originally slated for the federation.

Miles Pepper, UMSU President, told the Manitoban that he was "very pleased at the wisdom shown by the students at this University."

Meanwhile NFCUS officials expressed "great disappointment at the outcome."

Bill Smyth, NFCUS Co-Chairman, at the U of T, commented: "It seems that the UMSU president has worked a minority into a frenzy. There'll be a new president next year. They'll come back."

Canadian Students At Cornell Like Bi-Sexual Student Union

By CATHE BRESLIN

As a touch of frosting to its Canadian Exchange Weekend, Cornell University produced a three-inch blanket of snow on its campus over the past weekend.

Fifty Canadian students shared the Cornell hospitality, representing a large collection of universities ranging from McGill to Waterloo. The Toronto delegation consisted of Donna Lough (III Vic), John MacLeod (S.G.S.), John Switzer (II Law), Ron Wintrob (I Meds), Ann Hosack (III Vic), Allan Millard (IV UC), and Cathie Breslin (III St. Mike's).

The major official activities of the weekend were a tour of the campus, a panel discussion on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and a talk on American Foreign Policy by Professor Dexter Perkins.

The visitors were encouraged to attend any classes that interested them, but discovered that on a campus of this size this was easier planned than done. Some rather confused Engineering students found themselves listening to a lecture on modern philosophy. One bewildered student saw (or thought he saw) a horse disappearing through a doorway, and was relieved to learn that it was bound for the dissecting lab of the veterinary students.

The exchanging students were impressed by the size of the campus and the number of its buildings (though Cornell's enrollment is only 9,000, the Toronto students found that the spacious campus seemed twice the size of their own). They particularly noticed Anabel Taylor Hall (the modern center of the inter-denominational religious life of the campus), and the co-educational student union, Willard Straight Hall, which seemed to have most of the better features of Hart House, with the added attraction of the opposite sex.

Among the happier memories of the Canadian visitors will be the tradition of the suspension bridge over the deep gorge that divides the campus in two. Ac-ording to history, any co-ed who refuses a kiss on the bridge will bring about its collapse. And as one happy Cornell male pointed out, "It hasn't fallen yet!"

TV Comes To College

(From The Michigan Daily)

Like most large universities in the country, New York University is struggling with a solution to the problem of first-year English composition courses.

At NYU they've worked out a new answer.

One English instructor sits in a small University television studio, while students watch on separate classrooms screens. Each room contains about 40 students, and two 24 inch screens.

Although meeting protests by both students and faculty, Dr.

Moneys Galore In U of T Store From Bequests

Heading a list of gifts to the University of Toronto amounting to about $150,000 is one of $4,000 from Mrs. Sybil M. W. Fitzgerald of London, England, to establish the Augustine Fitzgerald fund.

Income from the fund will provide an annual scholarship for Canadian born English-speaking post-graduate students for language study in French. Other gifts include:

$500 from Niemi's Book and Associates Limited, to be used to assist the work of the Faculty Relations with Overseas Students organization;

$10,000 from the McLean Foundation towards the honorarium of University College's Sir Daniel Wilson Residence;

$25,000 from the Ontario Foundation for creation by Dr. R. F. Farquarson and Dr. R. M. James of a Cardiovascular Unit at the Toronto General Hospital for one year.

Oscar Cargill, chairman of NYU's English department, says the program is "doing well as expected" and suggested it must be an answer to the expected teacher shortage in 1960.

That might well be, and perhaps by 1970, some other educational genius might invent "teaching robots" which could be adjusted to speak at a volume loud enough for classes held at football stadiums.

Oh yes, NYU's $52,000 financial support for the TV program comes from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. Advancement, phooey.

On Parking

The Editor,
The Varsity:

To follow up my first letter I now make the following concrete suggestions regarding student parking facilities:

a) A committee be appointed by SAC to investigate the possibility of acquiring a permanent student parking lot near the university. Perhaps University and city authorities could aid the Committee in financial and other ways.

b) Varsity conduct a poll among student car owners, regarding their willingness to participate in the upkeep of such a parking lot, say to the extent of $15.00.

c) SAC give special parking stickers to all student cars. Police be requested to allow such cars all day parking on city streets around the university till such time as a permanent parking lot has been acquired.

A Short Brew

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The Chaplain to Hart House humbly acknowledges the well-pointed rebuke of Mr. Ron Stroud (III UC). The error was a glaring one to be sure and the Chaplain confesses himself to be the author of it. He can only plead that the statement concerning Socrates was made without reflection in the midst of a barrage of questions. The blunder is all the more deplorable since the Chaplain has read more than one History of Philosophy. Readers of The Varsity will be as grateful to Mr. Stroud for this correction as is the Chaplain himself.

Thank you sir. Why not drop into my office sometime and we could discuss the question "Is Suicide Justifiable?" in private—perhaps over a short brew—of hemlock?

an unhealthy situation

Philosopher's Walk has long been an institution around the University of Toronto. It is in the realm of tradition, one of the things that a student is likely to mention years after graduation when permitting himself to be sentimental about his university.

The beauty of Philosopher's Walk. In summer a place where squirrels approach one, crawling closer in circles and finally sitting up, paws begging. A place to walk, where there is grass and a place to meditate without going anywhere. In Winter a place of cold stillness, all sounds muffled in the snow, where at night there is the warm glow of the yellow lights from Trinity and the cold patches of white light reflected on the snow from the infrequent lamps. It is a place where students have walked on their way home, pausing perhaps in a darker spot to be close to one another.

But there is no beauty left when the informality and freedom of the walk are being perverted and abused. Several students have been robbed and hurt on the premises. Many students are reluctant to walk through it at night and even infrequent police motorcycle patrols have done little to help the situation.

We would like to keep our Philosopher's Walk as it has been, but we would be prepared to give up its dimly-lit atmosphere to the glare of bright lights if this is the only remedy to the situation.

Medsmen and embryo lawyers will get together on Wednesday to discuss the issue—"Law and Medicine—Is There a Conflict of Interests?"

The occasion is the first in a series of panel discussions sponsored by the Law Club concerning law in its relation to other fields of public interest. Edson Haines, colorful downtown legal personality, is expected to moderate the views of Dean Macfarlane of Medicine and Dean Wright of Law, as is Charles Dubin, who recently represented Argo football player Tom Dubinski against the Detroit Lion Football Club.

Said Bill Angus, of the Law Club, "lawyers are always accused of being crooked, but we have a thing or two to settle with the medics; they're always leaving people cut up about something."

Dave Melnick, II Law, advised that all prospective lawyers and defenders of the medical faith had better arrive by 8:00 p.m. this Wednesday evening at the Debates Room in Hart House since the doors will be closed once the limited seating accommodation is occupied.

SPANISH ARCHITECTURE LECTURE

Dr. Iniguez Angulo of the University of Madrid spoke to a capacity crowd in U.C. yesterday afternoon. Dozens of slides illustrated the talk on the great cathedrals of Spanish architecture from Granada to the present. As Prof. Goggio afterwards stated, "Dr. Angulo has contributed much to help us appreciate the structure and artistic beauty of the great Spanish monuments."

St. Mike's Are In Mulock Final Junior Engineering Defeated 7-0

By JOHN VOJTECH

In a game that was reminiscent of former Skule—St. Mike's play-off clashes, the Irish broke the jinx that the Engineers have had on them in playoff competition as they eliminated Jr. Skule by outlasting them in a tight 7-0 overtime victory. The entire game was hard fought and well played with both teams shining, especially the Irish defence which stopped Skule Irish cold within yards of the Irish goal line on three different occasions.

It wasn't until the first overtime period that St. Mike's were able to score. Brian Anderson kicked what proved to be the winning point as he kicked the ball deep into the Skule end zone, where Vic Cuff was forced to run out of bounds thus conceding at the point. The Irish kept the Skule team hemmed in their zone and when they recovered possession of the ball, promptly marched down the field to the Skule one yard line. From there, Leo McGuigan rambled over the line for the major. Frank Kiely converted.

The scoring seemed to take the steam out of the Skule attack in the latter portion of the game. They did succeed in getting the ball down into Irish territory but the Irish regained possession of the ball and held it for the final three minutes of the second five minute overtime period. The game ended with St. Mike's on the Skule thirty yard line.

Although the offensive teams gained many yards for both teams, it was the defensive set up which gained the most attention. The Irish line of Tim Donovan, Ted Ingson, Jake Huschilt, Jack Andrews, Roy Kostuk, Jim Rosart and Buddy Fletcher played well and when the occasion arose, as it often did, they were equal to the task. Skule was within the fifteen yard line three times, but the Irish line held them from scoring each time. If the Irish owe the victory to any person, place, or thing, they owe it to the fine play of their linemen, Jack Fenn turned in his usual reliable performance in the backfield as did Ken Stanton, but it was veteran Leo McGuigan who gained the personal revenge of at last beating a Skule team in the finals. Frank Kiely proved his worth as a quarterback as he led his team on to victory.

The Men of Skule played what can be called literally, a whale of a game. Izzy Pastushak, Walt Adams and Joe Whitmore tore off sizeable gains for the Skule team well. Defensively, Adams and Pastushak came up with bone shattering tackles. They were aided in this by Bill Perkins, Fred Zorzi and Harry Cornish,

Ice Blues Play Irish

Varsity's Ice Blues open the season this afternoon in Varsity Arena when St. Michael's Majors will be visitors on Blue Ice in a renewal of exhibition rivalry begun some four years ago.

Blue coach Jack Kennedy may find himself in trouble when game time rolls around, with three key players on the limp. Right winger John MacDonald is still out with a gimpy knee although he skated in last night's practice. MacDonald should be ready for action in time for Friday's contest with East York Lyndhursts.

First and second line centres Don Cossar and Brian Anderson may not play this afternoon either, although Cossar's injury consists of a slight laceration across the cheek, sustained in practice last night when he stopped a stick. Anderson broke his nose in yesterday's interfaculty football semi-final.

Currently riding on top of the OHA Junior 'A' series, the Irish should be a good test for this season's Blues, who will begin the defence of their Intercollegiate title December 9th against McGill. Kennedy has yet to make a few cuts for his final roster but will wait until after today's game before paring the squad to league size.

The Blues have five more exhibition games before the league opens but none at home so this is the fans' only chance to assess the playing attraction of the stars. They meet Lyndhursts Friday at East York Arena and then leave Tuesday night for Colorado and a four-game series with Denver University and Colorado College.

Victoria Meets Sr Skule In Semi-Finals

With their junior counterparts eliminated, Senior Skule will have a real battle on their hands if they want to see the Mulock Cup around the School of Practical Science next year when they go against Victoria College, this afternoon at Varsity Stadium.

Their task will even be tougher because Victoria is injury free while the Blue and Gold have three men on the sidelines. Peter Beck tore some ligaments in his knee in the UC-Skule quarter-final and Al Wong and Bob Leask have been out for sometime. Leask has a broken ankle, Nevertheless, Skule's coach Wally Mellor thinks that his team will give Vic its best game of the season. He feels that Friday's 23-7 slaughter of UC was the lift his squad needed to take them all the way. Mellor had his boys run through a light workout yesterday evening.

Meanwhile, the injury free Victoria team were running through "several new gimmicks and a new formation that should startle the football experts." These were the words of Vic coach John Chisolm yesterday afternoon. He also added that his team was in the best shape it had been in all year and that they were raring to go.

Skule will start Merv Larson at quarter back with Doug Stewart, Bruce Smith, Ken Selby and Ron Ellis making up the rest of the backfield, Vic's backfield will consist of Frank Ebenhardt, Bob Churchwood, Paul Newman, Steve Moriarity and Norm Williams.

Notes . . . In regular season play Vic beat Sr. Skule twice by 22-6 and 12-0 margins . . . Today's game begins at 1:30 . . . Our genial sports editor picks Vic by a 12-7 score

Model Parliament Elections

Politics And Foreign Policy

Today The Varsity presents the statements of the four campus political parties on Foreign Policy. The Mock Parliament elections are this Thursday.

Progressive-Conservative

In spite of an essentially bi-partisan foreign policy, there are certain matters upon which the Progressive Conservative Party feels the government has been slow to act.

Firstly, we feel that more consideration should be given to the question of recognizing Red China. The attitude of the government seems to have been one of closing its eyes to an unwelcome truth.

Our party wholeheartedly supports the United Nations. At the same time, we feel that Canada should take a greater part in the movement to revise the Charter.

We also support the N.A.T.O. It is necessary for the Western world to keep itself in a state of constant readiness. On the other hand, Canada should support any genuine desire of Russia for friendlier relations.

We recognize that one of the basic elements of Canadian Foreign Policy is friendship with the U.S. On the other hand, Canada should not neglect the tremendous economic, political and cultural advantages available to us through our membership in the British Commonwealth.

The Progressive Conservative Party has long urged the government to increase its aid to underdeveloped countries through the UN and the Colombo Plan. This is the most effective way to fight Communism.

Liberal

The nations of South East Asia are today going through a social revolution. They are feeling the growing pains which come with their emergence from a feudal to an industrial society.

The Liberal Government in Ottawa, on behalf of the Canadian people, is extending these nations a helping hand through the Colombo Plan. Through this plan we have contributed $25,400,000 annually for economic development mainly in India, Ceylon and Pakistan.

In addition the Liberal Government has brought about the donation of an N.R.X. atomic power reactor to India—the first atomic reactor to make its appearance in that part of the world.

Liberals feel that contributions to underdeveloped countries will not only benefit the countries concerned, but, by increasing world stability, will be of value to all countries.

The U. of T. Liberal Club, after studying the scope of the Colombo Plan, commends the federal government for the action it has taken — while at the same time urging it to broaden the extent of Colombo aid, especially to countries of S. E. Asia not yet benefiting from it.

CCF

The foreign policy objectives of the CCF are two-fold: international co-operation for the improvement of the condition of all peoples and a determined effort at the achievement of world peace. Feeling that the increasing emphasis on the military is serving to heighten international tensions, the CCF proposes a foreign policy which would shift the emphasis to social, economic and political methods of achieving world understanding including:

1) Canadian leadership in securing a world disarmament program through an international commission. This is a prerequisite of any attempted solution of the German problem, the tension in the middle east and an end to the cold war. Until then Canada should maintain her armed forces for the use of NATO and the UN.

2) A program of world mutual economic aid including greatly expanded contributions to the Colombo Plan and technical aid to underdeveloped countries. Canada should take immediate action in the disposal of wheat surpluses to needy countries, preferably through international agreement.

3) Canadian initiative in the UN for self-determination of all peoples and admission to the UN of all nations.

4) The encouragement of greater contact between Canada and the non-Canadian countries for the improvement of world understanding.

Labor-Progressive

COMMUNIST

The Geneva Conference of heads of government supports and strengthens the twin principles of peaceful co-existence and negotiation as the method of solving international differences. It rejected the idea that war is inevitable. It laid the basis for the relaxation of international tension and the solution of outstanding problems by patient, persistent negotiation.

Canada should exert its influence in the spirit of Geneva to

(a) End the arms race by gradual disarmament in all countries, outlaw the A & H bombs and all weapons of mass destruction. Utilize atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

(b) Return fully to the principles of the UN Charter — friendship among peoples, no interference in the internal affairs of one state by another. Recognize the People's Republic of China.

(c) Produce a peaceful solution to the German problem, the Middle East crisis, etc.

(d) Encourage trade with all countries and facilitate cultural, sport and student exchanges.

Arts Cup Finals

UC Downs Trinity 4-3

Yesterday UC 1sts beat Trinity A's, 4-3, in the final of the Arts Cup, emblematic of the Division I soccer championship. This proved to be the best interfaculty game this season. The score was a good indication of the play with both teams fighting for more goals right up to the final whistle.

Except for the absence of Trinity fullback, Gibson, both teams were at full strength. Trinity won the toss and kicked with the wind. They opened the scoring in the first minute of play on a shot by inside right Weynerousky from a pass by centre forward Stephen Clarkson. UC began to attack and centre forward Gord Rintoul combined well with inside right Dysard, but poor finishing spoiled the play.

After 15 minutes, Rintoul evened the score on a very well taken shot. Both Dysard and outside Brown combined to put Gord through.

UC went ahead after a scramble in the Trinity goal mouth with UC forwards Rintoul, Dysard, Brown and Logue all just missing, but then outside right Matulis placed the ball well away from the Trinity goal keeper for the tally.

The play now moved from one goal to the other, and Trinity scored again to tie the game, 2-2. Weynerousky took a free kick 5 yards outside the penalty area and Trásewick booted the ball past Sopts in the UC net. Trinity now took the offensive and came through with the best goal of the game, as Christafolokas headed the ball inside the post off a long cross by Weynerousky.

Right after half time, both teams had excellent chances to score but poor finishing again led to their downfall. During the first half of this period, the Trinity defence had the UC forwards bottled up, but as the UC defence moved up to help their forwards the Trinity defence began to crack.

UC left half, Sandsrom, took a free kick just inside the touchline which centre forward Golubov booted past the Trinity goalie. It was all UC now, and they took a well deserved lead 4-3 when Golubov scored again in the dying minutes after outside left, Brown's long shot hit the crossbar, but Rintoul could not get the rebound.

SHARE Officials Report

MONEY IS NOT DIVERTED

75% of Money Last Year Reached Intended Projects WUS Co-Chairman States

Officials of the SHARE campaign vigorously denied last night that money collected on campus was not reaching its proper destination.

"Last year 75 per cent of the money collected here went directly to the advertised projects," said John Burbidge, campus co-chairman of World University Service, sponsoring agency for the drive.

"This year about the same amount is budgeted for the four projects in Japan, Indonesia, Israel, and Pakistan and to bring a scholarship student to Canada."

E. A. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, said:

"As far as we are concerned we handle the receipts and pass them all on to the proper WUS authorities. Certainly nothing is taken out here."

These officials were referring to charges levelled Monday night by Lee Broderick, an executive of the Engineering Council

Broderick said: "People feel there is no use in giving if those who run the campaign don't turn everything over."

Last night Bill West, one of engineering's representatives to the SAC, said he didn't see what all the fuss was about. "I saw the SHARE budget today and everything looks fine to me."

Carl Anderson, campaign chairman, said: "I think it strange that Lee Broderick should be misinformed about the expenditure of SHARE funds since he is an External Affairs Representative and it is his job to know about these things."

The Executive Secretary of WUS in Canada, Lewis Perinbam, said Toronto has always been among the most generous universities in contributing to the relief work of WUS.

"It would be a great pity if unsubstantiated charges were to seriously undermine the conscientious effort of serious students."

"The campaign cannot be called a failure. Already the 50 per cent mark has been passed and I'm sure that with the strong support of campus canvassers the drive will reach its goal."

The current campaign — now in an extended week of operation — has as its goal, $7,500.

WUA May Enforce Scarlet UC Gowns

University College students may soon be attending lectures robed in crimson gowns.

This suggestion will be brought up at an open meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association to be held in the JCR 4.00 p.m. Thursday, said Gay Sellers, WUA President.

"We have inside information from the highly reliable college grapevine," she said, "that scarlet gowns would give that unmistakable touch of distinction to the college, and be a tangible expression of our ideals. This is strictly an undergraduate, not an executive movement."

Members are in favour of gowns for all arts students, with scarlet for UC only, "so no one could possibly mistake us for Trinity," said Miss Sellers.

Marg. Penman, secretary of WUA, confirmed rumours that students may be planning a motion of censure against the Gargoyle, UC student publication as a result of "student discontent" with the paper. Complaint has been received from a UC student regarding the Gargoyle's policy.

The merits of JCR coffee is another controversial topic which will probably be debated at the meeting, said Gay Sellers. (Coffee will be served at the meeting.) Year parties will also be discussed.

Sunday Concert Plans Are Final Need Members!

Plans for the first Hart House Orchestra Associates concert this Sunday have been made final, Henry Best (III UC) chairman of the Associates, said last night.

The programmes were sent up to be printed last night and the orchestra was put under contract for the series. The capacity of the great hall and balcony is 800 seats. Mr. Best could not say exactly how many members there were up to date.

"The response this week has been fairly encouraging," he said, "but we still need about $600.00 or the equivalent of 200 student memberships before the first concert."

The programme for the first concert includes Vivaldi's Concerto in D Minor, Mozart's Divertimento in F Major K138, Greig's Holberg Suite and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C, Opus 48 for Strings.

During the evening Mr. MacDougal will give a brief summary covering all types of jazz which will be followed by records and refreshments.

A club official said that all medical students will be welcome at the meeting, which will take place Thursday, Nov. 24th in Falconer Hall at 8 p.m.

Weekly French Films Shown Modern UC Projection Room

By ANNE SANOUILLET

The recent apparition of an incongruously modern-looking notice-board outside the door of Room 6 in University College called the attention of many students for perhaps the first time to the fact that U.C. now has a fully-equipped projection room.

They might have known about it last year from reading notices in The Varsity about French, Italian and Spanish films to be shown there, and a few might already have taken advantage of its facilities to enjoy a good movie or to improve their French comprehension.

Through the joint funds of the French Cine-Club and the University, this screening room came into existence in the autumn of 1954, providing another first for U.C. as it is the only college in Canada with such facilities.

The fully sound-proofed booth contains two movie projectors, a slide projector, a record player, a complete and modern sound system including a magnetic tape recording attachment to put a sound track on silent films or to add another track to sound films.

In last year's weekly 1:00 p.m. showings such fine shorts as Balzac, Le Bateau Ivre, Van Gogh, Matisse, Images Medievales, Napoleon, Victor Hugo and Clair Blanc were presented in French versions to increasingly interested and numerous audiences.

This year the college has been enabled to start a film and slide library through generous donations. Tonight, Room 6 is to have its official opening, by invitation only, which the Consul-General of France will attend. Guests will enjoy an evening of slides and films and will also be able to visit the projection booth and examine its equipment.

Students and staff of the university are welcome at the weekly showings on Tuesdays at 1:00 and 1:30 p.m. The films are announced in the Coming-Up and Today columns of The Varsity. Room 6 is available for use by any department housed in University College.

'Stock Exchange' Hits EC Building Only Short Stay

A stock exchange was opened on this campus yesterday morning—but it closed after 10 minutes of "hectic" operations.

The Commerce Club opened a "stock exchange" in the main rotunda of the Economics Building to sell tickets to the annual Commerce Dance—the Annual Frolic.

The Exchange was complete with ticker tape, listed shares, shouting brokers, and an official opening.

John Elliott, President of the Commerce Club, said that the promotion was "a great success." He said that the listed share, Commerce Consolidated, would entitle the owner to be admitted to the annual stockholders' meeting—to be held at the Club Embassy the night of the dance.

The official quotations on the stock are as follows:

Anarchy — A Brave New World

The Editor,
The Varsity:
It was with a mixed attitude of wonder and alarm that I watched W. S. loom up before the moon, riding with aplomb the outmoded broomstick of secular concern in the "fanaticism" of housewives who somehow believe in ideals. That W. S. himself (I assume a masculine W. S.) believes in an ideal of truth, is evident from his own essay; that he should deny an ideal of social behaviour to those who, according to him should be guided only by the ideal of an excellent apple pie, seems to be unscientific, in that he is trying to extirpate, in the fuming and sulphuric crucible of his "brain," a natural phenomenon.

But toward what "terribly misguided" ideal do these women hope to strive? Is it truly the "removal of obstreperous literature from public circulation?"

If a piece of "literature" (which I assume to mean "whatever is meaningful written,") be both "obstreperous" and calculated to destroy morality, civilization, and, of course, human self-respect, if it be both "obstreperous" and would persuade us that we alone, who generally are quite ignorant of the past, who, in this respect, are as foam, are measures unto our selves, are whole oceans of human thought and effort, if it be both "obstreperous" and would be guided only by the principle that man is a molecule, a super-sensitive form of radar, or a bumping insect, if it be both "obstreperous" and would have as its results personal and social, observable derangement, then certainly society has the right to preserve itself by killing such a piece of "literature."

But what, actually, does W. S. write to better define (indeed, to define at all) his own position? Are there no "best" patterns of action, satisfying to the whole man?
Certainly, all will admit that this is the Twentieth Century (A.D.), and that "our mission is to build," but to build what and on what? A "brave new world?" Let us hope that he is not advocating anarchy.

If he is advocating discrimination, then let him state that not all housewives are discriminate; but let him not state that there are not ideals of which even housewives are aware. Let W. S. step down from his mobile soap-box for a moment of not-so-lunar thought.
Nathan A. Cervo
English Grad.

Censors Needed

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I would appreciate that before W. S. attempts to write another article, he forget his prejudices against the Catholic Church and study the facts, and I would like to inform him that Morley Callaghan, who is himself prejudiced, is no man to refer to for facts.

The Catholic Women's League is not trying to trample anyone's rights, but to protect their children and grandchildren from the trash that is filling our modern bookstands. Children reading horror and crime "comics," and juveniles imbibing the stories in novels depicting sin in a favorable light, tend to neglect the teachings of the Church.

What is needed is a Board of Censors, much like the Board which classifies movies and cuts certain scenes from them, to sift the garbage from the flow of modern literature, which will one day be studied in our schools. Even Callaghan could not make me believe that the Ontario Board of Censors is hindering Science.

W. Leslie, I SPS,
Newman Club

Pornographic Filth

he gets in a store, and reads them secretly.

The action of the CWL is not one of false enthusiasm. They wish to protect their children from being exposed to these books. They want their children to know sex as a good natural thing, and to explain in an educative way the folly of such literature. They don't want them deriving morbid pleasure from the perversions to which sex is subjected.

For those "adults" who feel they are getting gyped of their wonderful books for the sake of children, those who hide behind a cloak of righteousness: "freedom to choose their own literature," desperately rationalizing to sanction their own bewildering behaviour—let them jot down on paper what they enjoy!

They must have vivid imaginations: if you are used to reading it you can easily think it—they have had lots of practice. Give sex to the kids, leave filth to the degenerate.

Ernie Wesson,

correction?

The Editor,
Varsity:

I wish to correct the misquotation in yesterday's Varsity that there is "trouble" between St. Mike's and Trinity. I said that there were "rivalries" just as there are rivalries between all the Colleges.

tolerance

We have been surprised by a great rash of heated correspondence, almost all in support of the women who are attempting to apply a moral censorship to books on sale in Canada.

We are disappointed that the writers betrayed so little consciousness of the difficulties of the question of censorship.

Who is to have any powers of suppression in a state, and how are they to be administered? Where does the balance come between a state's intervention, protection and subsidizing of the private individual and his freedom to fashion his own lot?

All these questions are ticklish and we would not venture to pronounce dogmatically upon them. Nevertheless we feel that such extreme censoring movements are dangerous to individual liberty, and that people who would muzzle all others in accordance with their private principles are out of place.

Would not these same people perhaps have supported the now universally condemned Spanish inquisitions?

Freedom encourages responsibility. Freedom makes a choice for responsibility meaningful. And one's own principles are best instilled in others by one's own examples. The only example that we learn from such censorship-mad people is to retaliate by banning books that we personally don't believe in, for instance, all dull books. And interest, like morality is an equally personal matter.

Such cases of censorship in recent years as the banning of the film on Luther from Quebec projectors, even protestant projectors, are frightening and can only remind one of communistic practices.

To fight fire with fire, can only produce a bigger fire, while a little of the waters of tolerance, we are confident, can have quite a salutary effect.

... and tolerance

Tolerance is a great virtue, but unfortunately it seems to be out of fashion with certain students at this university.

Last Friday The Varsity published an editorial condemning an organization that was attempting to clean up Canadian Literature.

On this subject, as on any other, there is room for debate.

But at a university, there should be no room for personal abuse, arguments ad hominum, and ranting tirades on irrelevancies. There should be no place for raving unreasoning hatred of a person for the expression of his views. There should be no room for prejudice.

Yet from the replies to this editorial it appears as though a good dose of tolerance — and good sense — is needed in some corners of this university.

unwarranted fears

Some students on this campus appear to be worried as to the final destination of funds collected in the current SHARE campaign. While experience with other such appeals has shown the need to be wary of charity drives, their fears are quite groundless with respect to SHARE.

For one thing, the fact that the President of the Canadian World University Service is the President of this University should allay all suspicion as to the organization's integrity.

For another, statements of SHARE's accounts reveal that publicity expenses take roughly three percent of total SHARE funds — hardly an excessive amount. All other SHARE monies go to pay for the very worthwhile activities of WUS.

There is no valid reason why the SHARE objective on this campus should not be surpassed. Seventy-five cents a student is, a small price to pay towards international understanding.

Model Parliament Elections

Politics At Home

In preparation for the elections for the Model Parliament that will be held this Thursday, The Varsity presents articles by the your campus political groups on their domestic policies and basic philosophies. Which policy do you think is best for Canada?

Progressive-Conservative

The most important thing to all Canadians is their liberty. The basis of our freedom, Parliament, is little more than a tool of the Cabinet.

C. D. Howe is the boss man and dictator of the Liberal gov't! His contempt of Parliament is well known. He fostered the gov't monopolies and lost our wheat markets. We believe in parliamentary government — not orders-in-council; we believe in free enterprise — not monopolies of any kind.

The Progressive Conservative Party stands for industrial development, free enterprise and the development of our vast natural resources.

The Liberal Party sold out our natural resources and allows them to be shipped to the United States, while Canadians remain unemployed. We believe in building industrial plants here, thus creating new wealth and raising the living standards of all Canadians.

We are opposed to the aims of the socialist party in their policy of nationalizing all major industries and financial institutions. We believe these lead to loss of freedom and initiative of the people.

We believe in individual freedom and personal initiative through free enterprise.

Liberal

LIBERALISM

Liberalism differs from the other isms in day from night. And the difference is between the libertarian and authoritarian concepts of life.

The Liberal is the only true democrat because only he believes in the ultimate freedom of the individual. He challenges the state paternalism of Communism and Nazism, the upper class paternalism of the Tories, and the C.C.F. paternalism of the "expert"—the planner.

The Liberal believes that the state is not omnipotent. Its function is only to supply the security which the individual asks for.

But it has no right to impose its own will on the people.

This means that the state is not an end in itself, but only a means of furthering human welfare.

It also means that the state is subservient to the common will—and should never be used as the tool of a particular individual, class, or self-styled "expert".

And, ultimately, a Liberal will never throw himself at the mercy of the state. For the spirit of Liberalism is a spirit of confidence in one's fellow man, and in oneself.

Labor-Progressive

COMMUNIST

The L.P.P. proposes a New National Policy which would reverse the present economic, political and cultural integration with and subordination to the United States. The pretence for "integration", that of the danger of war which was held to be imminent, has been undermined by the Geneva conference of heads of government.

This new policy calls for the building up and expansion of Canadian industries and the processing of our raw materials at home. Only an industrialized economy, not one geared to the production of raw materials, needs many skilled technicians, scientists and professionals. This policy would mean the carrying out of many important nation-building projects such as the construction of an all-Canadian natural gas pipeline as a publicly owned utility. Long needed social legislation including a National Health Plan, housing and educational grants must be part of this program.

Canada must pursue an independent foreign policy and take the initiative to help assure a peaceful solution to all outstanding problems.

Such a New National Policy will lead to the enrichment and development of our national culture and a bright future for a great, independent Canada.

CCF

Economic and cultural development to aid every Canadian is the aim of our program. Planning is a necessary part of any development scheme, and to the end of planning effectively the government will take a more active role in the economy . . .

—strategic industries and services; such as steel, meat packing, banking, and transportation will be publicly owned.

—sufficient controls will be placed on the rest of the economy to safeguard labor and the consumer.

—co-operatives will be encouraged, where practicable.

—particular attention will be paid to the harnessing of our national resources, — a publicly owned all-Canada gas pipeline will be built immediately.

—the goal of full employment will be sought, off-season industries encouraged in areas of seasonal employment.

Through the right of the State to tax and to spend our present wealth will be more equally and more creatively distributed.

—taxation will be collected on the basis of ability to pay, — capital gains, inheritance and corporation taxes will be increased, personal exemptions raised, sales tax abolished.

—university education will be free and grants paid to needy students.

—the cultural proposals of the Massey Commission will be implemented.

—a national health plan and a low cost subsidized housing scheme will be started.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Jack-Ass And An Ape

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The editorial in last Friday's edition of The Varsity, I mean Varsity was lower than the lowest. (Your normal standards).

W. S., whoever, he is, (he naturally wouldn't dare sign his name) "led right in with his chin"; he was "standing on his own vices to the point of trampling them." If his mother (assuming that he had one) read him Mickey Spillone bedtime stories, how can we expect him to be other than conscience-stricken to the point that he would write an article attempting to ridicule a much-needed campaign against such filth. In trying to be bold and cynical in your article W. S., I am afraid that you hypocrite live "squirm" like a worm.

Please don't misinterpret me W. S., in thinking that I am trying to degrade your integrity. Why, to mention just one instance of loyalty to your "good name": on the day the article was printed some obviously misled individual stated that the writer of that article had neither the intelligence of a jack-ass, nor the morals of an ape.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your valiant stand for the distribution of pornographic literature only tells me that you enjoy reading it, and that you are probably well-versed in the latest methods of rape, adultery, abortion, homosexuality etc. You may be so pleased with having all this knowledge you may wish to try it out sometimes.

Many Misfortunates do! and You want to build!

When I heard such an accusation I made a bold stand in your behalf. W. S.—I said that you had!

Pornographic Filth

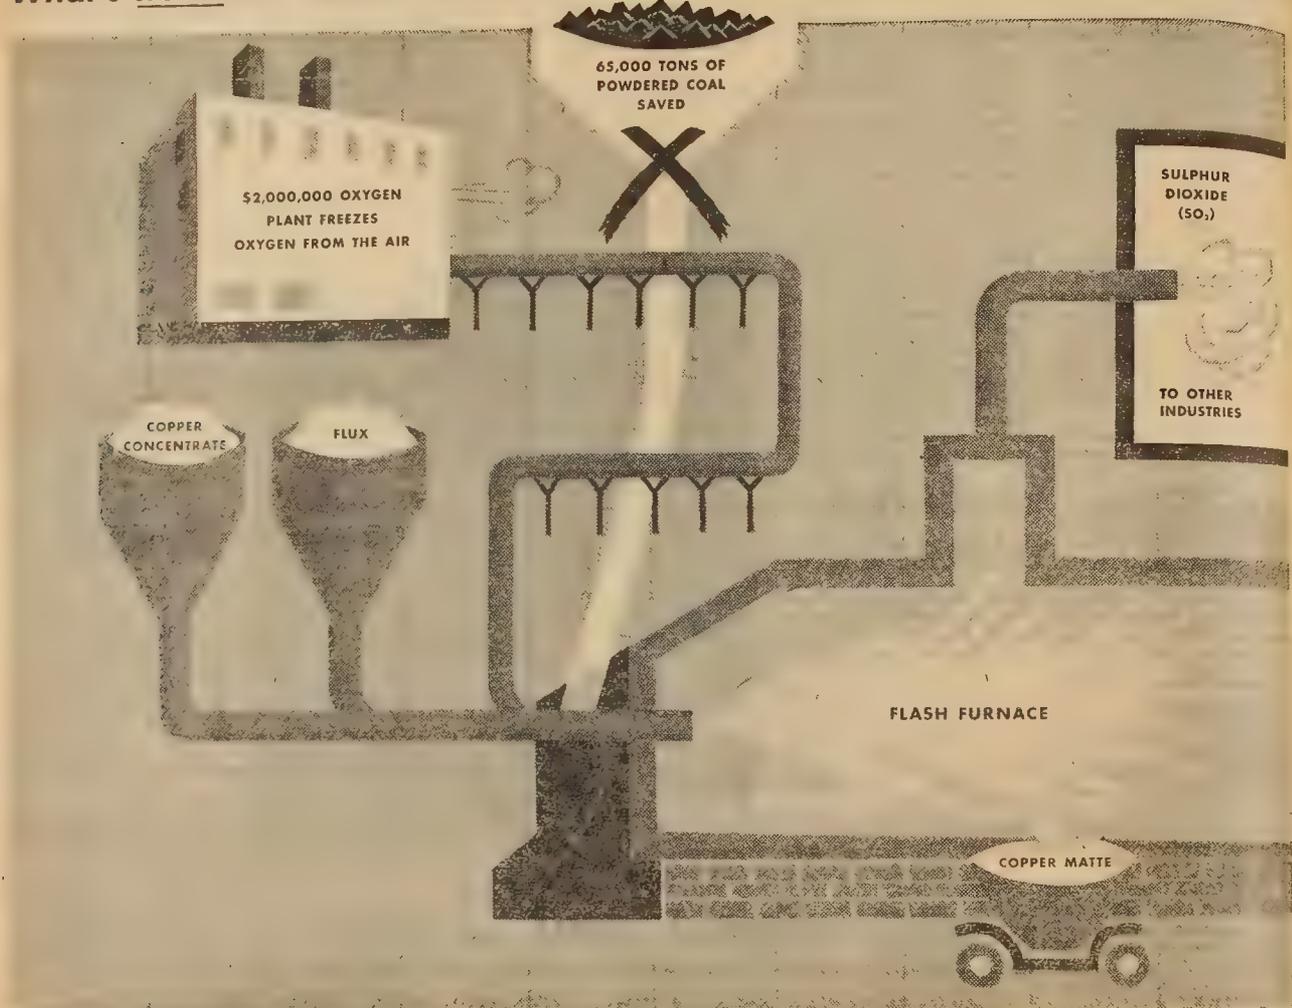

How do most of the people who find themselves in such situations get there? The young adolescent is very inquisitive about the changes he begins to experience, and so is easily drawn to a book with an explicit illustration on the cover. This.

What's news at Inco?

HOW THE NEW FLASH SMELTING PROCESS OPERATES First, Inco installed a $2,000,000 plant to separate oxygen from the air - 325 tons of it a day! Oxygen piped from this plant, plus finely ground copper concentrate and flux are blown into a specially designed furnace and the mixture is ignited. Heat from the burning sulphur and iron smelts the ore and the molten copper matte is drawn off. In this process, sulphur and oxygen combine to form sulphur dioxide (SO₂). The sulphur dioxide is liquefied and sold for use in Canada's pulp and paper mills.

INCO RESEARCH HELPS STRENGTHEN CANADA'S ECONOMY

NEW FLASH SMELTING PROCESS SAVES 65,000 TONS OF COAL A YEAR

In the production of copper at Inco, smelting operations used to require approximately 65,000 tons of imported coal every year.

Now, Inco is smelting copper concentrates without coal. A patented flash smelting process, developed after years of Inco research and extensive pilot plant tests, produces copper matte more economically than ever before.

The principle of the new flash smelting process is based on the fact that sulphur and iron, when combined with sufficient oxygen, will burn with an intense heat.

Since the ores mined at Sudbury contain high percentages of both sulphur and iron, Inco devised this method of smelting the ore.

In the flash smelting process, Inco employs hydro-electric power to freeze oxygen from the air. Coal is no longer necessary and sulphur is recovered as liquid sulphur dioxide. Hence, Inco's production costs are lower. Like so many other developments of Inco research the new flash smelting process has helped strengthen Canada's economic position in the world today.

Problem On The Walk

The Editor, The Varsity:

All students who live in residence at the University and have to use Philosopher's Walk as a means of access to Bloor Street appreciate the efforts of The Varsity in bringing to light the problem there. But I am afraid that The Varsity has overlooked the real danger of the Walk.

It is uncomfortable, of course. It has a dozen eyes peering out of the darkness to assess the availability of this or that transient student; it is frightening to be followed by one of the denizens down the Walk; it is revolting to be propositioned by one from the fence. But it is almost never dangerous.

What is dangerous is the existence of a parasitic mob of hoodlums who make it their business to prey upon the little men. Periodically one of these bands will make their appearance on the Walk, "rolling" and robbing the furtive figures. For a week or so afterward the Walk is deserted, and then the "regulars" again return.

Last year, four students were mistaken for these hoodlums' regular prey, and were set upon in the style of the old highwaymen, knocked out, robbed of watches and wallets, and left, one with a broken nose. This is the real problem of Philosopher's Walk.

What can be done?

Call the police? No. There are no laws concerning homosexuality, and the shadowy figures are breaking no existing laws. The police roar up the Walk every now and then on motorcycles, but that is not going to solve the problem.

Make new legislation to prosecute the little men? Hardly. The legislators could never bring themselves to discuss a subject that is as taboo as discussion of atheism was in the Middle Ages. And, of course, legislation is not needed as much as medical aid.

Light the Walk with bright lights? Perhaps this might help. It is the solution that has proved successful in many cities in Europe where the same problem exists.

It is really the only thing to do, and itself not very constructive. But if we are going to drive away the "highwaymen" we must drive away their natural prey. Lighting will be expensive, and it will never reach behind the Stadium or the fence at the bottom of the hill. But it is the only thing we can do.

It may do some good and it may not, but let's try.

IV Trinity.

Hold Parliament Elections This Thursday

A good turnout of voters is expected for the Model Parliament this Thursday, said Bob Fenn, President of the Political Economy Club, which is sponsoring the event.

Fenn also announced that ballot boxes would be placed in the rotundas of the four arts colleges, the Economics, Skule, Medical, and Dentistry Buildings, and in Hart House.

The hours of voting will be from 9:45 a.m. to 2:15 p.m. on Thursday. All students with ATL cards are eligible to vote, said Fenn.

There are always two sides to an argument — usually both wrong!

Looks Cozy, Doesn't It

The advent of a not-quite-acceptable country aunt disrupting a family was the subject of a German one-act comedy, "Die Keinen Verwandten," presented last night by the University of Toronto German Club, in the U.C. Women's Union, as its annual dramatic enterprise. The play, written by Ludwig Thoma, was directed by Dr. D. A. Joyce of Trinity College. The German consul, Dr. Soehnke, attended the production.

Two Chess Champs Try 100 Exhibit Contestants

To commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of organized Chess at the University of Toronto, the Hart House Chess Club is sponsoring the largest Tandem Simul Chess Exhibition which has ever been held, said a Chess Club spokesman.

Treasured Van Opened Monday Frost Officiates

The Honorable Leslie Frost, Premier of Ontario, will officially open Treasure Van.

Howard Mills (III Vic), in charge of Treasure Van, said that he was informed over the weekend that Mr. Frost would be very pleased to officiate at the formal opening next Monday at 2:30.

Many of the foreign consulates and representatives in Toronto will also be present at the opening ceremony, Mills said.

Treasure Van, conducted by World University Service of Canada, will run for four days in Hart House commencing next Monday, November 28. Exhibited will be crafts from Hong Kong, Japan, India, Greece, Egypt and Jordan. Anyone interested in a brief preview of the sale should see the display now set up in the Towne Cinema, said Mills.

The Treasure Van is an annual feature on the U of T campus.

In this event, Mr. Frank Anderson and Mr. George Berner will play 100 people simultaneously, he said.

Mr. Anderson is the Canadian Chess Champion, and a master of international renown, while Mr. Berner is a Yugoslavian master, in charge of the University Extension Course in Chess. The masters will make alternate moves, without consultation, in reply to those of their opponents.

The event will take place on Thursday, 1st December, in the Great Hall of Hart House, and is open to all who are connected with the University of Toronto, including women. Those who wish to play must reserve their place by signing the lists posted in the S.A.C. Office or in Hart House Rotunda, the spokesman said.

For those who prefer to watch, ample room will be provided, and a demonstration board showing the game between the Masters and Mr. T. J. Kagetsu will be erected, said a club spokesman. Arrangements are currently underway to have the event televised by C.B.C.T.V. and filmed by Movietone News, the spokesman added.

Items On NFCUS

Arrangements are presently being completed for a 1956 travel programme for Canadian students, which will combine wide variety with great economy. This was announced in Items, the weekly NFCUS bulletin.

It is expected that there will be five different tours offered as well as some choice of shipping space; and there is a very possibility that students will once again be able to fly to Europe on a NFCUS charter-flight, said the bulletin.

The programme this year will be intensively publicized so that all students at member schools will be able to benefit from NFCUS bargain travel, said Items.

"Facts, facts, facts; just the facts" about the U of T bookstore, will be revealed at the SAC meeting in Falconer Hall at 7:00 tonight," said Ted Seivenpiper, SAC Publicity Chairman.

Sharing the agenda with investigation of the bookstore expose will be the budgets of SHARE, U.T.D.U. and the Treasure Van, which will be presented for SAC approval. Also to be presented is the SAC financial report for the first quarter of 1955-56.

Torontonensis editor Dave Wood will report on the year book.

Final preparations for the WUS regional seminar will also be discussed. The final decision on the SAC bulletin board may also be announced.

The meeting is open to all students interested in student self-government, said Seivenpiper.

Senior Skule Vs. Vic

45. The Vic line, led by Dick Green, opened up some terrific holes, and Ebenhardt, Bertram and Newman raced through them to the seven. From here, Williams went around the end for the score. Ebenhardt passed to Jim Smith for the extra point.

From this point on Skule began a desperation drive which netted them one touchdown and another near score. Larsen went to the air for the touchdown. A pass to Stu Eccles and handoffs to Bruce Smith and Ken Selby culminated in a Skule score when Selby took a screen pass on the Vic 18 and spurted to the goal line.

The key play of the ball game came midway through the fourth frame. Skule had managed to get the ball to the Victoria 45 and were on the march when Bertram intercepted an Engineer pass. SPS never seriously threatened after that opportunity.

DISCRIMINATION CHARGED

But, Gentlemen -

Dresden Racial Case Fought By Students

A joke is shared by panelists and audience at yesterday's first forum on public affairs held in the Debates Room, Hart House and sponsored by the Law Club. The panel discussion concerned law and medicine and included guests Dr. A. B. Stokes, CBE;

Dean J. S. MacFarlane, OBE, dean of medicine; the moderator, Edson L. Haines, Q.C.; Dean C. A. Wright, Q.C., of the faculty of law, and Charles L. Dubin, Q.C. See page 8 for story.

—VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Three U of T students and a member of the University staff will figure in a test case on a charge of color discrimination which will be laid against a Dresden, Ontario, restaurant proprietor.

Labor Minister Charles Daley, who administers the Ontario Fair Accommodation Practices Act, said yesterday that he had agreed to the prosecution of Dresden restaurant proprietor Morely McKay on a complaint by two U of T students.

The two students are Jacob Alleyne (graduate student in anthropology) and Percy Bruce (III '55) who were refused service because of their color. Both students hail from Trinidad.

Also figuring in the case are Robert van Alstyne ('56 UC) and Helen Steenson, typist at the office of the Friendly Relations with Foreign Students branch of the International Students' Organization. They were served in the same restaurant, before and after Bruce and Alleyne were allegedly refused service.

"We really needed that pie and coffee," said Bruce in an interview with a Varsity reporter last night. "We had driven down from London and had not had any lunch."

Bruce said that Miss Steenson went into the restaurant first, asked for pie and coffee and was served. Five minutes later, he and Alleyne entered the restaurant, sat at the counter and asked:

a waitress for milkshakes and apple pie. "We got no response from the waitress," said Bruce. "She completely ignored us. After waiting for a few minutes Alleyne and I went into the kitchen and asked the chef when we were to be served. We got no reply. Later an elderly man came in and was served pie and coffee. We were still waiting. Later the chef went to the front of the shop and drew the blinds and locked the door," continued Bruce, "and the place stayed shut until a lady who had been in the place from the start went out and we followed suit. On one of the trips to the kitchen, Alleyne asked the owner (Continued on page 8)

Tuesday Paper 'Birthday' Issue Varsity Is 75

The next issue of The Varsity will be the 75th anniversary issue, which appears next Tuesday.

The special edition, a planned 48 pages, will feature many famous incidents in the life of the student newspaper. These include banned issues, two campus murders, the student strike of 1895, reminiscences by former editors, sport, art, music and drama and famous personalities on the university campus in that time.

Stories long buried in the files have been resurrected. Given a prominent place is the Champus Cut, a character who has been given the pages of The Varsity for many years.

Varsity staffers have been working over musily bound volumes for several weeks, preparing this special issue. The success, or otherwise, of their work will be seen in the morning of November 29, 1955.

not out of trouble, however. Henry Best, the Associates' chairman, said that financial difficulties may curtail the organizations plans unless more support is forthcoming.

Walter Susskind, recently appointed Conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, said "many cities would be honored and delighted to be the home of an orchestra conducted by Dr. Boyd Neel."

"As founder of the Boyd Neel Orchestra, he has placed himself in the first rank of the world's conductors."

Meanwhile, President Sidney Smith said that the University "takes great pride in the Hart House Orchestra."

Dr. Smith said that the orchestra has a name "honoured both in the university and in the history of Canadian music."

"I commend the voluntary work of a group of students who are enlisting the University community in support of this significant enterprise."

Best said that the CBC had shown an interest in broadcasting one of the later programs of the series of five.

The Hart House Orchestra Associates is a group of students who are interested in presenting and sponsoring good music on this campus. The efforts of these students to hold a series of concerts by a prominent orchestra have been termed "unique" by Dr. Sidney Smith. Formed one year ago by Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Toronto Faculty of Music the Hart House Orchestra achieved considerable fame during the past summer when it performed at the Stratford Musical Festival.

Mr. Dunsmuir, Drama and Music critic of the Stratford Beacon Herald described the orchestra performances as "excellent." During the past fall, the orchestra made a short tour of some major Canadian and American cities and many favourable reviews were received.

The second and third concerts in December and January will feature Albert Pratz, violinist, and Ray Dudley, pianist, performing with the orchestra. The Associates hope that this series will become an annual occurrence on this campus.

Apology, With A Sigh of Regret

The Editor,

The Varsity: Once again, with a sigh of regret, the students of St. Michael's College find that several of our members have disgraced themselves in print.

Once again we shake our heads in wonder over the remarkable string of invectives that have been hurled upon The Varsity. (This particular selection featured "the intelligence of a jack-ass" and "the morals of an ape")...

Come now, gentlemen! This torrent of abuse, Mr. Barry—over a fairly intelligent editorial questioning the wisdom and exigencies of censorship? This grave and serious slander, Mr. Wesson—over a reasonable inquiry into a question of considerable significance?

The relative differences between you and W. S. were all too painfully obvious. W. S. was somewhat carried away by his conviction for his own ideas; you were swept up by the muddle of your unreasoning wrath and vituperation...

W. S. challenged the depth of your conviction for the ideals by which you claim to live; and you replied, young men, with that pathetic mixture of insult and nonsense.

If anyone is to experience a justified wrath, Mr. Barry and

Mr. Wesson, it would seem to me that it belongs most properly to the students of the college whose name you have associated with your hysteria. Like so many other foolish undergraduates, you have hopelessly condemned the cause you attempted to uphold.

We are concerned here not so much for the fate of that cause (for we hold widely divergent views on it) but for the actual slander that you have offered in our name. It seems to many of us, Mr. Barry and Mr. Wesson, that you have committed a serious affront to the standards of dignity and respect which should govern the thoughts and the actions of every university student.

For this, and for you, I should like to apologize.

Cathie Breslin, III St. Michael's

A Suggestion

The Editor:

Re current controversy over the Catholic Women's League, it seems to me that both sides could use some tolerance. Certainly the Catholic response has been such as to confirm W.S.'s accusation of fanaticism.

On the other hand, W.S. is not innocent of prejudice and intolerance himself.

As far as freedom is concerned, I agree that it is anyone's right to be a damn fool. It is also anyone's right to protect his children from the morbid and the obscene. However, other individuals are interfering with this right as much as C.W.L. with theirs to publish and sell erotic magazines.

I would, therefore, suggest a compromise. In every store which sells magazines and books let there be two separate sections divided by an opaque partition. In one, only clean books and magazines, carefully weeded out by the aforementioned organization, will be sold.

In the other, plainly labelled "Uncensored Material," all the others will be sold. This section will constitute the red light district offering vicarious erotic experience to anyone who desire it.

As far as the censorship itself is concerned, just because no one can claim to define it for others is no reason to have no censorship whatever. No one can claim the authority to pass and enforce laws for others, yet laws are passed and enforced, and the majority benefits from them. Human nature is universal enough to permit formulation of at least a rough code of social behaviour.

Paul Wyszkowski, II SPS.

Hate Films

The Editor, The Varsity:

During the past week, dozens of people have criticized the actions of the Art Committee in discontinuing the World War II series. Their criticisms are interesting. An issue, begun as a question of taste, has devolved into one of censorship. I said that there is a great deal of value in the films and I still say so.

The criticism of the films is that they are "hate-movies." I believe that "hate-war" movies should be shown; their message cannot be impressed too deeply. This series of movies does that.

But they also carry a rather strong "hate-German" and "hate-Japanese" message, which is unfair to Germany and Japan today.

But the films are so effective as "hate-war" and war-document films that most people feel they should be shown anyway, with the caution that they be considered from an objective 1955 viewpoint.

The question which came up was whether the series was appropriate for the "Art Committee" films. The series has been discontinued pending this decision.

One thing is certain: I shall do everything I can to have the rest of the films presented in the House the year, whether by the Art Committee or not.

Bob Kaplan, Art Committee

A Moral Obligation

The Editor,

The Varsity: Monday's Varsity reports that only 40% of the objective of SHARE has been reached. To say the least this is exceedingly unfortunate. It indicates either a remarkably poor system of collecting or a disgraceful amount of apathy on the part of Toronto students.

This summer I had the good fortune to be on a World University Service tour to West Africa. While there we had many opportunities to observe the very valuable and worthwhile work being done by the World University Service. One occasion made a particularly strong impression on us.

At a small village in Western Nigeria we saw the opening of a W.U.S. dispensary. It was at a secondary school in a heavily forested area. Most of the money had been contributed by American students; while much of the work had been done by African students. From a material point of view its significance was that it represented a vital contribution to the health of the students.

To the Africans however this was secondary. For many of them it was their first experience with the outside world which had not been vitiated by the ruler-ruled, master-servant relationship. To a people emerging from colonial status this recognition of outside interest, sympathy, and help constituted an important aid to their dignity. The projects for which this year's SHARE contributions are earmarked are equally important.

We should give to SHARE not primarily because we are investing in our future but because our position enforces a moral obligation on us to help students who, through historical circumstances, are less well off than we are.

Western CUP Editorial

It's About NFCUS!

(The following article was written for the Western region of the Canadian University Press by Ron Kinney, editor-in-chief of The Manitoban, University of Manitoba. It was printed in Western Canadian University papers earlier this year.)

At Manitoba recently, the Canadian University Press was accused of being a "prodigal son" of NFCUS. Hands waved and fists pounded as certain people on U of M student council drove home their theory that, CUP being originally a product of NFCUS, it should have remained so, instead of going its own and steadier way. Every university in the West seems apparently to be under the same ridiculous misapprehension. What a pity people do not see the world of difference between the two organizations.

CUP never was really an inherent part of the NFCUS setup, simply because its field was far different, and much more all-encompassing. On the one hand, you have a national federation of all Canadian students, struggling along gamely (or should it be lamely); concerned with trying their darndest to do the almost impossible, and wake up our undergrads. NFCUS tells us of great schemes to approach dominion and provincial governments with hundreds of delicious little ideas, all, it would seem, for our general benefit. Examples are numerous; the five per cent cut in U.S. textbooks prices, for example.

But CUP, and here is where the vast difference lies, is concerned with journalism, and journalism only.

Its main aim is to ensure that if something newsworthy happens at Alberta, Toronto, McGill, and even the Maritimes not only hear about it, but get a complete story as quickly as possible, so that the students there can read for themselves what other universities are doing and thinking. Here is one of the most vital links between camp in existence.

And it is something that NFCUS, with all its huge budgets and long-winded speeches could never hope to accomplish.

Why did CUP divorce itself from "Nifkuss"?

The original reasoning I think is now probably lost in the dusty past, but it seems to me that it was mostly because our wonderful body of disunited and disgruntled representatives in the national federation could not tie together the ends which are life and death to a news service.

Imagine, if you will, CUP still in NFCUS. Let's take the National Conference. The president gets up to speak, and tell the world what he has done to justify his existence. Having failed to justify anything but the glass 'o' water sitting on the rostrum before him, someone suggests that perhaps it would be a good idea if CUP were co-ordinated between regions, and that someone be appointed chairman to make sure same is done.

Immediately, four universities walk out of the chamber screaming "we'll have a referendum on this!", four others form a splinter party and move off to the nearest pub, another suggests a raise in fees to 75 cents to cover the cost, and The Varsity screams something about "exclusives!"

What, we ask you, would the outcome be? CUP would tactfully tell the conference to go jump in the lake and make like an anchor, and leave. So here we are back where we started. Which is a good place to be.

There are many member papers in CUP that are ardent NFCUS supporters. But even they realize the futility of making CUP a part of what was once the whole. CUP can and does run itself. It has not been, in the past, particularly efficient at times, but neither have a few other National Organizations we could think of. At least it is operating, and, particularly this year, operating well, to everyone's benefit, including NFCUS.

Let's leave well enough alone; CUP is CUP, NFCUS (thank God) is NFCUS, and never, never the two shall meet.

let's think as Canadians

It seems obvious from the letters' column in today's Varsity that "The spirit of Canadian Nationalism is not dead." But it should be.

Unfortunately, some people are still prone to running around trying desperately to be Canadians. Their anxiety for a national spirit indicates only the insecurity of their own feelings towards their own country.

Nationalism as such is a dangerous commodity. It has produced two world wars within the memory of living man, and has caused untold agony and suffering all over the globe. Chauvinism is something we can do without in Canada.

Our writer would have truly Canadian leaders. How are these leaders to be produced? Would this university, for instance, institute a new course called "learning how to be a Canadian?" Such a course might consist of lectures as follows:

- 9:00 a.m.: Stephen Leacock (or would he do? He was born in England).
- 10:00 a.m.: The working of the RCMP — How they get their man.
- 11:00 a.m.: Musical Composition: re Anthem.
- 12:00 a.m.: Historical Research: Looking for a Canadian Davy Crockett.

Nationalism in a world of power politics and ideological struggles is a bare-faced impossibility. Canadians are influenced, and will continue to be influenced, by the actions of other nations. We do not have the opportunity to sit in a corner by ourselves and be great.

This self-conscious nationalism is only the sign of adolescent maturity. It is the kind of spirit that has often infected the arts in Canada to the point of strangling them, as artists struggled to produce something "Canadian" instead of something good.

And as for the flag and anthem, it has always been a great source of pride to us personally that Canada has no national flag and no national anthem. It is perhaps the only way in which the Canadian nation has distinguished itself and we think it greatly to our credit that we have resisted the pressures of international conformity.

One thing that perhaps would not occur to our writer is that he cannot help being Canadian. Not only is no effort involved, but it takes considerable effort to avoid the unconscious mental attitudes which are common to people this side of the border and this side of the Atlantic.

If he is disturbed because we have no legendary national characteristic such as being tight-fisted, let him rest in peace. Canadians are well known in other countries for their stolidness and lack of imagination.

the pink tinge

The Varsity has a song which it sings in the privacy of its own parties — something about our ink being palest pink.

At the moment not only our ink but our cheeks are palest pink. The Southam Trophy which we were awarded last year is nowhere to be found. At the last get-together of last year's staff, we did a ceremonial dance about our trophy and it has not since been seen by any staff member.

Nor can it be located in the place of our last meeting. The inhabitants of the said meeting place claim no knowledge whatever.

If the trophy has been taken as a practical joke, we would like to point out that joking time is past. This valuable trophy must be returned to Canadian University Press immediately.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Canadians Arise!

The Editor:

The spirit of Canadian nationalism is not dead. This is not a nation of transplanted Englishmen. We are Canadians. We have a great heritage and we will have a greater future. The 20th century belongs to Canada and we, the students of today, must be her leaders of to-morrow. This university should provide an atmosphere that will breed truly Canadian leaders.

It was with great pride that most students viewed the flag that was raised, yesterday, in place of the Union Jack. The Union Jack is the English flag. Why should the Canadian nation stand in the shade of a fallen empire? Students of Varsity! Rise and lead the movement for a Canadian flag and anthem. This country is at the gate of an unparalleled era of greatness and you are her leaders.

Michael J. McCabe,
I S.M.C.

Congratulations!

The Editor:

As a student of this university, and a Catholic I would like to congratulate The Varsity on its stand against the activities of the CWL. I do not believe in any form of censorship; but if we must have it, let it not be the self-appointed task of a bunch of frustrated old Victorian housewives!

Two Solutions

In your issue of November 21 there are two issues which take precedence over all others—the moral problem of Philopher's Walk, and parking. Here is a plan that should settle both in one fell stroke.

Open the bottom of Philosopher's Walk ravine as a parking lot. You could park (n plus 1) cars along the fence, which should end the other business.

Y. R. Fleming, II SPS

Shut Up!

The Editor:

You have written several times recently on moral censorship. You have penned smooth phrases about "the freedom of an individual to fashion his own lot." This is, I suppose, all praiseworthy.

Let's get down to cases. Do you want Canadian children of ten and twelve reading the trash on our newsstands? If you do, why, and if not, what do you propose to do about it? In short, sir, put up or shut up!

Prossy, with Poet

Michael Spivak as Marchbanks and Marilyn Bevis as Prossy in the Hart House Theatre production of Shaw's "CANDIDA," directed by Robert Gill. "Candida" opens this Saturday, and runs through the following Saturday.

Hunting the Stuart with Davies & Gill

Last Tuesday, the Crest introduced Robertson Davies' comedy, Hunting Stuart, at a world premiere. The plot of the new Davies play had been kept secret. Hunting Stuart is Robert Gill's first assignment for the Crest, after ten years of highly successful directing at Hart House Theatre. The interest which the play thus aroused was not completely justified on opening night.

Davies sets us down, for three acts, in the dowdy Old-Town Ottawa apartment of Henry Benedict Stuart, civil servant. His wife, Lilian, and his daughter, Caroline, are people we would expect to meet in such an apartment. Mrs. Stuart, "descended of a postmaster in Arriprior," is overly proud of the fact. Daughter Caroline, novice of a university psychology course, is obviously just that. They manage to make a home hardly good enough to come home to. They also almost succeed in ruining the first act.

But Aunt Clemie enters, no more than soon enough, and injects a very necessary vitality into the room and into the play. She is the Flush of Youth Laxative Lady, with a recent notoriety, unparalleled even for her, in the Ottawa papers. The man of the house returns from the office to this home, one little better, we are led to suppose, than he deserves.

Into Mr. Stuart's white paper, carbon-copied existence, come two American psychologists, from the Coffin Foundation. They solicit his assistance for an experiment into the nature of the influence of heredity. Why? Henry Benedict Stuart is the rightful heir to the Throne of England, Painstaking American research had revealed that he is, indeed, the last of the Royal Stuarts, with a family tree which can easily be traced back one thousand and more years.

And finally, to the audience's relief, the plot begins to move.

Mr. Gill's direction was at fault in the first act. But when the plot gives him a chance, he is firmly in command of the play's non-sense and magic.

Donald Davis is more than competent as the two Stuarts: the civil servant, "with a professional distrust of the unknown," and the Great Guinea Pig, the Last of the Stuarts, Helene Winston, as Clemie, self-styled Empiricist ("I stung along with anything if it works!"), is superb, bringing droll three-dimensional (or is it four?) lady psychologist. And much-needed vivacity to the play.

Barbara Chilcott makes a wonderful Eric House, as Caroline's undergraduate beau in psychology, is excellent.

Frances Tobias and Diana Vandervlis, as mother and daughter, failed to create one full character each for us, and melted too often into the set Max Helman, as the male psychologist, was plainly at times at the mercy of the dialogue.

Davies bites hard into several interesting problems. Very ordinary people suddenly become painfully aware of Psychology. "Hereditry," he writes, "is the old houses over our heads, environment the junk we put in them." Yesterday's phenology is today's psychology. "We can only hope it won't look as silly in a hundred years."

Davies does not always draw blood. He does not always draw laughs. Hunting Stuart is not great theatre, but it is good theatre. And amazingly thoughtful.

TEMPERA DISPUTE

The A. M. & D. Editor, The Varsity:

The review on undergrads' art sounded muddled to me. Why should anyone disparage watercolour technique? Paintings and drawings should be judged by, among other things, the imaginative and apt exploitation of a medium's characteristics to evolve some coherent expression, whether the medium be oils, water colour or carpet-tacks and bumble-bees stuck in duco enamel. Is there a danger that watercolour technique is too slick? An artist in any medium may use his tools well and yet have no poetic imagination. Anyone knows that.

As for the "graphic" nature of the show there was perhaps less emphasis on vivid description this year than usual, and no commercial art, with possibly one exception, was in evidence. However to say that commercial art (regardless of what it is trying to be) is not art, seems quite unreal. Commercial and industrial art are as vital to twentieth century art as architecture was to Renaissance art.

King Owen, IV Arch.

The A. M. & D. Editor, The Varsity:

In spite of a tendency to sound a little muddled, Mr. Owen expresses himself very well and evidently is easily moved on matters of artistic principle. I would like to see him write Art Reviews for the Varsity.

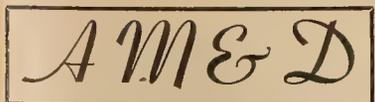

I do not think that anything in the Undergrad Show is "commercial art." Mr. Owen has been perhaps a little too diligent in fitting on this shoe. I think it's a swell show. However, I do feel that there is a real danger for those with skill and cleverness, especially in unusual techniques, to produce work that is not an investigation of anything, but a technical fire-work, easy to produce and impressive to look upon.

The danger is particularly great for those closest to the world where art is a commodity. Advertising and Industrial Commercial Art is not always bad art, but surely Mr. Owen will admit that commercial art has a natural enough tendency to resort to fashionable cliches. When it does so, I feel that it is not art in itself, despite the great part it plays in our culture.

As for this thing that anyone knows, that an artist may be only a man who uses his tools well, I refer Mr. Owen for my own views to R. G. Collingwood's The Principles of Art, for the distinction between "art" and "craft."

Sincerely,

Larry Totter.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Phenix from the Flames

The Phenix City Story is an above average semi-documentary which achieves a harsh realism rarely seen in a Hollywood product. This is mainly due to the fact that it was filmed in Phenix City with the full approval of the residents, resulting in an undistorted presentation of the facts.

As most people probably remember, the name of Phenix City sprang into the headlines a few months ago when Albert Patterson, prospective Attorney General of Alabama and leader of a local reform movement, was murdered, and martial law was declared in the city. In the days that followed, an incredible picture of corruption and institutionalized crime emerged. The scandal ended when John Patterson was elected Attorney General in his father's place.

These events provided the producers with a ready-made plot complete with happy ending and the opportunity to dramatize. They took full advantage of it, but the film (which would have been condemned as sordid and unrealistic had it come from a script writers' imagination) succeeds because it describes what actually happened.

Although the main roles are acted by professional actors, the citizens of the town play a prominent part in the film. Its realism is enhanced by a production in the style of a TV one-hour documentary, consisting of a series of interviews with actual participants in the events. This, and the harshly contrasting black and white photography, combine to produce a gripping documentary effect that is its main asset.

This film also represents the culmination of the recent trend towards violence in U.S. movies: in fact it is the most brutal U.S.

film I have seen. This brutality is a doubtful asset, since the emphasis sometimes becomes almost pathological. However, one is never led to sympathize with those who use it, as one tends to do in movies like The Blackboard Jungle.

Fernandel's Fabulous Five

France's Famous Five

Maybe Canada should sue the French Government or at least Fernandel for prolific activities in The Sheep Has 5 Legs, the "new arrival" at the Towne Cinema. Such virile activities can only lead to the ghost-towning of Callandar, Ont., home of those . . .

Ah, but Pappa Fernandel's simultaneous moppets are males cinq (count 'em), who through the years have spread out in more ways than one, and into a variety of livelihoods.

True, there are no nuns here, but we do meet a troubled curate, a most successful Parisian Skintician, a rugged cigar-smoking, read-'em-and-weep sea-deg, an advice-to-the-lovelorn columnist and Desire, the happy and penniless window cleaner whose innate talent would put all us here husky males to shame. Really.

Fernandel the highly talented plays them all with a brilliance unmatched even by Alec Guinness's gamut of humorous relatives in Kind Hearts And Coronets.

Guinness gave us swiftly sketched mimitable caricatures with one exception, his fully developed minister. But Fernandel's creations are complete individuals that achieve natural depth without artifice. Never does his technique diminish one's appreciation of the human presented. His mimicry, particularly those most common and very difficult actions, walking and the use of hands, flow from a well-controlled, deep organic development reminiscent of Raimu, the late great French comedian.

Around the oldest of plots—the family reunion—has been woven this gem of acting. Fernandel, first as the aged irascible Pappa Saint-Forget is urged by the city fathers to reunite with his five sons whom he hasn't seen in 20 years. For this occasion they've planned a national celebration in their small village with the President and other VIP's in attendance to pay homage to French fertility.

Refused, they still go ahead with their plans and one of them, bolded, energetic Dr. Fougaard, proceeds to stalk the wandering sons to their lairs, thereby weaving five stories together by his search

One of the lairs, of hard-gambling Captain Etienne is a tramp steamer anchored off the coast of Africa. Here, the honourable doctor finds the captain staking his ship, its cargo (which he doesn't own) and a lush native girl (which he does) in one of the neatest and most nerve-wracking gambling methods I've ever seen. This incident alone is worth the price of admission.

On the same programme the Towne continues to give us significant Canadian films. The last time I was there it was that tuckler, the Romance of Transportation. This time we are introduced to Canada's portrayal of 19th century Canadian life, Cornelius Kreighoff. Never was I so aware of how little I've seen of this great Canadian's work until the N.F.B. unveiled this Breughish interpreter of early French Canadian life. This is the best show in Towne.

ON WAX

There are a great many important new recordings being released in these pre-Christian shopping days but, unfortunately we have the space to examine only a very few of them.

Columbia has captured Noel Coward's infectious personality on an LP record at the Desert Inn in Las Vegas. Noel romps through a group of tunes including his own compositions Poor Little Rich Girl, Room With A View, Let's Do It, to the delight, I'm sure, of everyone who likes showbusiness.

And speaking of showbusiness, Capitol has a new album titled Miss Showbusiness featuring the vocal talents of Judy Garland. She signs all her regulars from The Trolley Song to Somewhere Over The Rainbow to The Boy

Next Door in Typical Gaiety manner.

Bobby Troup signs in his relaxed style the songs of Johnny Mercer on a Bethlehem LP. Troup's Mercer tunes, which share top billing on this record, include Midnight Sun, Laura, Black Magic, Skylark, and Jamboree Jones.

Also on Bethlehem is one of the finest LP's I have heard this year. It's the first in a series of three by Mel Torme. Mel has never sounded better as he wanders in his imaginative fashion through 12 wonderfully chosen ballads. Every tune is a little masterpiece but the ones I enjoyed best were the title tune, It's A Blue World, Till The Clouds Roll By, and You Leave Me Breathless.

Since the Jazz Festival at Newport last summer, jazz fans have been watching what almost could be called the resurgence of Miles Davis.

In the last few months there has been a number of records featuring Miles and now we have another one called Blue Moods on Debut. Along with Miles is featured bassist Charles Mingus, Brill Woodman, an ex-Ellington trombonist, Teddy Charles, a way-out vibist, and Elvin Jones, a brother of Thad and Hank.

There are four tunes, Alone Together, There Is No You, Nature Boy, and Easy Living, the latter two featuring Miles on muted horn. This may not be Miles' best LP, but it is certainly a very good one.

Campus Males Take Note

They're Out To Get Us!

By ANDREA CAPELLANA

Those not in the know have been startled recently by the earnest conversation of young ladies on such unlikely topics, as objectives, campaigns and zero hour. They will be enlightened to hear that this martial lingo disguises — what else? — marital interests. It seems that the subjects of these campaigns are certain young men the ladies have picked out as likely prospects for the future.

Campaigns are carefully planned in advance, put into action at appropriate moments and discussed in minute detail after execution. Most of this planning and discussion takes as its headquarters women's residences from midnight to four in the morning but the attack may happen anywhere and zero hour may spring up as suddenly as the middle of April.

A favourite stratagem involves discovering where subject of said campaign studies. It could be the periodical room, the reference room, the Wallace room, the main reading room or the stacks. Regardless of location, the objective can easily be mapped out and attacked in his very lair. Only a knowledge of hours when said subject is most likely to be found in his den and some work that can be done only in the same place, are necessary.

Once both hunter and hunted are located in the same general vicinity, there are all sorts of possibilities opened to the courageous and determined campaigner. A mislaid pencil, a large, heavy book on a top shelf or even a quizzical expression over a difficult graph usually bring a rapid response. If said subject remains firm at the tenth hour, a direct question may be asked as a last resort. An encyclopedia dropped on the subject's head is effective but worthy only of a clod.

More subtle is the accidental meeting at various extra curricular events such as visiting lecturers, tea dances, pep rallies, and club meetings. As such events are logically followed by cups of coffee and a walk or even the TTC home, they offer the most possibilities as far as follow up is concerned. On the otherhand, the technique involved is the most difficult since it must take competition into account.

A red dress worn by an experienced campaigner usually overcomes this difficulty but crowding can be turned to good account if said campaigner shares a chair with said subject.

There is one plan of attack that is limited to potential victims in the same courses as the campaigner. This particular stratagem involves sitting beside said subject in lectures and then leaving with him. The long walk across campus from the Economics Building to some place such as UC provides all sorts of opportunity to get a campaign rolling in full force. This is especially effective if both campaigner and said subject have two lectures together with a spare in the middle. Coffee in Mac's, the Elm, or the J.C.R. is really progress.

A variation on the above method is two classes in the same building with a ten minute cigarette break in between. This is less productive because of the short time involved, but is a step in the right direction. It is also useless unless both parties smoke.

One of the most important factors in a successful campaign is friends. If the campaigner has many friends in many courses, she is in a good position to set up a spy network all over campus to keep track of her various subjects. Naturally this involves an obligation on the campaigner's part to reciprocate when her friends are launching attacks of their own.

Another technique which can have very good results is to ask to borrow notes or other academic material from the subject in question. This necessitates the return of such material which leads to further contact. And help in a course is yet another method of establishing and continuing contact.

UC Freshman Bridge Novice Has All Diam's

Last night, Bob Dart, a UC freshman, beat odds that were calculated at 1,000,000,000 to 1.

He was playing bridge with Pete Gilbert, Al Orr and Joel Cooper when he discovered that he was holding 13 diamonds.

Bob, a beginner at the game, described the phenomenon: "Cooper shuffled, Gilbert cut and Orr dealt. I just sat there." Upon picking up his hand, Bob said that he "just laughed." I thought somebody stacked them or something," he said, "but the others were just as surprised as I was."

"There was no money on the game," he said . . . adding wistfully, "but it would have been kinda nice if there was."

Biggest Yet SAC At A Glance

The Students' Administrative Council last night, besides listening to five financial statements —decided to put a printed sign over the doorway to the SAC Building informing students that Nov. 30 would be the last day that Torontonensis will sell for the low price of $4; —learned that at the next session of parliament a resolution will be introduced for $5,500,000 in university scholarships;

—were told the ground for the SAC Bulletin Board was not frozen yet;

—looked sad on hearing that the expenses of the present scholarship student from Japan would exceed the budgeted $1000 because she is not in a degree course and consequently a university bursary could not be obtained;

—approved a 48-page Varsity for the 75th Anniversary Issue on Nov. 29;

—heard that Tip Top Tailors is expected to participate in the Student Discount Service on a national basis;

—were pleased to find the SAC's liquid assets of $54,961 exceeded liabilities of $35,304 by $19,657;

—made $1679 in the first quarter of operation, as of Oct. 31;

—looked glum on discovering the Handbook had lost $442; brightened when told 400 more had been sold to O.C.E. since then; turned glum again when informed 300 are still left; will be on sale until Nov. 30 for $4.00. After that date, the price jumps to $4.50.

Torontonensis

—budgeted $500 for UTDU to be used for trips to Pittsburgh, Montreal and Detroit with $132.40 for entertainment and Travel Expenses;

—decided they were undecided as to whether they wanted an extension of University Library hours;

—stressed the importance of Treasure Van and decided every member would attend, with or without money;

—heard the most interesting report ever presented to an SAC, from the UTDU; —learned with some surprise, that the Blue and White Society is no longer a Rah! Rah! organization;

—resolved that if McGill could have a Red Key, Manitoba a Gold Key then Toronto could certainly attempt a Blue Key;

—once more questioned the future of NFCUS;

—had the longest agenda so far this year;

—heard nothing from 6 council members.

Former "Agnostic" Now H H Chaplain

By ANASTASIA

A man who says he once "went down to the depths of agnosticism" has moved into the Hart House Chaplain's Office.

Reverend James Cunningham, a Toronto graduate, this year succeeded Reverend John Rowe as Chaplain. Mr. Cunningham was born in 1925 in Toronto and he attended high school in Slayner, Ontario before he entered the General Arts Course at University College in 1943. He spent a year at the School of Graduate Studies in philosophy.

At that time, he indicates, he "went down to the depths of agnosticism, shifting from one system of philosophy to another." He points out that later, when he recovered his faith, this year in philosophy helped him "to make sense of the different philosophies — to see them in their proper focus."

The new chaplain attended Wycliffe College for three years, and then became assistant rector at the Church of the Transfiguration in Toronto. He spent two years in England at the Honour School of Theology, Oxford. He tells with a laugh how he caught one of the worst colds of his life while studying in the Library at Pusey House, Oxford, and this despite the paraphernalia of a Canadian overcoat, a scarf, two pairs of socks and a pair of goloshes!

He was impressed there by Oxford students who, he says, "are intellectually more mature and better grounded in fundamentals." Libraries, though cold and drafty, were full most of the time. "I worked harder there than I ever worked in my life," he says.

The Chaplain and his wife, Jean, are resourceful people. For only $150 they spent a fascinating six weeks on the continent, living in Youth Hostels and hitch-hiking with all types and classes of people. "Germany," Mr. Cunningham says, "appears to be the most prosperous country in Europe today — alive with industry. In Italy the rich are very rich and the poor are very poor. The French will not argue about prices." Their adventure ended with their arrival in England and only six dollars in their pockets.

Mr. Cunningham said he thought his main duty as chaplain is to the individual student helping to solve any problems, or just making friends. He welcomes all students, male and female, in his office every morning from 9:00 to 11:00. He acts as chairman of many religious activities on the campus, conducts study groups, and often speaks at campus meetings. "You see," he explains, "the campus is my parish."

In the Hart House Chapel, whose controversial architecture has caught the critical eye of many, prayers are held every morning at 9:15 and every noon at 1:15 throughout the week. They are taken each day by a different religious group on the campus.

The Chaplain stated that he was seriously concerned with "the lack of vision on the part of a large number of students at the University. So many of them seem to be here to acquire certain tools to make a living, and there the matter of education ends."

"Why," he said, "should leaders of the future take delight in being as cheap as possible, drinking themselves into oblivion? We need to raise standards by elevating people's sight, to inspire young people to look and seek for deeper and better things — personal moral purity, intellectual honesty and a passion for justice."

Hat Rabbits Scrapped As SAC Quells Gripe Re Martin's Statement

"Rabbits cannot be pulled out of the hat each year," the SAC members decided last night. They defeated a motion objecting to the personal statement of NFCUS President, Peter Martin that an organization can not change its whole policy immediately after each meeting of its delegates.

Sandy MacPherson (IV Meds) objected to the following quota-if we were not being served because of our color. He got no answer."

When Alleyne and Bruce had left the restaurant, Van Alstyne entered the restaurant and was served apple pie and coffee.

Regarding the incident, Bruce said that he was very surprised at the outcome. "For one thing, the experience was quite new for me I was quite optimistic that we would be served, though I knew what opinion in Dresden is like. The fact that we weren't was slightly shocking. Alleyne and I have travelled quite a bit together around Ontario and Quebec and this is the first time anything like this has happened."

The students' complaint was prepared in collaboration with the Toronto Joint Labour Committee for Human Rights, a committee sponsored by the Toronto District Trades and Labour Council, which is trying to stamp out discrimination.

This committee has as members such well-known citizens as Controller Ford Brand and Mr. Eamon Park.

Restaurant owner McKay was fined $50 in an earlier case, for race discrimination. He appealed and Judge Henry Grosch of Chatham quashed the conviction on grounds of insufficient evidence.

After the Grosch decision, Premier Leslie Frost said he was not going to let the anti-color bar legislation collapse because of technicalities. "No legislation can overcome faulty judgment or appraisal of evidence," he said.

Webb and Sandstrom were checking the Engineers before they could get a really good shot away. However, outside right P-hapill had the chance to wrap up the game for the Engineers but missed an open goal after centerforward Ochrym had set him up on the goal line.

tion from the regular news letter of NFCUS; "there are a lot of people in this country who seem to feel that the only justification for a national organization comes if and when it managed to pull the rabbit out of the hat every year. They don't seem to realize that things take time. If they send their delegates off to the Conference in October with a brilliant idea, they want it in full swing by November. And, more important, they don't realize that an organization cannot maintain stability if it has to rush off on a new tangent every time the delegates 'get together.'"

Mr. MacPherson took the viewpoint that if an annual Conference was to be of any value, NFCUS must work immediately to put the propositions which were accepted, into practice. By November there should be definite indications that new work was being accomplished. The recommendations should not be shelved into the darkest cubby-hole and ignored.

An objection to the objection was immediately raised, Diana Haas (IV UC) interpreted Peter Martin for SAC stating "he does not mean that these policies will never be put into effect, but simply that they cannot act on them right away."

The motion, "that this council go on record as not being in favor of this statement regarding this organization," was defeated with only light support.

Law, Meds Officiate In Panel Precedent

Lawyers are not concerned with getting the truth, said Dr. Stokes of the Medical Faculty at a panel discussion between Law and Medicine last night. The subject of the discussion was "Law and Medicine—Is there a conflict of interests?"

Mr. Dubin, Q.C., said that the courts are not concerned with scientific truth, but with the administration of justice.

The meeting, attended by an overflow crowd of 125, heard Dean Cecil Wright of Law and Dean J. A. MacFarlane of Law

Voting Today For Mock Parli't Elections Must Fill 98 Seats

All students are eligible to vote at the Mock Parliament elections being held today. The elections, sponsored by the Political Economy Club, will determine the composition of the parliament, which will meet next January in the Legislative Assembly chamber at Queen's Park.

All four political parties on the campus have entered the contest. Pre-poll student opinion was that the struggle would be a close race between the Progressive-Conservatives and the Liberals.

Some members of the CCF Club deny the club will take part in any coalition — members are "against any front." They say they would rather see the Tories and Grits form a coalition "so we can fight them."

There are 98 seats to be filled by the four parties — Progressive-Conservative, Liberal, CCF and Labor-Progressive (Communist). These will be allotted on a basis of proportional representation. Those elected will take part in a three-day sitting in the Legislative chamber early in the new year.

All students can vote by presenting their ATL cards at one of the following places — the four arts colleges, the Economics, Skule, Medicine and Dentistry buildings and in Hart House. Voting hours are from 9:45 a.m. to 2:15 p.m.

CCF'er Coldwell To Speak Today

Mr. M. J. Coldwell, M.P., national leader of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, will speak today at a meeting sponsored by the U of T CCF Club. Mr. Coldwell has been a Member of Parliament since 1935 when he left his teaching post in a Saskatchewan school.

He was one of the founders of the CCF in 1933, and became the national leader when J. S. Woodsworth retired.

The meeting is at 4 o'clock in room 37, UC, and will be open to all.

SAC and Caput To Stalk Walk

The discussion was the first in a series sponsored by the Law Society concerning Law in its relations to other fields of public interest.

SAC and Caput To Stalk Walk

SAC members decided, with vigorous table-thumping, that something must be done about the dangerous condition of Philosopher's Walk.

Wendy Michener, Co-Editor of The Varsity, suggested that the SAC approach the proper authorities of the University to handle the delicate subject. "There are records of people being hurt on Philosopher's Walk as far back as 1934, in The Varsity, and people were asking even then that something be done."

Michael Shoemaker (IV Trin), President of SAC, was supported when he offered to take the problem before the next meeting of the Caput-SAC Liaison Committee.

Stephen Leacock Story UofT Famous Humorist One-Time Varsity Editor

By ANNE CARNWATH

Should The Varsity presume to claim Stephen Leacock as peculiarly its own and go pain stakingly back into the file covering his short tenure at the U. of T. (1887-1891), only one thing would be accomplished. The late Leacock, sub speciae aeternitas, would turn over in his grave, convulsed with laughter and label its efforts a search for dead sea scrolls that were never there. In truth there are only one or two entries in his name dating from this period and an unsubstantiated rumor (started by the current A. M. & D. editor to make live copy for the anniversary edition) that Leacock was editor of The Varsity for one inglorious week.

No, if it is college ties that determine possession, Stephen Leacock belongs to McGill, having spent most of his life there as a professor (later head of the department) in Political Science and Economics. As a humorist though, he belongs to everyone who finds him funny. On the strength of his laugh-appeal to many, plus the fact that he did attend Toronto, The Varsity here-with claims Stephen Leacock for a day and will proceed immediately with the excavation.

Born at Swannoor, England, on December 30, 1869, Stephen Leacock came with his family seven years later to live in Sutton on Lake Simcoe. He was educated at Upper Canada College and elected head boy there in 1887. He then came to U. of T., receiving his B.A. in 1891. Of his undergraduate days at Toronto, he wrote:

"When I was a student at the University of Toronto, thirty years ago, I lived, from start to finish, in seventeen different boarding houses. As far as I am aware these houses have not, or not yet, been marked with tablets.

I was not alone in the nomadic life that I led. There were hundreds of us drifting about in this fashion from one melancholy habitation to another. We lived as a rule two or three in a house, sometimes alone. We dined in the basement. We always had beer.

I spent my entire time in the acquisition of languages, living, dead, and half-dead, and knew nothing of the outside world. In this diligent pursuit of words I spent about sixteen hours of each day. Very soon after graduation I had forgotten the languages and found myself intellectually bankrupt. In other words, I was what is called a distinguished graduate, and, as such, I took to school teaching as the only trade I could find that needed neither experience nor intellect."

From 1891 to 1899 Leacock followed this undemanding profession, teaching at Upper Canada College. He then proceeded to the University of Chicago, receiving his Ph.D. in Poli Sci and EC in 1903. It was then that he received an appointment at McGill and remained there for most of his life. He died in 1944.

In his later years, looking back at the austerity of college life when he was a young man and contrasting it with the easy-going atmosphere on campuses in the past twenty or thirty years, Leacock wrote:

"Nor could anyone wish college life back to where it was, with so little diversion, so rigorous in its work, so cut off from the society of the other sex, life's solace and life's danger — cut off as a dead sea, stormless in a chasm."

Thus Stephen Leacock. Funny. Sometimes, perhaps, but is he to quote Duff Cooper, "the greatest literary figure in the history of our country?" Or, more to the point, is he 'literary' at all? For those, like myself, who do not always laugh with Leacock, perhaps it is best to conclude by quoting Leacock's own defence of his high calling as humorist:

"The making of humor is hard, meritorious and dignified. It would be much easier to write a sermon for the Archbishop of Canterbury than to write a poem for Punch. Huckleberry Finn is a greater book than Kant's 'Critique of Pure Reason.' Mr. Pickwick did more for the elevation of the human race than Cardinal Newman's 'Lead Kindly Light.' Newman cried out for light in the gloom; Dickens gave the light . . . the writing of solid, instructive stuff, fortified by facts and figures is easy enough. There is no trouble in writing a scientific treatise on the folk-lore of Central China, or a statistical enquiry into the declining population of Prince Edward Island. But to write something out of one's own mind, worth reading for its own sake, is an arduous contrivance, only to be achieved in fortunate moments, few and far between. Personally, I would rather have written 'Alice in Wonderland' than the whole Encyclopedia Britannica."

COVER BY

Hugh Niblock, the cover artist first joined The Varsity in 1953, as cartoonist, and left in 1953. A Toronto resident, he graduated from Victoria College in '54. Hugh and his beard (deep brown) have just returned from England where he has been "teaching watching and wandering." Of his future plans — "Very indefinite. I should like to pursue this thing called art."

From Trinity

On behalf of Trinity College, I extend greetings and good wishes to the Varsity in the seventy-fifth anniversary of its publication. It has over the years fulfilled many functions. It has been a record of University life, a mirror of student opinion, a centre of controversy, an organ for the education of public opinion. It has survived praise and censure, satisfaction and indignation. It has frequently observed the Scriptural injunction, 'Woe to you when all men shall speak well of you.' In all these vicissitudes, it has preserved its independence and its freedom, and in this it represents something truly valuable in student life. We trust that it will always exhibit courage and independence, that it will be fearless in the expression of unpopular opinions, that it will maintain the high traditions of the freedom of the Press.

In these days of the prevalence of mass media of communication, a great responsibility is laid upon our publishers and journalists. In competition with other media of communication, they have to strive to please, and are under constant pressure to substitute this end for that of informing public opinion. A University journal, produced in a community dedicated to the pursuit of truth, has its own particular responsibilities and ideals. May the Varsity always live up to these and, by its fearless championship of truth, dissipate error, prejudice, sentimentality and hysteria.

R. S. K. Seeley,
Provost of Trinity College

EDUCATION IN ONTARIO

Cheesecake Circa 1920

A women's gym class in the university, around 1920, presents a somewhat ludicrous spectacle for present-day viewers. However, the complaint that women do not have proper athletic facilities is just as common today as it was 30 years ago. They have yet to penetrate Hart House.

From 1827 Comes The ...

Royal Charter

"George the Fourth of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, by the Grace of God, King, Defender of the Faith, . . ." gave royal consent to the foundation of the University of King's College at York, Upper Canada, in a charter granted on March 15, 1827. This "University of King's College" became after many years the University of Toronto, just as "muddy York" became Toronto, and the charter is still preserved by the University.

The Charter itself is an imposing document. It consists of two pages of parchment or vellum, perhaps thirty inches square, and only slightly faded after more than a century in various vaults and desks. It was signed by the Earl of Bathurst "by writ of Privy Seal."

The pages of the charter are covered by handwriting so fine and accurate that it seems to have been done by machinery. In the upper left hand corner is a picture of George the Fourth. The margins are filled with fancy scroll work which entwines pictures of the royal family with what appears to be angels.

The "Privy Seal" is attached to the charter with a cord the size of a clothes-line, entwined with red braid. The Seal itself is the size of a small Christmas cake, and is made of yellow wax. On one side of the seal is a representation of Georgius Quartus Dei Gratia on horseback.

The Varsity of March 17, 1891, supplies an interesting description of the charter 51 years ago, and how it came into the hands of the U of T administration.

"For some years Sir Daniel Wilson (the then President of the University) had been on a hunt for the original charter of King's College, the embryonic form of our present Provincial seat of learning.

"He at last got a hint that the old Anglican Bishop of Toronto (Rev. Dr. Strachan) had had it, and a search of the archives of his successor revealed the long sought for document.

"But the present Bishop did not think he was authorized to surrender it. So off went Sir Daniel to the Attorney-General and got him to intervene."

"Whether Mr. Mowatt threatened the Bishop with a writ of

Varsity Official Denies Statement UofT "Factory"

Jan. 21, 1925

Premier Ferguson of Ontario described University of Toronto education as a "factory system" according to a Varsity report in 1925.

"The University of Toronto is like a factory turning out half-built and half-baked products," The Varsity reported the Premier as saying to an audience in Sarnia.

The next day The Varsity carried a statement from the Director of University Extension, W. J. Dunlop, saying, "Several gentlemen who heard Premier Ferguson's address in Sarnia on Monday of this week have hastened to supply information to the effect that the Premier did not say what he is reported to have said regarding the Provincial University of Ontario."

Great Storm of '24

Soph Snoozes, Succumbs In Snow

By BILL SMYTH

And then there was the Great Snow Storm of 1924 . . .

"Well over ten inches and only halfway through," said the weather office, and already lectures were being cancelled and drifts piling up on the campus.

The Varsity took advantage of the situation and for two days delighted its readers with "sags of the snow."

There was the student who fell asleep in the snow drifts and became buried four feet under . . .

A University officer noticed steam coming from a drift on Hoskin Avenue. "Calling a snow-shoveller," the Feb 22 issue relates, he had the mass of snow probed, and the lost sophomore came to light sleeping soundly some four feet from the outer air.

"After 15 minutes' effort the constable succeeded in awaking him. The sophomore murmured 'G'way, I'm gonna skip that nine o'clock,' and dozed off again.

"It is rumoured," the paper adds, "that he holds a position on

Province Provides For All Despite Population Increase Big Expansion Seen Coming

By W. J. DUNLOP

In the elementary and secondary schools of Ontario (exclusive of independent and private schools) there are this term more than 1,050,000 pupils and approximately 33,000 teachers. If the statisticians are correct in their forecast, and they usually are right, in ten years the enrolment in the Universities of Ontario will be double what it is to-day. In the Department of Education the number of candidates writing the Grade XIII examinations is increasing year by year. There is, in brief, the great problem facing those who are charged with the administration of education in this Province.

There are seven degree-granting educational institutions in Ontario; the University of Toronto, Queen's University at Kingston, the University of Western Ontario at London, McMaster University at Hamilton, the University of Ottawa and Carleton College in Ottawa and Assumption College in Windsor. In all of these the present enrolment is about as high as the authorities care to have it with the facilities at present available - the enrolment will be higher next year and each year.

In some of these institutions there are restrictions on the number of applicants that can be accepted in some of the faculties, such as Medicine, Dentistry, Forestry, and anyone who is conversant with public opinion knows howirksome restrictions are in a democratic country and especially in a young country.

For the training of teachers for the elementary schools there are seven Teachers' Colleges. On account of the large enrolments, the Toronto Teachers' College and the London Teachers' College are each operating as two Colleges with two Principals and two Staffs; the others are located at Hamilton, Stratford, Peterborough, North Bay, and there are two in Ottawa, one connected with the University of Ottawa. The total enrolment in the Teachers' Colleges is this year 3,139, an increase of 447 over last year's enrolment.

The Ontario College of Education, which is a faculty of the University of Toronto, provides training for teachers of academic secondary schools and of vocational schools, and also trains librarians.

But not all, not by any means all, young people wish to enter universities or to prepare for admission to the learned professions. There are many who prefer a different sort of training and these are provided for in the Ryerson Institute of Technology in Toronto, the Lakehead Institute in Port Arthur, the Textile Institute in Hamilton, the Mining Institute in Haileybury and the Provincial Institute of Trades in Toronto.

The last mentioned is strictly a trade school offering short courses in a variety of trades.

The Ryerson Institute of Technology with a daytime enrolment of 1700 and a night-class enrolment of nearly 5,000, has been a wonderful success since its establishment and has fitted thousands of young men and women for profitable and enjoyable careers; for example, some young people are being trained there for positions as engineering technicians, which is one means of helping to solve the present shortage of engineering graduates in the universities.

In the Lakehead Technical Institute students can cover the work of the first year in Arts, Forestry, Mining Engineering, Commerce and Household Economics and may be admitted to the second year of these courses in the Universities of Ontario. That Institute is soon to be replaced by a Junior College which is at present under construction at the Lakehead.

The young people who complete their course in the secondary schools of the Province have a wide choice of courses before them and are assisted in making those choices by their guidance teachers. Of course, many drop out at various stages in the secondary school courses but there is no reason why educational authorities should attempt to educate everyone.

The country needs craftsmen, artisans, industrial workers, business people, professional men and women and operators in all the occupations there are and it would be most unwise to try to compel those who are unwilling or unable to proceed to more advanced education.

Never in the history of the Province of Ontario has there been such a period of expansion as that which is now apparently approaching its peak. Naturally, the educational problems are greater than they have ever been but with the co-operation of those genuinely interested in the preparation of the citizens of tomorrow, these problems will be solved in good time for the benefit of all concerned. Perhaps one might conclude this little article with a question.

How long will it be before the Universities of Ontario will operate for twelve months in the year as some Universities in the United States are now doing?

Varsity Party

A Varsity Party will be held tonight—and all staffers of The Varsity are invited to attend this event of the century. The 75th Anniversary of the paper will be celebrated in fine style. Details in Varsity office now.

worthy of concern

The future prospects for this university — and for other Canadian universities — appear worthy of some concern. At present, the enrollment at Toronto is a little over 11,000 which is a sharp reduction from the post-war peak of 16,000.

But in the next ten years, this enrollment figure may well double, and no provision is now being made for this increase.

With the children of the war and post-war baby boom to accommodate in a scant few years, there is no reason why universities should not expect the number of entrance applications to double within the next ten years.

Where are these additional students to go? Here at Toronto, the existing facilities are not even adequate for the present enrollment. The conditions at other Canadian Universities are the same.

Queen's University, recognizing the advantages of a small student enrollment, have already announced that they have no desire to allow many more students into Queen's. Other private universities are expected to take the same tack, and this will only increase the pressure on Toronto, the provincial university.

If nothing is done — that is to say, if present conditions continue — this university will shortly be overrun with hordes of students, with no means of accommodating them.

Elsewhere in this issue, a message from the Minister of Education predicts that the time is not far off when students may be attending this university 12 months a year.

But what is needed is not double shifts of classes and over-worked professors; what is needed is not overcrowded classes and inadequate facilities.

What is needed is a fresh approach to the problem of universities in this country. It is by no means certain that those people who are at present attending university are the best qualified to do so. It is also not clear that alternative institutions on a more technical level might not relieve some of the pressure on the universities themselves.

Above all, the crying need at present is a realization of the intense problems which are confronting the Canadian Universities, and some effective and immediate action to surmount them. The provincial government in this province, with whom the responsibility for this university rests, have been dangerously lax and negligent in this regard.

Editorial Comments

For the past month or so we have been spending our time poring over the editorials of all the available files of The Varsity. The experience was at once edifying and discouraging. It was edifying because of the courage and wisdom of some, and discouraging because of the repetitiveness of others.

One thing can be said for all of them: they do give a fairly accurate picture of student life and thought and of what was of most concern to the students of any given year.

The editorials of the 80's and 90's are — as is usual for the times — rather verbose and contain many classical allusions. They frequently deal with the great problems of the world, and also with education. They take a deep interest in the welfare of the fledgling university. Surprisingly enough, editorial policy was dead set against scholarships or bursaries. Students should not be paid for going to college, they thought.

The period from 1900 up till the war was a rather dry one. The Varsity turned mainly literary and contented itself with criticism of the Conversation, for turning from a conversation-piece into a ball. Another large tonic of discussion was "ideals". Naturally during the war-period, the main concern of students was with the war effort. Almost all the editorials were written on a lofty, extremely serious tone, showing less wit than those of the 1890's and a greater tendency to self-exaltation.

And then of a sudden there is the wit, gaiety, impudence and perception of the twenties. Anything and everything was discussed: whether or not the editor had written his essays, women's styles, the theatre, the state of the union (we mean federation) the staff, lectures, politics etc. The impudence and wit of these editorials just seems to increase with the years right through the twenties, even as applied to the most serious matters.

Then there were a couple of editorial suspensions and for a time some pussy-footing was seen.

The thirties, we think, show the editorial writing in The Varsity at its height. The light touch of the twenties is combined with a greater maturity of viewpoint perhaps resulting from the depression. The cause of student government was taken seriously, more seriously by The Varsity than anyone else apparently, and righteousness was sought by each, according to his own temperament, bucolic or acid. That was up till the war

Again, the war period, 1939-45, brought a high seriousness and a leaning towards world affairs. A state which existed, until these same men who provoked the earlier editorials themselves hit the campus with their worldly experience and clear-eyed attitude towards the Ivory Tower. The editorials since then we won't comment on.

A certain amount of pattern can be found in the editorials, especially in those of the last thirty years. Student apathy and the lack of spirit at this university, for instance, have always been points of contention. So has sex, whether it was discussed in the frank terms of the twenties, or the veiled allusion of the nineties. For years the questions of fraternities, drinking a student union, a women's Hart House extra-curricular activity and so on have cropped up almost with the regularity of a church liturgy. Years of editors have stood up to speak on these subjects, unaware of the ghosts behind them who took the same stand years before. It may be significant that in most cases editors have agreed on these issues, that they have consistently chosen the path of non-conformism and resisted the pressures of society where they did not accord with reason. And again it may not

Seventy-five years ago last month, a struggling university journal was founded on this campus. Today that journal has become one of Ontario's largest daily newspapers, having successfully weathered the storms and struggles of the intervening years.

Looking back through the dusty files of The Varsity, it may seem that there is no evidence of any consistent policy which the paper has followed. Yet there has been one, strong note of consistency in The Varsity's stand: and that has been its integrity.

Yet despite pressure from the University administration and from student councils, The Varsity has always stood for independence of thought and action. The editors of The Varsity have printed what they thought and believed, not what convenience dictated. The Varsity has always felt that the students of this university deserve from their paper an honest and independent appraisal of university life. Such a frank appraisal may prove at times to be embarrassing or irritating to both students and officials, but in the long run it is highly beneficial to the university as a whole.

It is, with a great deal of pride that the present staff of The Varsity looks back over 75 years of this tradition. And it is our utmost hope and endeavour that in the future as in the past, The Varsity may remain free and independent, a stimulant to thought on this campus.

our thanks

The editors would like to extend their thanks to all who have helped with this issue. To the staff of The Varsity for their unstinting work, even on weekends. To the Deans of Colleges for their congratulations. To past editors and others for their advice and contributions. To the Alumni Bulletin and the colleges for the generous loan of old pictures. To the Students' Administrative Council for our budget. To the SAC staff for their extra efforts. To the staff of the North Toronto Herald for their patience and overtime. And especially to the University of Toronto library for their cooperation and consideration in arranging for The Varsity staff to have access to past files.

editors' note

This issue of The Varsity contains extracts of the articles for which The Varsity has been suspended in previous years.

not a right, a duty

"Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged, but publish your opinions. It is not a right; it is a duty."

As far as we have been able to ascertain from 75 years of back Varsities, no Varsity staff member has ever been hanged.

No small number, however, have suffered less drastic punishment for publishing their opinions.

In 1894, the editor, James Tucker, was expelled by the Caput for criticizing a staff appointment and for refusing to print an apology.

In 1929, the editor, R. B. Ryan was suspended by the Joint Students' Council on the suggestion of the Caput, for an editorial entitled "To Pet or Not to Pet."

In 1930, the editor, Andrew Allan, now of CBC, was suspended by the Joint Students' Council for an editorial accusing students of "practical atheism."

In 1934, the editor, C. Cochrane, was suspended by the Student's Council for writing a "political" (i.e. anti-Hepburn) editorial and for refusing to keep politics out of future editorials. No explanation was allowed to be printed.

In 1952, Editor Barbara Browne was suspended for a memorable gag issue featuring an article on "Remedial Sex," based on a speech by President Sidney Smith, on remedial English.

Student journalists have been blamed, condemned, and removed from office for having opinions on religion, government, sex, and fair play; in short, for talking about those few subjects which, in this earthly life, have any practical significance whatsoever.

Today's Varsity members enjoy freedom of the press, with reservations. The reservations include good taste, accuracy and the libel laws, but they also include vague loyalty clauses which can be, and have been, interpreted to force The Varsity into the role of uncritical yes-men to the Caput and SAC.

The Varsity is at least as fallible as either of the two bodies aforementioned. However, it is the voice of student opinion on the University of Toronto campus. As such, it will continue to publish its opinions; not only on matters of mere academic interest, but on everyday problems of practical student existence. Who knows? One of us may yet be hanged.

the ability to think

These editorials are selected reprints from the editorial columns of 75 years, starting with the very first editorial in The Varsity.

The First Editorial

A few years ago, a series of brilliant essays appeared in the New York Times, which enhanced the reputation at once of the writer and of the paper. They were subsequently collected and published together in a single volume with the remarkable preface: "I have been urged to unite these dissertations in book-form by the wishes of numerous and malignant enemies." By contrast we are reminded of this literary incident. The Varsity starts on its career unattended by malevolence and amid the hearty "God-speed-you" of friends. The chief incentive, however, has not been encouragement, but the consciousness of a capacity to supply what is beginning to be looked upon as a trustworthy indication of vigor and intensity of life in a university. We lay bare the spring of action with a reluctant hand, because exposition of motives is, not infrequently, mistaken for indulgence in an apologetic strain. An appeal to charitable forbearance would be sinister to any statement regarding the opportuneness of the Varsity's appearance. If there is conviction as to such a statement having foundation in fact, then all color of extenuation should be bleached from the above-given exposition. Indifference to the misapprehension we have anticipated might also be taken to argue against adequacy of conception with respect to our proper sphere of employment. The present undertaking is meant to serve advantageously the general good of a community whose professed passport to consideration is intellectually of character. The first impression conveyed by this declaration may be, that the claim advanced is pre-eminently arrogant; that the implied assumption of competence to act efficiently in this field of operation is destitute of any respectable table warrant. We hasten with the corrective. The justness of the impression would be unimpeachable if the Varsity presumed to pose as the guiding star, as the interpreter even, of a Canadian school-board, or of a graduate and undergraduate humanity. In reality our intentions are very demure: not a guiding star, not an interpreter, but a register of opinion in and out of the University in matters of education; an unbiased annalist of University life; and, in this last connexion, a strenuous advocate of what constitutes individual well-being. Efficiency from each of these points of view will demand from the undergraduates intellectual effort of no small significance. The maintenance also of a passable standard of excellence is not to be reasonably expected, unless such effort is supplemented by highly-participative exertion on the part of the graduates. Finally, there is needed the moral accessory of strongly expressed sanctions whose recollections of academic life have become gilded athwart the distance of many intervening years. Few will be disposed to detect extravagance in these stipulations; a close spirit of exaction would be inconsistent with the enlightenment of an auditory gathered round a prominent seat of learning. At most, instance will be laid on the conventional engagements of full liberty of discussion and fairplay — engagements which are entered upon in an earnest spirit of determination to abide by in these columns. At the same time we decline to offer a field for the exhibition of religious proclivities, and to afford an outlet to the ardency of youthful political partizans.

Set phrases and formulas, however acceptable to the multitude, act as irritants when appealing to an educated audience of men and women. Hence, in forecasting the course of the Varsity's affectation of very precise language has been discarded. Yet we have an avowal to make which barely escapes the stereotyped form: Whatever element of ambition or audacity lies latent in our programme, it is wholly bound up in the desire that the UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO shall possess the best university paper in America and an unrivalled index of the progress of educational systems.

"The majority of students still find it difficult to settle down to examination work before Christmas. It is the rule to waste Michaelmas term in making resolutions and breaking them. This should not be so. Though a man who makes his curriculum work the "be all and end all" of his ambition is to a great extent an object of pity there is a limit to indulgence in what may be for the time more interesting pursuits, at the expense of attention to reading."

It has always been a matter of deep regret to us that, while both branches of Football have always met with a considerable measure of success, our Cricket Club cannot show a like record. To all adherents of Cricket in University College who have indulged their imaginations with dreams of their Alma Mater's prowess in this line of sport, there are many and to a certain degree obvious reasons why the game cannot be placed on as firm a basis as the other clubs enjoy . . .

"The University of Toronto never dismisses a member of its staff, no matter how incompetent he may be found. Men whose proper sphere is surely not a university by one means or another get positions here. Having worked their way in, it is impossible to dismiss them. They hang on like grim death year after year . . ."

"There are men in these departments who don't earn one-tenth of the money they draw annually."

"What The Varsity wants to do, is not so much to point out the shortcomings of certain members of the faculty as to call attention to the absurdity of a policy which refuses to ask these men to resign."

"If the University is intended as a 'Home for the Helpless,' let the fact be known at once, and no one will expect things to be any different . . ."

"Mourning Issue"

The appearance of The Varsity this week is an adequate representation of the feelings of those who love the University most. We mourn all high ideals and every glorious hope that toil and self-denial have set up in half a century of hard-earned progress. For what has all the effort of the past come to—the effort of those who loved alma mater and hoped one day to see a great university stand on Toronto's historic soil? Here, in this year of grace 1895, we behold the University torn by dissension—rent in twain by the fatuous policy of selfish, small-minded men. And the tragic aspect of the matter is that he who would dare speak out, must be willing to sacrifice himself before the blind hatred of those who are determined to rule though the heavens fall!

November 25, 1903

Owing to the fact that the usual courtesy of an invitation to the C.I.R.F.U. Dinner was not extended to the University paper, no account of it appears in The Varsity.

September 30, 1914

The University reopens amid the gloom of a world-wide calamity. As British citizens we of Canada have an intense interest in the armies rocking back and forward across the face of Europe; as citizens of the world we feel the effects of this titanic struggle.

October 18, 1922

Times without number in our three odd years at College we have heard this thought expressed in more or less virulent words by men and women undergraduates—"Prof. What's his name has his knife into me," "Prof. Soundso, why that guy would sooner lose his right hand than help a fellow."

Maybe they're right—we haven't a personal knowledge of every Professor in the University, so we don't want to make any sweeping statements, but any we have met have given us a very different opinion and we think the chances are all on our side when we say "The only person out to get you, is YOU."

December 6, 1922

At a liberal estimate, only one student in twenty reads the editorial column . . .

Editorials should be read, not to be accepted as so many statements of fact, but as the opinions of one who is more or less in touch with important issues.

We can never become a great nation until we become a thinking nation, and we believe that the editorial page should be the starting point for our contemplation.

October 20, 1922

Initiations are a relic of the dark ages. Like various other plagues which science has not yet eliminated, they come upon us in epidemics, chiefly in the autumn. The present visitation has lasted for some weeks, and seems quite severe.

In the interest of the community we suggest thorough scientific research into the causes, results and possible cures for this condition. In a University so far-famed for its successes in research, there must be some brilliant mind who can make a thorough study of this problem.

February 5, 1923

Someone has said, "Bored at twenty! Heaven help you." Judging from external appearance a large majority of the students will need celestial aid some time in the future for they seem tired of everything and even acknowledge it frankly. One can hear "I am so bored" at almost any hour of the day in lecture room, corridor or library. Work is boring, play is boring, to do anything is boring and to do nothing is worse. What is one to do? . . .

Appearances are sometimes deceiving but let us not give the world an opportunity of judging the emptiness of our heads by an outward expression of complete ennui.

February 16, 1926

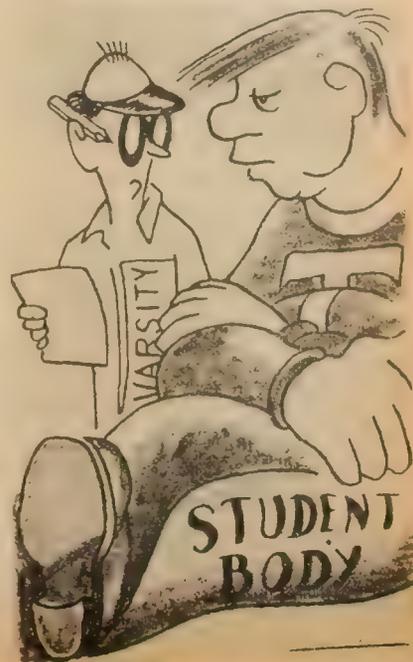

Lack of proper ventilation in lecture rooms is seriously affecting both the health and welfare of students . . .

November 4, 1926

We are of the opinion that the time has come when someone should question the prevalence of this "pocket flask" business. If we were to judge by the constant reference to students and their "hip-pocket flasks," we would come to the conclusion that every second student crossing our Campus has a flask stowed away on his person, that every suggestion of alcoholic aroma in the vicinity of the science building comes, not from the science laboratory (the more likely source), but from the pocket of an undergraduate, that every laundryman in Toronto is after the students' business because of the moisture that can be squeezed from the hip-pocket, and that every bulky pocket on the suit of an undergraduate hides a flask . . .

Far be it from us to pretend that our students are models of propriety or even that all of them are models of sobriety . . . but that exceptions exist is surely not warrant enough to make student life in the University of Toronto the general text for remarks on the prohibition question.

For the third time within a year, we are informed, the executive of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College, last Thursday, failed to obtain a quorum of members at an important meeting of the Association . . . This situation in one college may be regarded as a particularly striking indication of the existence of an attitude which is, unfortunately, only too prevalent among the students of this University . . . a tendency towards indifference to those matters which affect the general good . . . "Let George do it" seems to be the slogan adopted by many of them; and yet they will insist on protesting loudly if George, as is natural enough, does it badly!

October 31, 1928

On Monday of this week there disappeared from the women's cloak room of the Physics Building a fur coat and a fur neck piece . . . We are told that there is a stock saying in certain down-town districts to the effect that an overcoat can always be procured at Hart House . . . The loss of a fur coat may be regarded as "petty" by police, but we are sure that such a loss is considered a very great one by a student at college . . . Such a state of affairs ought not to be allowed to continue. If we are met here, as elsewhere, by the usual objection—"no money"—we might reply that perhaps students would be satisfied with the old flagpole, or with fewer pictures in classrooms if only they could go to lectures and labs confident that their belongings were in unassailable security.

February 24, 1931

The Rev. Dr. Gibson, Presbyterian divine of this city, believes that atheism is being taught at the University of Toronto. If by that he means that the teaching in a good many of the courses here is of such a type as to result in a practical atheism on the part of the students, he is probably right . . .

If we have ceased to believe in a Divine Being, if the basic canons of our major monotheistic religions have ceased to have any personal application to us, let us stop enrolling ourselves under such bastard classifications as "liberal believers" and "modernistic deists," and let us admit that we are—after all—atheists. It is a cleaner, healthier condition.

November 20, 1931

Deferential, blinkingly wise, persuasive, Yonge Street sits behind its counters confidently waiting for the irresponsible University student, full of bright new pennies that burn up his pockets, and completely unconscious of the financial maze set for his ensnarement.

We will not attempt in the short space assigned to us to delve into the origin and history of Dutch Dates: certain anthropologists claim that they can be traced back to the good old Dutch custom of "bundling" (Sumner—Folkways), but too little, alas, is known of this once popular institution. We must content ourselves with the fact that the Dutch Date is a fait accompli, although exactly how much is accomplished we must leave to the researchers of the Department of Sociology.

October 24, 1934

The establishment of beverage-rooms in Ontario is one of the most flagrant breaches of political rights ever perpetrated in this province by any Government. It is no excuse that both political parties are responsible (the one by creation and the other by adoption): the significant fact is that the theory of democracy, referring all important issues to the expressed opinion of the electorate, was totally disregarded. The wishes of the people were never ascertained. Referendums on the question have been consistently refused. The greatest single vice of our modern age was foisted upon us by the whim of our representatives and we are forced to accommodate ourselves to the spectacle of encouraged human folly.

November 12, 1934

In a report from Montreal, we hear that Armistice Day was celebrated in that city in pre-war splendor. Among the many clever window displays, one of the most outstanding was that of a candy shoppe whose window contained a Ross rifle, a trench mortar, a six-inch shell, two officers' swords, a bayonet, a water bottle, four flags and a plate of nuts.

October 17, 1934

The sex problem has always been with us.

November 6, 1934

The attack on a girl by a purse snatcher inside the University grounds east of the University Library early yesterday brings under scrutiny the question of the lighting system in use on the grounds. Without attempting to unduly alarm anyone, it would seem to us remarkable that such happenings are not more frequent at the spot where the attack occurred. There is scarcely anyone in Queen's Park at night and no attempt is made to light this pathway east of the Library in the old river valley.

Street lights should be placed along this footpath or else the walk should be torn up and closed to the public. A searchlight placed in a strategic position, such as is usual at various other points on the campus, would serve the purpose until such lights are erected.

The double threat of fascism and dictatorship has struck so near home in the past week that we can no longer sit stolidly in our arm chairs and repeat to ourselves "It can't happen here." Events in Quebec are showing us that it can . . . the padlock law of Quebec . . . creates a despotism . . .

There is terrible ventilation . . . in some of the lecture rooms.

October 7, 1935

Reporters who do satisfactory work on the McGill Daily are exempt from writing English essays. The Varsity has always cherished the hope that some similar arrangement could be worked out here.

December 6, 1935

The facilities offered by the Women's Union and Wymilwood, are not, contrary to popular opinion, sufficient to fill the need. Even if the rooms in which meetings can be held were large enough to meet the requirements, the necessity for a library, gymnasiums, and a swimming pool would still exist.

In fact the necessity exists if comparisons are to be made, for all those things which are offered in such a glorified type of club-house as the men are fortunate enough to possess.

Russia is giving the twentieth century a dynamic ideology such as France gave to the nineteenth. Whether these trends lead inevitably to armed conflict, or whether the increasingly powerful laboring classes can attain a sensible share of government by evolutionary means remains to be seen.

We were wrong. Two years we said "There will never be another major war." Only last autumn we were assured that we would have 'peace in our time'. But this fall, the large, black war clouds grew larger and larger. The rain of bullets descended. We are caught in a storm, the duration of which cannot be prophesied by any bureau.

This we do know. It is the individual, not the state, that is supreme in the final analysis. Has the state a soul? . . . We shall rid the world of this nonsense. We shall use force as a last resort to retain our birthright of personal freedom, and with the conviction that we are right.

The seeds of a social revolution have been planted in Quebec . . . the shell of medievalism has cracked . . .

October 1, 1941

It is with the proud assurance of maturing youth putting away childish things that The Varsity announces the banishment from its columns of what it believes to have been in the past one of its most slovenly habits—the Dance Advance.

Readers of The Varsity in former years have probably noticed, as the social season enters its full swing, a steady stream of stories about dances, rewritten day by day, hacked out in neat cliches which describe the festivities with glowing superlatives, and a bursting but somewhat lonely enthusiasm. This is all in the past.

January 25, 1945

In a recent address to the Associations of Professional Engineers of Ontario, Dean C. R. Young of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering expressed the inevitability of the adoption of a five-year course in engineering at Canadian Universities. He further stated, however, that this would not come about until after the period of rehabilitation after the war had passed . . .

It is to be hoped that the time is not too far distant when the extension plan as outlined by Dean Young will become a reality.

October 24, 1946

Membership in fraternities seems to be gaining increasing attention among freshmen and freshettes these days. But, beware of the large smile. It is a tactic of the rushing game which is not always recognized by you who are not wise to fraternity offensives.

Obviously the wearers of the large smile want you. The question you should be asking yourselves is, "Why do they want me?" If you can contribute to a fraternity and what it can contribute to you is a fair exchange then by all means join. If you decide that such a reciprocation is not possible then it is for you to avoid membership in a Greek-letter organization.

November 24, 1952

We are strong for our pep rallies, and for our float parades, for our dances and our meetings, and if we ever happen to see a student standing alone or eating his lunch all by himself, we go and talk to him immediately to save him from the terrible boredom of himself, or perchance from going out of his mind.

They call it crowd culture, and we like it that way. For if we started to reflect on things or to sit alone by ourselves, we might start writing books or composing music; we might even start painting or writing poetry, and that of course would be the end.

October 31, 1952

That we should take seriously the recent occurrences following the Queen's game, and that we should ourselves attempt to correct the excesses of some of those among us, is to fulfill the responsibilities of self-government. It is gratifying to see that the student body is capable not only of recognizing its own errors, but also that of seeking to correct these from a sense of righteousness and not by order of the governing body.

October 27, 1952

It is always a source of amazement to realize just how fast leaves can be blown by the wind. We walked across the park yesterday and tried to keep pace with them, but it was of no use. The forces of the elements were much too great for this sedentary student.

It must be nice to be a leaf. You don't have to worry about where you are being blown.

January 9, 1953

In the minds of many, the purpose of the university has been confused by the position of importance given to university sport. The Varsity has contributed to this confusion. We have consistently given more than ample coverage to all sports, glamorizing them with colorful language and blow-up pictures. We have helped make campus heroes out of football players. We have contributed to making university sport into big business, and big business is the yardstick of education.

Accordingly, The Varsity will no longer contain a Sports Department.

The Varsity Staff - 1885

This is the first recorded picture of a Varsity Staff. Taken in 1885, five years after the paper's beginning, it shows the dress and dignity of the paper's staff. The dog in the foreground is one of a series of Varsity mascots which belonged to the paper for many years. The person on the extreme left, standing, is J. S. MacLean, millionaire founder of Canada Packers. One of the other staffers is Angus J. MacLeod, after whom MacLeod, Alberta is named.

Formerly The Student Union Moss Hall Housed Varsity Till Old Building, Torn Down

By CAROL HOFFMAN

The early years of The Varsity were, among other things, marked by frequent changes of residence. But, for five years the paper stayed in Moss Hall from 1884 to 1888.

Before that time The Varsity had lurked furtively in various rooms in the cloisters of University College. However in 1884 a ground floor room was appropriated in Moss Hall for the editorial and business offices of The Varsity. Although the rooms were plain and unadorned, "Ye Varsity Sanctum" at least had a fireplace to liven up the atmosphere.

But housing The Varsity was not the only claim to fame of Moss Hall. Built in 1850, it was once the sole building of the University of Toronto, first housing the medical faculty, forced out of the old King's College when the parliament buildings in Montreal were burned and space in Toronto was needed by the government.

The Faculty of Arts, an independent McMillan school, the Toronto School of Medicine, and the YMCA occupied Moss Hall in rapid succession. Then the Literary and Scientific Society of University College moved in.

In 1888, Moss Hall, which then also housed the University Athletic wing was torn down, to make room for the present Ecology building. Moss Hall the home of the Literary Society and The Varsity, has been swept away, and Science has again shouldered literature to the wall, commented The Varsity.

Varsity Fireplace

This is the fireplace in the Varsity office in Moss Hall. Adorned with pictures and a mascot, the offices served The Varsity from 1884-1888 when the building fireplace and all, was torn down.

Then and Now: The Undergrads' Paper From Weekly Magazine To Daily Tabloid

By VERN GILBERT

Seventy-five years ago last month—on October 7, 1880—the first edition of The Varsity appeared.

Since then, through a varied and sometimes hazardous existence, the undergraduate newspaper has flourished and climbed to a position of eminence as one of the leading college papers on this continent.

The first issue of The Varsity was the result of the efforts of a group of enthusiasts who had formed an organization known as "The Varsity Joint Stock Company" with shares selling for five dollars each. For the first 29 years of its existence it appeared as a weekly.

The first editions were printed in booklet form, with a cover similar to that found on any late 19th century magazine. The paper usually ran about eight quarto-sized pages. Price was five cents a copy, and it was necessary to pick up the issue at "Mr. Wilkin's, Corner of Adelaide and Toronto Streets." It was published each Saturday morning. The price was later increased to ten cents.

After a decade of financial trials, and after periods of narrow economic escapes, the joint stock company went bankrupt, and during the 1889-90 school year, disappeared from the campus.

In the following year, the University College Literary and Scientific Society took the paper under its wing and financial troubles were halted.

The first big controversy in the campus journal's history occurred in 1895, when it was instrumental in securing an investigation by the Ontario Government into the administration of President Loudon, after the editor was expelled.

In 1902, The Varsity was handed over to the Undergraduates' Union, and representatives from St. C. S.P.S., Medicine, Knox College, Wycliffe College, Dentistry and Pharmacy were included on its staff.

It was not until 1909 that the publication became a newspaper. After October of that year, it appeared twice a week as a four-page, five-column paper. Two years later it was enlarged to a tri-weekly, with six columns.

In the following year, 1910, the University Press offered its facilities to The Varsity.

Journalists took up their editorial quarters in the second floor back room, where until 1946, when enrolment at the university increased to about 20,000, editors toiled through the night.

In 1921 and 1922, a group of experienced young journalists came to the campus and radically revised the policies of the newspaper. The women's staff was all but abolished and The Varsity became a daily in October, 1923 in the same year the Champus Cat became an established feature and also an associate membership was temporarily obtained in the Canadian Press.

From then until 1929, there were no major catastrophes, but in that year controversy was aroused between student journalists and officialdom over an editorial entitled "To Pet or not To Pet."

During the years of the depression, the front pages of The Varsity carried many stories of the impact of this world upheaval, not only on the life of students, but on the world itself.

The sixteenth anniversary was noted in October, 1940 and a forty-eight page anniversary issue published in March 1941. Meanwhile, the banner heads of The Varsity proclaimed such news of national interest, as the war progressed. Front pages were full of war news, of the COTC, and of savings drives.

A new feature of The Varsity's year was the occasional publication of special issues devoted to official university announcements.

Some ex-staffers in early 1945 suggested that The Varsity become a Faculty of Journalism. To support this contention, they submitted a list of prominent ex-Varsity members.

In the same year the first CUP conference with all provinces represented took place.

With student enrolment mushrooming after the war, the presses of the University Press were inadequate to print the increased circulation. After much negotiation, printing was done in Oshawa, and the paper established as a tabloid.

The increase in the size of the student body meant much more revenue for the SAC, and indirectly, The Varsity.

The state of affairs continued until 1948, when numbers started to decline, and veterans began to disappear from the campus.

Early in 1949, editors again were in trouble as they criticised the City Council, shortly after it had made a $2,000,000 grant to the University. The Council had attempted to set up a committee to investigate the University and see if its students were being taught a democratic way of life.

October, 1951 brought a special issue to commemorate the visit of TRH Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh.

The editor resigned in March, 1952, following the "Jazz Issue." Copies were seized, and none are to be found in any of the files. A final issue of The Varsity for the year appeared under the aegis of the SAC publications committee.

From 1952 on some are of the opinion that The Varsity has been suspended, for no one has been suspended, and no copies sized.

History shows, however, that The Varsity is capable of such an upheaval at very short notice.

From its beginnings in the Victorian period, The Varsity maintained a virile, youthful outlook, attempting to reflect student opinion and at the same time adopt firm stands in an endeavor to inform and direct student opinion.

One of the early attempts to give an editorial lead to public thinking is shown in its early editorials on the subject of co-education. This continued for some years, until women were admitted in 1886, and even after, as late as 1904.

Since its inception, The Varsity has progressed calmly enough from a technical point of view. About a hundred issues a year now appear and are distributed around the campus in a comparatively efficient manner. Staffers combine into an organization modelled on the lines of a large daily newspaper.

Looking back over the issues of The Varsity for seventy-five years, the changes in the life of a large university can be seen slowly evolving. The files of the student newspaper provide a minutely detailed history of the University of Toronto, its physical, pedagogical and philosophical changes.

"The Varsity" Not Dignified According To 1885 Reader

The Varsity:

If you look 'Varsity' up in a dictionary you will find that the word means "The principal team in a sport of a college or university."

It is now unknown why the founders of The Varsity selected the precise name for the paper. As The Varsity was then a semi-monthly review, and by no means a sporting paper, the allusion to being the University's "team" probably attracted them.

However, the name did not pass without question. In 1885, one of The Varsity's readers complained bitterly about the slangy name and threatened to withhold his subscription unless the name was changed to something more dignified.

Defunct Journal "White & Blue" First On Campus

The Varsity was not the first student journal to appear on this campus. In 1879, a publication called the White and Blue was started.

However, no known copies of this publication are now known to exist, although it is thought that it was published for just the one year. The Varsity began publication as a joint-stock company—in 1880.

The uncle of William Lyon Mackenzie King was one of the White and Blue's founders. Later, King himself worked on the staff of The Varsity.

Battle of the Sexes

Co-Education Ruins Femininity

The Varsity was not the only new thing appearing on the University campus in 1880—and in all justice we must admit that the first "women undergraduates" were probably greeted with more interest and opposition than the newspaper.

The first issues of The Varsity set forth the views of Wm. Houston, a persistent and dedicated proponent of co-education in University College. Mr. Houston deplored the views of the Council which "did not consider it compatible with due order and discipline that young men and women should be allowed to attend lectures together." He objected to the claims that education would have "a tendency to unfit Canadian girls who aspire to be wives and mothers for these high vocations," and he added with a note of satisfaction, "I am primarily convinced that the battle is already won . . ."

Yet in 1885, the battle was still raging. Phillip Stewart commended "the sound position which our University has taken in regard to the higher education of women." But he also asked "What is womanliness?", with the daring speculation that "mayhap in the centuries to come, it will be womanly to be a prime minister".

In the same year, the Montreal Star asked the heads of numerous universities ". . . Has anything occurred to warrant the inference that mixed classes tend to lower the moral sentiments or injure the character of any of the students?" The most interesting and vigorous answer came from Dr. White of Cornell, who asserted that "young men cannot glory in the same things or talk in the same way when even a small number of ladies are present among them as many would do without such restraint." Calling himself "an apostle of the system," Dr. White prophesied that "the number of young women who seek a university education will always be small, and it is absurd to expect that ladies' boarding schools are to be emptied into university classes".

To make a long story shorter, the ladies had their way. In 1917 the first woman student entered the ranks of the Engineers, and the men lamented the occasion with the observation, "The old order changeth, yielding place to new." The Varsity admitted that "Of course, woman's work has been, from necessity, expanded into all trades and professions during this titanic struggle in Europe; but apart from that, the mind of woman is being broadened to a greater degree than was thought possible in earlier days."

"WOMEN FLATLY DENY SMOKING CHARGES" in 1919. Following a vicious accusation to that effect, "the Queen's Hall girls are up in arms. They want it understood that they do not smoke, and are not interested in the habit." Their denial was "strongly supported by all those in a position to know intimately the private life of the Co-eds".

The fate of co-education was challenged again in 1923, when "local opinion deemed it advantageous though not practical from a financial point of view to discontinue co-education." Despite the talk, or perhaps the wishful thinking, the women had a permanent "hip in the door".

In 1924, 85% of the feminine heads of the campus were bobbed. A movement began to get them in to the Hart House Barber Shop. One of the Master Barbers was enthusiastic in his approval of the scheme ("an excellent idea"); but from the Warden's office came the familiar pronouncement: "Hart House is for men only, and in regard to any convenience designed for men, we must religiously adhere to the aim of the Founders."

Another clarification made in 1924 was the distinction between the terms "co-eds" and "women undergraduates". "For many years after woman's supreme struggle had won for her the right to penetrate into the sacred precincts of the universities," claimed The Varsity, "the term 'women undergraduates' was applicable to all women students". They were not distracted by outside activities, and their college life centred on lectures and Graduation Day.

When the Co-eds, their more pleasure-loving, more decidedly feminist sisters invaded the field, the phrase "Women Undergraduates" became "a trifle too heavy and altogether unsuitable". They thought their lectures either "fun" or "a bore"; they bobbed about the campus "muffled in snug fur coats and saucy little hats".

"And as long as ever-increasing social activities continue to draw a certain type of girl to college," The Varsity accurately foresaw, "the term 'co-ed will remain.'"

NFCUS: 'Desirable' or 'Disreputable'?

By BILL SMYTH

Nearly 30 years ago Canadian students from 10 Universities met at McGill University to discuss possibilities of establishing a national student organization.

Since then, the words "National Federation of Canadian University Students" have rarely been absent from the pages of The Varsity, although 1955 students will be surprised to learn that "NFCUS" was not always the well-gnawed bone of contention it is today.

A 1927 editorial starts: "The formation of a national federation, as proposed by the recent conference of student representatives from Canadian Universities, seems to us very desirable from many points of view."

Compare this editorial from a 1955 Varsity: "There is only one institution on this campus that is in a more deplorable state of disrepute and disregard than NFCUS."

It is difficult to determine how this change has come about, for certainly there have not been such startling changes in the Federation over the past 30 years. With the organization's rebirth in 1947, Varsity editors still favored it; they praised it as a means of unifying Canadian students, and stopping racial, political and religious conflicts.

Perhaps today's cynical comments come from the realization that the group's high-sounding phrases led people to hope for too much too quickly: perhaps Canada is too large and underpopulated to support a national student federation.

The Varsity has not yet answered the question, but have the students of Canada

"A room-mate is one of those queer individuals who is made almost entirely of faults, who sees no good whatsoever in his (her) room-mate, and is, all in all, a constitutional objector."

To some, this rather narrow-minded definition, published in the 1939 issue, may contain a grain of truth, but we would dare say that the majority of residents will find this view a bit stern.

No matter what our views may be concerning room-mates and rooms, etc., we have to admit that living in residence is more than a small part of university life. To most of those living on campus, boarding is the greatest experience of college life.

In the sprawling houses of St. Michael's and in the compact "hotel" that is the UC men's residence, thousands of university students have learned the extra-curricular art of living with others and liking it.

In the thirties, the slogan of on-campus dwellers was "What's yours is mine and what's mine better not be yours". This seems to sum up the feeling of community spirit that pervades the university residences.

The Ideal Room-Mate

Dec. 8, 1911

His suits are of the latest cut,
And fit you like your own;
His ties, his shirts, his suits, his socks,
Are your comparison.
His notes and lectures up to date,
His problems always done;
His cheque from home is never late,
Or credit over-run.
His only sister is a star,
He'll introduce you to her;
He lets you have his motor-car,
His father is a brewer.

Living together does have its drawbacks though. For instance, there's the example of the flu epidemic of '18. It started quite humbly. One Vic student was feeling ill. His friends, naturally, stopped in to cheer him up. He had the flu. His friends proceeded to be wonderful carriers and the sickness began to spread. Soon all of the Victoria residences were burning with the fever. It didn't stop until the entire university, six professors and one chambermaid were laid up.

The Varsity did not explain how the professors and the maid caught the germ.

Again, we have the worked complaint absence food. The following (sic) appeared, way back 1898 issue of The Varsity.

Student: "I certainly have eaten a residence and am still alive."

Initiations have altered around the houses. In the 1920's, were all the rage. Ten or ten sophomores would challenge a like group of men, to see who could beat up to Bloor St. and top speed, at six o'clock morning.

To give day students of residence life, Trinity in 1940, offered a "one trial" of the dorms and to all who wanted a second to go home for a week, though a radical and innovation such as this was expected to shock more conservative of the Varsity reputed to boarders were over-enthusiastic prospect of a re-union parents after a month's

Hart House Conquers Fatal Start Inaugurated By Massey In 1919

By JOHN MILLER

The beginnings of Hart House were marked by disaster. During the construction, a 60 foot chimney on the south side fell through a six inch cement floor right to the basement, killing two workers and injuring seven others. This 1915 mishap caused the skeleton of Hart House to be deserted for awhile, until the contractors decided what to do.

An investigation was held in November, about a month after the accident, in which it was discovered that the contractors had not followed the city by-laws as they had not built a retaining-wall for the 43 foot main wall. The contracting company was permitted to continue their work while the investigation went on.

1919 opened with expectancy for rumour had it that the gym and pool were to open in the fall. It was uncertain, however, when the rest of the building would be ready for use.

Building progressed favourably during 1919. The Hart House theatre was being compared with other North American establishments such as the Metropolitan Opera House of New York. The lighting especially was something to wonder at. Footlights were no longer required for a system of overhead lighting was installed. An interesting sidelight to the theatre is that the entrance was especially designed to let women into dramatic events and yet not disturb the sanctity of the place.

November 11th, 1919, was the big day. His Excellency, the Duke of Devonshire, unveiled the dedicatory plaque, while Mr. Vincent Massey spoke at the opening dinner given in the Great Hall for visiting dignitaries and graduates. "Bricks and mortar are but the bones. The community must provide the spirit. Under the direction of the Warden, the students will take part in the development of their individual character which is the greatest aim of a university."

Hart House is to be opened to the women of the university, reports a Varsity staffer in early 1920, but he cautions the girls not to rush into its hallowed walls just yet. There are a few catches. First this privilege is to be extended only on one Sunday a month and then only when the visiting hours would not interfere with church services.

The Great Hall was always a thing to be marvelled at in those days. A Varsity staffer of 1921, after a tour of the vast culinary system, reported that, if consumption of food was any criterion, meals there should be of the best.

Required for a typical day were ten bags of potatoes, five bags of carrots, 60 lbs. of butter, and 30 gallons of milk. The kitchen staff was so geared to be able to serve 500 meals an hour in six different dining rooms.

Several years later, the prices of Great Hall meals were raised to meet the rising cost of living. The exorbitant prices then were 25 and 35 cents. On the whole, the Great Hall was in a good position financially, although it operated on a very slender margin.

The theatre of Hart House opened successfully in 1921 with a presentation of three plays. Raymond Massey played in one of the plays and the Varsity had this to say about his performance: "He was both restrained and suggestive of cleverness. The decayed and idle gentleman made a good stage figure, and the nonchalance with which he met his doom was certainly worth seeing."

In 1924, after the erection of Soldier's Tower, Saturday Night carried an article which called it the "most beautiful monument yet erected to Canada's war dead." Although the Vimy Ridge Monument would be more impressive when finished, yet it will not be seen by many Canadians. It would be the Tower of Hart House. In those days, although most approaches were from the South, the northern approach was considered the most beautiful.

Female visitors were held in as much esteem in 1924 as they are to-day. This is the comment one outraged male made: "No more pleasant way of spending a Sunday afternoon can be thought of for a woman-hater than to try and read at such a time, while the atmosphere, real and spiritual, of his sacred club is polluted with perfume and giggles."

In the mid-thirties, the Hart House String Quartet had its difficulties. In view of the pro support it had been getting, a poll was taken to determine the principal complaints. Some said that the type of music presented was not appealing enough and that a movie or play might be more attractive. Others thought that the subscription price was a big obstacle to most students; single tickets were suggested as an alternative.

1935 saw some changes in the rules of the Great Hall. Smoking was now permitted, members would no longer have to sit on benches as chairs were now provided. To suit the discriminating taste of the average student, a choice of three main courses would be offered at all meals. Also to be added would be, wherever they pleased, no matter what the price, a heavy help-up, chased.

The Great Hall of Old Hart House saw several students and faculty members at the University in 1930 and all. The kitchen staff was greatly overworked at the time; consequently some solutions, such as staggering lunch periods, would have to be found.

This brief sketch of Hart House highlights the past and points to the future with the closing of the Card Room because of gambling in 1947. The Board of Stewards felt that the Card Room had to be taken out of the campus. The room in the future would be used as a common room.

Warden Jas. McCulley

When we speak of Hart House, we mean the speaker, Warden Joseph McCulley. One of the most familiar figures on the campus, Mr. McCulley has always had a close association with the University. A Lions Club member, he was elected chosen President of the S.A.C. in 1926. In the following year a feature article appeared in The Varsity, to the effect that he had decided to assume the duties of the Warden of Pickington College. The boys' school in New York was being operated by the material of ten years, and Mr. McCulley was chosen as the person most likely to mold boys into men.

Legislature Left Us Legacy Under Auspices Of Verbose Act

By JOHN HERBERT

His Majesty . . . presumably to command your respect for what is to follow.

Before we get into the meat of what's to come, someone was thoughtful enough to define all the words we may not know. "University" it says, means "University of Toronto." Now that is a revelation, "Trinity College" on the other hand does not just mean Trinity College but "Trinity College as established and incorporated by the act passed in the 14th and 15th years of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, chapter 33, and as constituted a university by Royal Charter bearing date the 16th day of July, 1828."

There follow 47 pages of what the student probably looks upon as unnecessary nonsense and red tape. But hidden here and there are interesting little items covering many of the issues on this campus in past years.

Freedom of religion comes up in the first few pages. Section 7 of the Act states that "No religious test shall be required of any professor, lecturer . . . or of any student." But strangely enough, it is immediately followed by this passage: "but the Board may make regulations touching the moral conduct of the students thereof and therein and their attendance on public worship in their religious instruction by their respective ministers . . ."

Sounds a bit grim doesn't it? But there is another "but" to the effect that "attendance on such forms of religious observances shall not be compulsory on any student attending the University or University College." Are you still with me?

Provision for student government is to be found in a generally worded section entitled Committee of Students. This committee is granted a "right" to make communications through the President of the University to the Board of Governors upon any subject in which they may "deem themselves to be interested."

Remember all the fuss in God's country to our south over academic freedom? The old act anticipated that one too. Although during the pleasure of the Board made necessary upon the recommendation of the President of the University. Or is this a sufficient check on the all-American disease?

Hart House Orchestra Associates and their Sunday evening concerts were in the spotlight recently. Conceivably the Board of Governors as the responsible authority within the University, might face prosecution for such student action. But the Act says that any action against the Governors must have the consent of the Attorney-General of Ontario.

Did you realize that on graduation you will become enfranchised? Every graduate is entitled to vote in the Senate elections, conducted every four years by mail. Or that the Ontario Ladies College at Whitby and Albert College of Belleville are affiliated with the University of Toronto?

"Instruction in arts in the University . . . shall be free to all regularly matriculated students," etc. So says Section 115. But don't you Arts types think that Simcoe Hall is going to let you get away with this.

Near the end, we find provision for the stopping up and closing up by the Board of Governors of Devonshire Place as a public highway. "Too bad someone didn't think of sticking in Hoskin Avenue as well.

And what does all this prove? Don't ask me—I couldn't understand too much of that legal jargon. But take a look for yourself!

University Night Light Helps Extend Education

As night descends on the campus, and students and professors leave for their home, the university acquires a quiet and deserted air. But soon, the buildings spring to life again, a new flock of students and lecturers arrive, and the evening classes of the University extension are begun.

The students who attend the Extension lectures are not under graduates. Some of them are very young, some are old. Some are merchants, others are mechanics. Some are studying to become teachers; others want to learn mechanics. They all have one thing in common—a desire to learn.

The Department of University

Co-Eds Here To Stay

Extension had its first beginnings in 1896, when the university sponsored lectures in various towns and cities in Ontario. The professors of the Extension courses travelled all over Ontario—sometimes by horse, and sometimes by show-shoes.

The Department has also added correspondence courses in various subjects. It has expanded time after time to meet the new and changing needs of a modern community. Its primary goal has always been to give the community that needs the services of a university yet cannot, for one reason or another, take advantage of regular university instruction.

Fin-de-Siècle Brings The Co-Ed Scandals As UC Bars Women

By MOLLY DAVIS and MARY JANE ROWLEY

1880-1900:
The university student of the late Victorian era was an odd combination of intellectual traditionalist and downright jolly good fellow.

Varsity records show that he was much concerned with co-education. He said loudly that the weaker sex was too frail to endure the rigorous course of lectures, but what he really feared was that the promiscuous interminglings of the sexes would lead to intrigue and scandal. The Council of University College refused to admit young women to lectures jointly with young men on the grounds that the former would distract the latter—or vice versa—and order would cease to reign.

were unsavory. Students searched fruitlessly for a "satisfactorily cooked dinner in this town." The Varsity of October 16, 1880 commented, "The ostentatious contempt displayed by ethereal mortals towards the gastronomie need not obscure the fact that the yearning for a well-served table, when unsatisfied, often seeks compensation in stimulative beverages."

British influence was very strong. Cricket and rugby were the main sports. Even the advertisements were concerned with British products. It was fashionable to wear English silk hats and to dine at "The Noted English Chop House."

But the silk hatted diner was a practical joker too. Someone, one dark night, let goats loose in the School of Science.

The students' schizophrenic nature became more unified towards the end of the decade. He took his pleasures more seriously and his studies less. He organized his friendships into fraternities and evolved clubs from his studies. A Varsity Night, featuring singing and dancing, was staged at the Grand Opera House.

Even though the 500 subscribers had to go to the corner of Adelaide and Toronto for their copies, The Varsity was scrupulously read during classes, tutorials and other such periods set aside for the "free liberty of the mind and garnish of the same."

Hart House Now Stands Here

Student life was quite different in the 1880's when this picture was taken. The road shown here still exists, running East and West immediately in front of Hart House. The extensive park lands in which the University was then situated are also shown as well as McCaul's Pond, part of Taddle Creek. The Pond was used to dunk freshmen during initiations. Taddle Creek still exists, although it now runs underground. The builders of the new library and Trinity Chapel both encountered it when preparing their foundations.

Tight Skirts Or Stiff Collars In Years Before Great War

BY JOHN HARASTI

1900-1920:
Their clothes were a little tighter perhaps, and their collars stiffer, but to a man students of the Great War era could have traded boots with any of our chums.

Their world looked more primitive. They wondered what the memorial tower contiguous to Hart House was going to be like.

Great was the day when they trudged up the dirt road in front of Hart House and along the back campus (now Trinity Chapel), to behold the most modern of stadiums, with its new stands covering almost two thousand.

It was such a day when nearly all the twelve hundred Varsity enrollees cheered their Blues to their first Grey Cup victory over the Argonauts.

Co-education was the big thing then, in the early years before the Great War; long and heated discussions threw the issue around the campus for years.

Stories of riot and mayhem at the football classics were prevalent. Annual feuds, amusingly referred to as "Scraps" dealt crushing blows to the Engineering School's prestige. Young "ruffians" were clubbed into the pavement by police for the heinous business of strewing the taxpayers garbage up and down Yonge St.

Questions in the three-a-week publication ranged in quite as large a dimension as they try to do now. Issues were of vital importance: Gowns, Yes or No; little cloud of dust . . .

Why is that turnstile still operating beside Knox College?

It is both amusing and pathetic to share with the "thinkers" their views of the impending war: "the aeroplane in war! Its career must be ephemeral, for novelty is, at best, a flimsy support. As for war—we are now beginning to get a vision of a warless world . . . let us hope that the aeroplane will soon outlive its usefulness . . . Oct., 1911."

The transition between this sort of thinking and the realization of what was to be reality was gradual and tedious.

Offence was still taken at the "Foul air of the poorly ventilated lecture rooms of U.C. as well as the negated void men call its spirit." In truly commendable fashion the student body stood behind its president, through the Voice of the Campus, against the attack of two influential Toronto papers. And won.

But the war left its strange mark. A returned McGill man struck a new note when the daily published this: ". . . but the bullets . . . the machine guns, making a sonorous web of sound. One would think that their trajectory made a solid mass, vibrating, stretching out, above there. Zip . . . the clumsy ones that bound here and there and ricochet past . . . and the ones that fall too short, and tap into the ground in front of you, in a little cloud of dust . . ."

Nude, Co-Education and Malthusianism Roaring Twenties Brought Everything In 1920-1930:

Looking back, our parents perhaps overestimate the Jazz Era for us. It was a release from ten years of world tension—yet with its frivolity and its insanity, there was some seriousness, and a lot of interest in self.

"Clad only in academic gown, one member of the Trinity College Literary Institute entered the common room in which the society was debating the question, resolved 'that absurdity is the spice of life'. His claim that the rules which forbid academic nakedness or appearance in the House without a gown did not apply to any other kind of nakedness was disallowed by the speaker, and the offender was thrown out of the house by the Sergeant-at-arms, and the freshmen.

Such was the spirit of the age. At first, while veterans crowded the University, it was international. Reports on conscription, Belgian politics, and the influx of communism into Canada fill the front pages of The Varsity. Gradually, the discussions turn to Canadian issues; the new crop of youngsters brought with them relativism, anti- and pro-Malthusianism, and evolution, but ended up discussing Canadian politics.

Co-education was still an argument in the twenties. Students fought fiercely over women's right to smoke (If she did, she could only be compared to a drunk staggering up Yonge Street), to pet, to enter Hart House, and to join campus clubs.

With the newer—and larger—university, The Varsity switched from tri-weekly to daily publication. Champus Cat started its (no, her) long career, the flapper was officially recognized on campus, and cars and liquor became problems.

In 1929, skirts went down. So did the stock-market. It had little effect on U of T students, however—a Vic girl disappeared that year. The Varsity had its annual staff tea, someone decided that car riding was harmless to student activity, and the yo yo became a university course for relaxation.

The awful days of the depression twenty years ago struck at university life in many ways. The columns of The Varsity reflected student life of this period in the thirties in a manner differing from that of any other time. World conditions were so upset, and in such a turmoil, that they were reported daily. The CCF made its appearance, first as an entry into the Canadian scene, then, more specifically, into student government and politics.

These were the days of pacifism. A questionnaire found that a majority of students would not support their own government in any war it might undertake.

Students were short of money, and so attended University functions in great numbers. It was not uncommon for three and four hundred students to vote at the Hart House debates.

Summer jobs were scarce, and students were constantly worried by rising fees.

Football was the most popular topic, in season, in The Varsity, probably because for financial reasons a inter-collegiate games were popular with students.

Liquor reform, unemployment and the "overcrowding of the professions" raged through the columns of The Varsity, reflecting current student opinion.

As the war approached, the attitude towards conflict gradually changed, as students began to realise that the world situation was no joke, was not merely something for theorists to put right, but was a deadly reality.

1939 arrived, and these same students who had clamored for pacifism flocked to join the services, forgetting their ideological arguments to do their duty.

Modern Age

Students - Apathy And Conformity

By KEITH SPICER

1950-1955:

And how do we, the moderns, compare with the thousands who have gone before? Do students of to-day think the same thoughts and feel the same emotions as did the pioneers of the nineteenth century?

Undoubtedly, academic problems are similar, professors are still good or 'incompetent,' and exam-time still means frantic cramming and perpetually imminent nervous breakdowns. 'Sparking' is only renamed 'hustling,' while the picture of man's search for knowledge and woman's search for man persists as an ancient and hallowed tradition of college life. Briefly, at least the shell of the past remains.

But there is a major change, or rather a universal one, which results from the fact that the mechanization and streamlining of our age have given us fantastically greater opportunity to be materialistic, and have succeeded in transplanting the mass production methods of mid-twentieth century industry to the university campus and classroom. The pulse of our life is surely faster, our moral future often less certain, and the presures more cruelly complicated.

Ours is the epoch which marked the submersion of the individual in the mob or merely expelled him from his "civilized" milieu as an anti-social "queer." We follow those who only lived to build our country and who, without seeking a national conscience, created one; in another seventy-five years, we may be seen as those who only existed to buy ourselves cars and television sets, and who, in a sublimely naive desperation, clutched after every vain symbol of a hypothetical uniform mentality which was to make Canada at last a nation, and lost the proud and confident optimism which it was the "challenging, truly Canadian" conscience of our forebears.

The latter were those who believed enough in their country to erect the gigantic monuments of Confederation and the Canadian Pacific Railway; will we be the ones who lacked the faith in our Dominion to invest in our own natural resources or in the skilled immigrant manpower of friendly notions which alone could help us achieve our destiny?

Probably, for the past trends of subtly enforced conformity will have assassinated the last seeds of personal initiative and of civic responsibility long before the next seventy-five years have elapsed.

Countless are the benefits which new material facilities have brought to the formation of student character and intellect. Recently opened co-ed lounges at Victoria, St. Michael's, Hart House and University College help foster student fellowship at all levels, and an immense new library and several new or modernized academic buildings offer an incalculable improvement in the quality of curricular work available.

But much of the advantage of this progress is cancelled because of the deplorable apathy of the students themselves. Practically every university activity is supported by a small, public-spirited corps d'élite which attains an influence wholly disproportionate to its numerical size; this influence is, of course, entirely merited because of the work, enthusiasm and time the useful few are willing to put into their interest. But student life is only the nebulous ensemble of students' lives and we enjoy it only as much as we permit ourselves.

Veterans' Registrations At U of Toronto Brings Post-War Enrollment Problems

By MARINA HAHN

1945-1950:

The war had ended and from the battlefields of Europe thousands of veterans streamed back to Canada, where some resumed old jobs and duties and others returned to university.

Registration day here in Toronto on the 23 of September 1946 saw an enrollment of almost 16,000 students, double what it had been two years back. Later The Varsity head-lines read "Registration Ends - To Reach 17,000."

Many veterans could only come to college through the assistance of the Post Discharge Re-establishment Order by which university fees were paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs. With all the post-war rush in Ottawa, the DVA didn't come through with this money very quickly. Meanwhile the Student's Administrative Council had to give out temporary emergency loans.

Renovation and remodelling was going on all over the campus. At Ajax, room was created for 2300 engineers.

Married couples had more than their share of difficulties. On the 30th of September 1946, The Varsity announced "Homes found for married couples through appeals over CKEY." But by the middle of October appeals were still being made and we can find numerous references to this subject in The Varsities of that fall.

Finances were still a big problem for vets in spite of the DVA plan. On the 25th of November 1946 the head-lines read "Make Emergency Loans to Vets, Crisis Money Available Where Course Threatened - Must Finish First Year."

The veterans were a steady influence on the University; when they came to college, they came with the will to succeed. President Sidney Smith remarked on this and lauded the veterans at the convocation in September.

Many of these vets wanted to get a basic education without much specialization and with this idea in mind, it was announced on the 10th of October '46 that "Vets allowed to substitute English for language option"

Such an unusual abundance of males on campus had a very direct effect on the women of the University. All of a sudden, between the '47 and '48 terms we find that girls have discarded the short-skirted, big-shouldered outfits of the war period and are now wearing clothes along easier, better-proportioned lines.

The Varsity published a feature headed "Influx of War Veterans Cheer Co-eds" in which it was made quite clear that the lucky girls now had absolutely nothing to worry about on Saturday nights.

University War Effort Is Varied 1939 Spurs Students To Help

By KARLEEN SCOTT

1939-1945:

Students came back to the University of Toronto in the autumn of 1939 with the knowledge that their country was at war.

In his opening address Pres. J. C. Cody advised them on their conduct in that time of crisis, saying that "Something like the reign of Anti-Christ has come over a large part of Europe." He told students that one day they might have to make a sacrifice either "for a great cause or for their country," and exhorted them to keep themselves fit so that the sacrifice would not be lessened by offering a maimed body.

A War Advisory Board was set up for the purpose of advising students of the best way in which they could render service to their country. By October 1,000 men had enrolled in the University of Toronto COTC.

Mrs. Cody, wife of the president of the University, held a war-work meeting of all the Varsity women to draw up plans for the formation of a committee representing the University women, in order to co-ordinate the war-time service.

A Link Trainer, called "The Jeep," was housed in SFS, Pat Howard, at that time at SFS, was the only instructor qualified to teach training through use of the Link Trainer, and the Trainer itself was only the fourth in the Dominion.

On November 30, 1939, the Second World War hit home at the University of Toronto. The first casualty was Pilot Officer B. T. Maher, 3T9, who was killed in a bomber crash at Trenton.

Arts students were asked to contribute blood to provide the overseas forces with a blood serum, and a Student Refugee Relief Committee was set up.

Part of the NFOCUS budget was devoted to sending socks, cigarettes and other gifts to the students at the front. The girls from the School of Nursing relaxed from their work on Tuesday nights and knitted socks.

By 1940 all physically fit males, 18 or over (4,000 of them), were required to take military training with the COTC contingent. In October of the same year 170 women held a drill on the Trinity back campus.

In 1941 third and fourth year skulemen were freed from courses and exams early for urgent work in munitions.

The University gave free extension courses to ex-service men and women in 1944, and Canadian prisoners of war in Germany were taking correspondence courses that reached them via Switzerland.

In his opening speech to the students of the University in 1945, the new President, Sidney Smith, welcomed all the ex-service men and women. He told them that they would not be dealt with as an unusual group who should be set apart, but as "young Canadians, well-trained, experienced, and mature, and who are anxious to recapture the years spent in a noble cause."

All Night Job

This is a portion of a message from a former VARSITY editor (1927-28), now Director, Historical Section, Canadian Army.

I have just worked it out. It is twenty-eight years since I was Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, and the discovery is rather appalling. But the fact may as well be faced.

Old men forget, but I have been assisting my aged memory by leafing over the pages of "my volume" of the paper. This has reminded me of quite a number of "fights" which seemed very important at the time. Early in the year, for instance, we broke a lance with a publication called The Students' Handbook, whose editor that year had chosen to sandwich in little religious aphorisms and bits of good moral advice.

We ventured to suggest that this was impudent to his readers, and bad taste as well. This of course brought down upon us the thunders of the unco' guid, who accused us of being foes of religion.

To assist us with our problems we had Faculty Advisers. The first time we consulted them we were a bit taken aback to discover that the best advice they had to offer was to abolish the paper.

In those times the paper was printed at the University Press, where I remember spending unnumbered nights. I am astonished to think how often I got home at four or five in the morning, and nevertheless managed to be on deck, more or less awake, for a nine o'clock lecture. What is more, I managed to graduate—the one achievement which rendered me distinguished among the editors of that period.

As for The Varsity, I persist in thinking that a university paper makes a useful contribution to university life in Canada, at any rate. To this one I offer my best wishes for much prosperity in its second seventy-five years.

Congratulations to . . .

Lovely Laura Bids Farewell On To China With Husband

Dear Betty:
This is absolutely the last letter I will write you for years and years—that is with a Canadian stamp on the upper right hand corner, I'm really and truly married and I'm on my way to China. Isn't that simply wonderful? So unique! It was all so sudden that I can't realize that it is what it is now.

And I've married the only man I ever truly and really cared for in all my career. You remember Gid, who was the theologian that took me places and was six feet tall last year.

Well I'm Mrs. Gid.

It was standing at the corner of Yonge and Adelaide, when my husband that was before he was my husband came up and said "Laura Louise," and I said "Oh Gid!" so expressively and he said let's have a cup of tea somewhere and I said yes and we did and then before he had finished the soup course and had just started to eat an olive he said "Laura Louise, my Laura Louise," I'm going to China will you go with me and I said that's what I've been waiting for all my life and then he kissed me as the waiter was bringing us the fish and I kissed him. It was wonderful.

Then we got a beautiful engagement ring, a simply adorable one and he went to the Parliament Bldgs. and got a special license and I phoned home and Pappa and Mamma came down with their blessing and with a wonderful big cheque and we were so happy together and we all got married and caught the night train for the Orient and I am going to spend my honeymoon with Gid after all. Isn't that simply the most romantic thing that you ever heard of anywhere. I'm thrilled to bits.

So for the last time

Your dearest friend

Laura Louise
P.S. I suppose I should have signed myself with my new name, but I forgot and will you send out to me that pink chiffon dress with the spangles. I may need it at some of the Manderin parties.

'Remedial Sex' Compulsory SAC Finances Field Work

This article is reprinted from the Gag Issue of 1952

March 5, 1952

"Remedial Sex" (Social Relations 1d) will be compulsory for all first year General Course students next year, President Sidney Smith announced last night. Honor Course, Professional, Graduate, and second, third and fourth year students will not be required to take the course if they can satisfy the Dean of Sex, Professor Woodhouse, of their practical and theoretical knowledge of the subject.

This announcement climaxes a long debate on administration, faculty, and student levels. The controversy started in January with the Publication of the President's Report.

In his report, Dr. Smith said: "We must make continuous efforts to ensure that the students whom we admit to the University are qualified for university life by their training in secondary schools. The standards have been strengthened in the interests of more selective and more fruitful co-operative effort of staff and students.

"I repeat what I have said and written on many previous occasions it is no kindness to admit to a university young men and women who are not equipped by nature and prepared by schooling for advanced study. Failure involves a sense of frustration and a weakening of confidence, ambition and aspiration.

"The Department of Sex at University College recently gave a simple examination to students in all three years of the pass Course who had elected Social Relations as one of their subjects. The examination was designed to test the students' knowledge of punctuation, range and ability. The results were, to the highest degree, alarming. The failure rate was 60%.

"Another factor — teaching methods—may have some bearing on the subject. A lecture is a personal relation; the mind of the lecturer must be in rapport with that of his audience, and this can only come from the spontaneity of immediate thinking, done on the platform; the more genuinely impromptu the better. The "live" lecture is, of course, a great strain on the teacher.

"I have no great faith that teaching in technique will provide a magic cure. The saving virtues must be scholarship and a passion for the subject... but we should not blind ourselves to the possibility of change or adaptation."

In an interview after the announcement was made public, Dr. Smith said:

"I have seen scores of boys and girls come from high school showing great promise and full of ambition. After failing in the practical applications of this subject, they... lose their sense of confidence and are frustrated to the point of being scared."

Dr. Woodhouse said that his department was startled by the results of the test. He stressed that there was no hostility or cruelty intended in the examinations.

A Varsity editorial commented, "The Sex Department of this University might do society a great service if it set itself to look a little more deeply into the problem. Entirely apart from being a fascinating study which would lead into devious and unusual fields, it would probably lead to more useful approaches to the problem of teaching our young to use a tool which they seem to appreciate less and less."

Gloria Swivelhops of St. Stephen's College commented: "Well, it's about time someone taught the men around this university the facts of life. My loyalty to Varsity has kept me broke all year."

Miss "Jiggity-Jig" Streit, who was disqualified from the competition for "Queen of Arts" in 1922 on grounds of professionalism, announced that she has been approached by Dr. Woodhouse to take the post of demonstrator in the newly expanded department.

Warden Ignition-off pointed out that Hart House is not supposed to be used for study, and that the expansion of the Sex Department would not be used as an excuse to bring more women into the House.

It is understood that the revised course will consist of two hours a week of lectures on theory, a three-hour lab on practical applications, and an unspecified amount of field work. The SAC has offered to help finance the field work, feeling that it might put an impossible strain on student budgets. As SAC president Syd Wasserman put it, "We want our students to have nothing but the best."

Skule Note

All courses in Engineering have been extended to a compulsory six years, it was announced last night by Dean Sachell as he looked out from under the table in the local beverage room.

"Our students cannot find jobs when they graduate so we have decided to keep them in school for another couple of years," commented the Dean over a mug of beer.

"Engineering is a lousy job anyway," he said.

Libel, Once A Year

In the early days of its existence, when skirts were high and jazz was born, about the only thing more notorious and enjoyable than either, was the Jazz issue of The Varsity. Born in the early twenties of a staff shed of all "responsibility," and an absentee editor, its existence was precarious from the very first year. Since no one would claim the bastard child, it was banned even before the day of publication.

And so it went for 13 peaceful, slanderous years. GOVERNOR BAMS THE JAZZ ISSUE" headlined the 1934 Jazz issue proudly. Then it proceeded to justify this illegality by jazzing the governors, student opinion, the powers that be, the powers that were, and itself. (Man The Pumps!!!)

The humour edition succeeded in getting into more official trouble than any other publication which did not even officially exist. It was banned in 1927, brought up again in 1941, banned in 1952, revived next year, under a new name, the Gag issue. A copy of the 1952 criminal is nowhere in the files, as the editors were "suspended by the SAC, and the final issue of the year put out directly by the Council.

Perhaps this is the reason all Jazz (Gag) issues appear so late in the Varsity year. Whether there will be one this year, the editors won't tell (they're scared). But don't be too surprised if your glum progress to a morning lecture is interrupted by a headline which tells you in front page exaltation:

"Remedial Sex Compulsory" — Smith.

Oh Yeah!

Bennett's A Heel At Debate

1934

"Bennett is nerfs," gleefully shouted H. J. Hoveniefenflinger, leader of the affirmative, speaking on the subject, "That this house disapproves of tariffs being high when skirts and bass-singers are so low," at the annual Hart House debate last night, held in the upper right hand corner of the third squash court, reading from left to right. "Furthermore democracy is dead and we must stamp it out with an iron heel"

"Bennett's a heel," brilliantly heckled a heckler in the audience, but the speaker wittily answered "Oh yeah!" and the heckler was thoroughly abashed.

"Mr. Speaker sir," brilliantly led off N. F. S. Smith, leader of the opposition, vigorously blowing his nose, "I believe sir, that light wines and beers are as inevitable as light wine and beers. They just are. Ask any four men on the street for a ten cent piece and they will tell you of the high tariffs. Sirs, it is all a vicious circle and the opposition heartily vicious we were out of it."

At this juncture, the debate had to be stopped while the guest speaker, Mr. Zilch, first vice-president of the punny-anti-war Society was carried out, having been overcome with tears after the heart-tearing remarks of the last speaker.

"Free love is very expensive," declared K. N. Schultz, the second leader of the government and the first leader to speak on the subject. "Love is a funny thing. Ask a man who owns one."

After this most interesting and self-explanatory account of the situation, half the audience and two other guys left the room to don squash uniforms as this was a very formal debate.

Maude Mulligan

1952

Maude Mulligan is a fighting woman of the old-fashioned school... President Oglethorpe P. Pussycrout saw this apparition and was sure that at last he had found a child of nature.

Maude Herself

Maude Mulligan re-emerged... But fate had bigger things in store for Maude Mulligan. In 1933 she started the first salesmanship course for co-eds...

Besides picking up a lot of lost wallets, wrist watches, and loose change, the girls of St. Stephen's left these lectures feeling wealthier in having met an influence which would direct their feelings all their lives.

In 1948 she was made Dean of Women at St. Stephen's because of her outstanding personality, endearing charms, and because the president, bursar, and senior tutor could not afford to see her go.

'Old Mull' as she is called by the girls, believes that every co-ed should leave college with a good foundation under her. She teaches that every girl should feel free to purpose the sin which interests her most.

'Some of these mamby-pamby little prudes are actually scared of liquor, and men' she commented 'It is our job at college to pound these fundamentals into their ruddy heads.'

Her book 'For College Women And Others In Trouble' was a best seller until someone put a picture of Dean Mulligan on the cover.

No girl has ever been expelled from St. Stephen's while Miss Mulligan has been dean. She told this reporter, with a leer in her voice and a beer on her breath, that she believed in 'live and let live.'

Next year 'Old Mull' will retire, or as she puts it 'be ready for retreading.'

No longer will her army boots tramp down Philosopher's Walk. Her cheerful 'top of the morning to you, old cock' will be gone. The janitors will miss her, the postman will miss her, the ice-man will most likely freeze. Household Finance will seek her whereabouts, and then of course there are her Queen's Park friends, the squirrels.

Farewell Miss Mulligan. Veni, fidi, fugi.

To Pet Or Not To Pet

Following is a reprint of an editorial — "TO PET OR NOT TO PET" that eventually led to the suspension of Editor L. J. Ryan in 1929.

January 22, 1929

Last week a prominent middle-aged clergyman told his hearers in gentle tones and with irrefutable logic that petting was dangerous and should not be practised. The divine claimed that petting was a new institution, that it exacted gestures, intended only for the larger intimacies, and that it debased the coinage of the soul.

In the light of our close connection with the younger generation who are thus accused of debasing their souls, we should like to attempt an explanation of our generation and of its actions.

In the first place we admit that although petting is a new institution it is a widely accepted one. We venture to say, of those who have had opportunities for experimentation in the field, almost no one can deny knowledge of the art.

We shall go further and say that most of the so-called conscientious objectors are such because they have had no occasion to be otherwise, and that other objectors do not pet simply because it does not appeal to them as diversion — not because they have any moral scruples.

In fact petting as an institution has come to be recognized by all who are not wilfully blind to existing conditions.

We confess that we cannot see in this situation any great cause for alarm . . . The pathetic cry of the traditionalist is bound to remain unheard for youth will go on . . . clinging to all the aspects of its new freedom. Just as standards of all kinds have changed, the standards of morality have also changed, and whatever may be the attitude of parents on the subject of petting, for those who indulge in it the question of morality does not enter in it at all. To them it is simply an exchange of amenities.

in some cases quite casual, which makes no difference when the "grand passion" is experienced. Whether the reverend gentleman was right in his contention that such conduct "debases the coinage of the soul" we shall not say, but we hesitate to believe that the soul traffics in kisses, or that a few of such, casually exchanged, are going to have any permanent or devastating effect upon character.

PHOOEY!

A surprise development in the case of libel now resting in the gaunt lap of The Varsity was revealed early this morning when the Clerk of the Zoot Court of the Law Club of the University staggered out of an in camera session of the Court with the following announcement:

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye!"
 "Be it now made public that as of the present date publication of the column known as the Champus Cat in The Varsity, the Undergraduate Newspaper, will cease. Mr. Justice I. Thought has passed down this ruling in view of recent libelous statements made in the said column about certain well-known personalities of the campus. God Save the King."

Inquiries here and around the environs of the University made by an astute and enterprising reporter revealed some startling reactions to the arbitrary edict:

"A snap to that Philwistler McShacklesrapper!" chorused the members of the Zoot Court as they dragged on illicit cigarettes in the hall of the Law Building.

"May they all wake up one morning and find lumps in their porridge," said the Editor-in-Chief of the Varsity. "If they eat porridge, and I doubt that they do."

Said a well-known University President, "At last, they can't spell my name wrong again over."

"Said the Feature Editor of The Varsity, controlling a violent twitch, "I alltime know more people read the Cat in place of the editorials. Personally, and speaking for myself, I think they are just a bunch of rooty-toot Zoot Court sharpies that are trying to make a lotta trouble. But don't quote me, mind you."

Education

Learning that Canadian universities are lowering their age entrance requirements as a desperate effort to oust its Selective Service officer Arthur Backtomorra's snatch-and-grab methods, those two internationally-acclaimed Sociology experts, Messrs Wood and Razbyr, herewith present their questionnaire for two-year-old freshmen.

The questionnaire, testing individual Intelligence quotients, has been fully endorsed by President Kidney Myth, and is expected to be employed at the beginning of next term:

- 1) Who are you and why are you coming to college?
- 2) Sum up in one phrase the raison d'être of James Joyce's Ulysses. Who was Ulysses? Who was James Joyce? What does raison d'être mean?
- 3) Sum up in one word your first reaction to the Warden.
- 4) Underline one of the two following words whose meaning is most closely associated with Whitney Hall.

- 5) Which of the following words are most closely related:
 a) The Globe and Mail b) Tim Buck c) Buck Rogers d) the Hart House Barber.

- 6) Do you read editorials in the Toronto Evening Telegram? Or do you read the comic strips in the Toronto Evening Telegram? Which do you find most stimulating?

The Varsity has muddled along without an editor, without talent, without news, without a Sports page, and even without chess columns. The one thing which has been consistent, immutable, throughout its seventy-five years of steady decline, has been the misprint. The typographical error has often been the only source of true humour in the paper. Nothing, then, could be more poetically just than to preface all official attempts at Varsity humour with a misprint, such as, for instance; "CHAMPUS CAT."

The Cat began its bridled career in October, 1922 as a column devoted to chat about Campus. Soon noticing the Spooneristic Caption above it, however, it resigned itself to the role of Cat-about-Campus, and its feline nature has become more cattily apparent ever since. By the end of 1922, the Cat consisted mainly of jokes, most of which reappear

7) Are you ever stimulated?

8) What did you do when you passed the co-eds lounging in the University College Rotunda? (remember, all answers are strictly confidential).

9) What do you think of the Polish situation? The Greek situation? The beer-storage situation?
 10) Do you know the facts of life? (Enumerate them in the space on the back of this sheet. Be precise. Be careful.)

11) Write a full treatise on the meaning of the three dots to be found at the end of each line of poetry in Acta Victoriana. (Write a treatise explaining the significance of each dot.)

12) Estimate after full consideration the possible date when the Undergraduate Magazine will be published.

13) Philosophy and Mathematics quiz: If two walnuts were eaten in their entirety twice daily by two elephants with white-washed tusks at the rate of 50 per hour, and if a lonely man were to razor off the tip of each nose from each co-ed eating at Mac's at the rate of one nose per minute, and if each tusk were to be adjoined to the remaining end of the nose there-mentioned and if Mac's were to be whitewashed with the white-wash from the elephants' tusks heretofore mentioned, would mankind thus discover its true hedonistic end?

14) Describe in your own words your own hedonistic end. (Be precise. Be careful).

15) Do you remember the words of Mairzy Doats?

16) Describe the raison d'être of Mairzy Doats.

17) Have you ever been curious as to what is hidden in the cannon in front of SPS?

Cat Has Long Tale

frequently in Cats of the present day.

As often as the Cat has promised to die a natural and merciful death, something or someone has always happened to give it new life and cathood. It has had its halcyon days, when every day brought forth a noble chance, and every chance brought forth a noble cat. It has had lean years, when the cat cut has smiled wanly and sporadically over the solemnest of champus trivia. But the Cat has survived, and flourished, and shall again. Even today young Waynes, small Schusters, embryo Mordecai the Midgets, are struggling toward University, and the expansive leisure which can be dissipated only in new, greater, more clawed and laughable cats.

Cat-people, the weird and rarely seen tribe of mutants and monsters who have been, at divers times, Boswells of the cat, taking down its hideous meowlings, and sending them into more hideous English, have ever hidden their identity (what there was of it) under resounding pseudonyms. The practice has stemmed from an overwhelming modesty, and from an admirable reluctance to get their teeth kicked in.

Who were Mordecai the Midget, The Raven and Lenore, Umlauf Wiregarters, Mack the Knife, George Bernard Shot, Jotay, Panurge, Cowperthwaite D'umbell, Rasputin, and the rest of the golden-eyed horde of catmen of the past? We do not know. They may be kings, priests, garbage collectors, deep sea divers, or Sam-lami labellers. They may really be cats. We do not know.

The Cad Meets Benny

It happened as I was padding slowly along Philosophers' Walk in the early hours of a morning last week, pondering, with silent, stoic heroism, the sad and thankless lot that is mine. For I am the Campus Cad, feline royalty fallen on unhappy times, reduced from the former eminence of my black-alley dominion to miserable servitude for insipid females who would think their University careers incomplete if they had no tropy fur to stroke. In the torments of revolt against this prostitution of my superlative gifts, I had set out, according to my custom, on my daily constitutional through the Walk, cocking an ear, as I went to the sounds wafted me on the evening breeze, sighs from the hill, moans from the gully and giggles of giddy anticipation from couples departing the path, seeking privacy in out of the way shookeys and exannies. Love, I was thinking to myself, is a beautiful thing! This, on my part, was really a very charitable attitude, since it was Love, and my excessive preoccupation with it, that had caused my fall from grace. But I bore my pain in silence, nobly, as befits a cad.

And then I was falling. Traipsing carelessly with my eyes on the shadows I had stumbled over an open rat-hole, falling headlong therein. After rather a long drop, ending in a momentous smash, I rolled gingerly over onto all fours, peered about me into the void, only to find that the fall had somehow jarred the glow-mechanism of my eyes rendering me utterly sightless in the dark. Trusting to luck I struck out in the general direction of my nose, following the passageway until I was certain that it led to No Exit, whereupon I retraced my steps whence they had come.

Far off I spied a glow, a light, a hope. I hastened toward it. But the hand-kitten of haste is carelessness and, bounding eagerly toward the light, I plunged heavily into a lumpy mass scant inches from said aperture of glow.

It rumbled, it heaved, and from it, in a fury of bestial growling, came incoherent spewings of sound calculated to terrify, to petrify, but, most of all, to keep you in Suspense.

"You are being maybe an emissary from my old pal Manny the Latke, who is being so-called because of his face, which looks like an overdose pancake and who sells Marijuana "dream-puffs" at the side door of the Little Reds' Ghoul House. Or maybe it is a snivelly little spy who is sneaking down here to dig up some dirt on old Benny, who is one laddie who never does a wrong thing in his life except maybe to bet on his own sweet Blues when they meet the Gilded Scotties from Queenie U for the Yates Cup in '56, which they do not win in spite of my infallible calls of the inevitable outcome. And maybe you are neither of these things but only one of the "boys" from the Walk upstairs, who comes here looking for "adventure of a new and different kind" which is not what you are getting, as I am neither a girl-scout, nor "similarly inclined," which is why I am advising you to clear out while I am leaving you the legs to do it with."

The 'thing,' whatever it was, seemed to have vaguely human characteristics, the sounds it made approximating, in some respects, language and, as its fury mounted, the glow intensified illuminating the features around it. It was then I realized what Rich Kalinowski meant when he used the term "subarachnoid exudate." This thing before me was, to put it charitably, one hell of a mess. The glow came from a single cyclopan optic which swelled well out of its socket, spreading expansively over the bridge of a curly old nose, down over one cheek and poking up into the matting of old spider-webs that served triply as eyelashes, brows and hair, while behind this exquisite facade, mounted securely in a depression of the skull, sat a 12-volt storage battery, connected by 10 inch cables to the glowing crystal ball that was the creature's eye. In the dim light I suddenly realized who, or what, it was that confronted me, for, in place of the second-eye there was only a sinister black patch, stitched over with the label of a Hathaway shirt.

"I beg your pardon, sir," I stammered in awe at the presence of this great man. Looking more closely at him I could see that though he may have looked terrible he walked in beauty and there it was, on the floor all about him, in some places piled knee-high, big beautiful stacks of that long green of which I am habitually short. And he was trundling blissfully through it with that disinterested scorn typical of only the truly great. "I had no idea I was trespassing on private property. It was all an accident."

"Which," countered he of the One Eye, "is making things just dandy as now I do not have to worry about making it all look like an accident when I am putting the slug on you which is a necessary thing as I do not wish the world at large to know of my wearabouts, which are all being one deep dark secret."

I sensed immediately that I had scored an impression for the glow sputtered sadly once or twice before he answered.

"Once upon a time, Cad, when I am starting out, I am being a very idealistic book, one who does not take bets which he cannot cover, who is paying off promptly every time he loses, which is never as I am being young and having a sure hand which controls the inevitable fates with never a bobble so that I am always making the right calls. But, now, I am growing old and I become a teeny bit senyion so that I make the odd error or two which is not so terrible as no one bets against me and I do not lose any of the capital which I am building up over the seventy-five years I work this campus. Only once I am dipping into my great reserves and this is for the final game against Queenie U which I call for my own dear Blues who never before fail me and so I believe that the fix is in and that my fellows cannot miss which is what they do so that I am left only with losses to pay out. As I am figuring out what I have left

Twilight of A Managing Editor

"Come in!" said the Editor-in-Chief as a timid knock and consumptive spasm of coughing at the resplendent door of his inner sanctum betokened the presence of the Managing Editor. Through the opening doorway the unfortunate one stumbled, tripping on a misplaced telephone wire and precipitating himself headfirst into a corner, where he lay whimpering gently to himself.

"Y-You sent for me, Sir?" blurted the visitor servilely, finding his feet.

"Yes, I sent for you. I am informed that you are going quite blind."

"In the service of journalism, yes, I have already gone quite blind, Sir," the Managing Editor croaked, throwing his shoulders well back, so that his shoulder-blades came together with a sharp click under his ragged coat.

"That being the case," the Editor-in-Chief said brusquely.

"I have found it advisable to take steps for your replacement. As from a week ago today, your services are no longer required. You can collect your cheque of two weeks' pay any time after December 28. That was all I wished to see you about."

Then the Editor-in-Chief softened visibly toward his lifelong co-worker and right-hand man, and genuine warmth flooded his voice as he added "Good-day!" before turning back to his work.

"I—uh . . ." said the Managing Editor, wringing his hands and cringing plaintively.

"Well?" said the Editor-in-Chief, pausing in his work, but without turning round.

"I—I'm sorry I went blind Sir. You do understand that, don't you?"

"Hm . . . yes, regrettable, but if I do this terrible thing, I am realizing that it leaves me only enough kopeks for a last meal and a cab to Taddle Creek where I decide I will drown my pitiful self. But it is at this point that all my principles are flying out the window which is maybe caused by the fact that I get old and do not care anymore for principles in the way that I do when I am being young and full with viggor, which is the stuff that keeps me in the green for so long. Suddenly I decide I am turning weicher and I am not paying off on my losses, which is why I make haste to disappear before any of my trusting fish are recovering from the weekend's labours and come after me for their shekels which they do not get after all. Which, in nuts shell is why you find me here away from the madding crowd where nobody nabs me for their dollars."

Immediately I decided that such a felon must be brought to justice and so, in my own inimitable feline manner, I put the matter to him. He sighed, he heaved, he rumbled, but he scooped up a wad from the floor, counted off what I had demanded and, in tones of admiration "You are being almost as big a crook as myself which is quite a ways as most hoods do not have such far reaching talents." The One Eye continued his patter, offering me anything, even a partnership if only I would help him to disseminate his information and inevitable calls among the campus quillblades, since he, in his self-imposed hermitage could never again venture among men, unless he paid up. Which is why I am no longer padding softly over the path but now I ride very elegantly in a chrome-plated new Pumpkin with tortilla bar suspension and a 12 mouse-power engine while the adoring co-eds, the same ones who once stroked my coat in condescending manner, gape awe-struck at me in my coach with my big cigar and black patch.

not entirely your fault," the Chief said, tolerantly. "All Managing Editors go blind. As a matter of fact, you lasted rather better than average. Let me see, it was almost ten days you were with us, wasn't it?"

"Two and a half weeks, Sir," was the proud reply.

"I was discounting the time since you went blind, of course," said the Chief, adding, as if to himself, "if only they wouldn't try to keep it from you, when they go blind . . ."

"Not only that," said the Managing Editor, apparently quite unabashed by the rebuke, "but I was everything a Managing Editor ought to be." He croaked reminiscently: "Mean . . . yes, and with the nastiest temper you ever saw. My, how, I bullied them . . ." and with a cackle of raucous laughter which brought on his cough again, he tumbled to the floor, disconnecting his wooden leg and spewing decayed teeth onto the floor of the sanctum.

"How I scourged them! How I tortured them!" he screamed from his crumpled position. . . . the night I sent little Eva out into the snow to rewrite her story . . ."

"Enough of your damned sentiment!" screamed the Chief as he scooped the rotten dentures from the sanctum floor and showered them upon the departing pieces of the form, he was booting from the office. "I'm a very busy man."

"Good day to you, Sir," the Managing Editor said, hastily pulling himself together. And he huddled under the tattered collar of his overcoat as he croaked out rheumatically into the chilling October winds.

The Undergraduate Newspaper

MOVES WITH THE TIMES

Varsity Changes Dress Progresses With Years

By ROGER MacQUEEN

The 'Varsity—a Weekly Review of Education, University Politics, And Events—reads the "flag" (the name of the paper at the top of page one) of the first Varsity (1880, Volume 1, Number 1). Conservatism was the keynote in the makeup or page layout of the early issues—long cumbersome stories with such snappy at a separate paper (and therefore away from each other), and featured a table of contents. These early issues had no illustrations other than a few engravings—hideous by modern standards. Layout was generally based on a two-column system for each page (pages being roughly the size of today's Liberty headings as "The International Fishery Exhibition in Berlin" or "The Professions, Particularly the Legal."

The first issue featured a rather oriental looking front page (see picture) A few issues after that, The Varsity switched to a distinctive cover somewhat along the same lines as the old Punch. The cover consisted of a rather gaudy engraving of two students—one male, one female—each looking magazine) with none of the colour of blazing headlines leaping out to draw the eye to a "hot" story. Advertisements of the gay nineties feature the picturesque types seen in any current Hollywood western Early 1900 issues were twenty page efforts, still appearing only once a week.

However 1907's Christmas Issue featured a real innovation—a four-colour cover—composed of

The Second Cover, November 12, 1880

The Varsity in red lettering bordered by gold banding, and "Xmas 1907" in green lettering with gold banding. Light black engraving outlined a cook, dressed in red and green, holding a turkey in one hand and a plum pudding in the other.

By 1915, in the midst of the turbulent World War I years, The Varsity had four page issues and was published three times a week. The pages were much larger than those of the issues near the turn of the century, containing five columns of news, features, sports, etc.—still portrayed conservatively by today's standards. Photography invaded the pages of The Varsity in this period, with the first pics small and dark—mainly head cuts and campus scenes. The front cover with its index had been done away with, replaced by a page of current news, headed by a new flag—"The Varsity" in bold vigorous type with the words "The Undergraduate Newspaper" directly below (see engraving, top of this page). But never, no never, would such words as sex, hell, etc. appear in any headline, although they might sneak into the odd story or two.

Banner headlines—these going all the way across the page—appeared in the twenties. A limitation of type from which to select head lines led to a lack of variation which made for monotonous reading. Cartoons appeared in number for the first time during the twenties. Six column pages now made up the paper—sometimes with single column headlines all the way across.

The thirties saw the disappearance of most of this conservatism with the advent of headlines such as "Educated Female Mates Logically" across two columns with an underheadline of "College Woman Has Advantage In Mental Control Of Sex."

The Varsity became a daily in the late twenties

World War 2 news took up a great deal of the paper during the forties—inspirational messages and patriotic pledges, followed by report after report of those who had given the supreme sacrifice—bordered in black. The paper remained a daily, in spite of the lack of funds, and difficulty of printing (see some of the past editors' reminiscences). Overall quality was improving steadily through these years, making for a clear cut publication.

Today The Varsity has changed to a modified tabloid form of make-up, but the desired goal is still the same—an easily-readable, smartly designed campus newspaper—that will be a source of pride both to those who read it and those who produce it.

This appeared in The Varsity of Oct. 25, 1884, to explain dropping of the front cover design (lower left corner) which had appeared on The Varsity front page every issue for years.

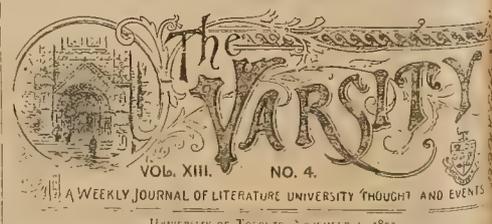

Our subscribers will, no doubt be surprised at the change "the 'Varsity's elaborate board." The friendly couple, have stood so long with monumental patience length wandered off and are no more. They have been with some four years; can it be they have graduated and, in the hand, have departed from the sacred precincts? Faithful they to us; yea, and when they ran short, even dear, for we they were always on hand to up a page. Yet, let us not get with too great levity, for frontispiece has been associated with our college paper in trials and struggles, and has required a deep meaning to us few can conceive. But the occasion has been a necessity, and we farewell to it with sorrow, even with a tear.

The World Comment

"The Varsity has entered its fifth year. It retains the character with, we think, improvements. First and foremost, the advertisements are numerous, and the 'sign board' improved by the dismissal of ungallant youth and the maiden. There is a pleasing quiet about the leading article, yet conscious of power determined to wield it heartily wish The Varsity perity."

KING CALLS CLASS CUT OVER FIRED PROFESSOR

Then Quits Fight Editor Real Hero

By IAN MONTAGNES

A mass student strike on the Toronto campus sixty years ago struck a blow for freedom of the student press and, incidentally, raised one of Canada's most controversial political figures to early prominence — or shame.

When young William Lyon Mackenzie King called for a general boycott of all lectures at an excited protest meeting in 1895, he was greeted by loud cheers.

Yet a few days later, according to some of his classmates, he had been "sent to Coventry" — ostracized for being among the first to break the strike and attend lectures.

Thus the man who held Canada's prime ministership for more than 20 years was first dubbed by his enemies "The Great Compromiser."

King's leadership — and reported defection — were only part, however, of a turbulent storm which broke over the campus early that year and ended only after the Ontario government appointed a Royal Commission to investigate alleged University mismanagement.

Before it was over, one editor of The Varsity had been forced to resign and his successor had been expelled. A popular professor who took the students' side had been dismissed. The University Council had been attacked for tyranny, hypocrisy, bigotry and nepotism.

And for nearly a week the corridors of University College had been packed with agitated students while professors lectured to empty or near-empty halls.

If King, as some say, was the villain of the piece, the hero was undoubtedly Jim Tucker, a slim fourth-year Arts student with a flair for poetry. As editor of a Varsity which refused to knuckle down and print an apology demanded by the University Council, he became the symbol of student resistance.

The fall of 1894 was a troubled one on the University of Toronto campus.

As classes opened, whispered charges of nepotism filled the air. George M. Wrong, the Chancellor's son-in-law (and later internationally famous as an historian) had just been appointed Professor of English History.

Dissident staff members and downtown papers were quick to pick up the family relationship, connecting it with rumours that it had taken only 15 minutes to choose Wrong for the job from among several applicants.

Tucker listed the charges in an editorial, without judging them either true or false. He asked only that, if false, the University issue a formal denial.

Two weeks later The Varsity again called for an official statement. It was to remain disappointed.

Rumor had it The Varsity had been ordered by authority to change its tack. Tucker laughed at such suggestions, said there had been no attempt to muzzle the paper, nor was one likely.

As if to prove his point, he immediately launched a fierce attack against incompetent faculty members, demanding their dismissal if the University was not to be known as a "Home for the Helpless."

The paper also continued its campaign for increased provincial grants, but took time off to discuss the growth of college spirit and the desirability of holding the James Tucker who was editor of the Varsity 1891-95 during the strike. In later years he was a poet. Tucker refused to let The Varsity editorial opinion be suppressed and by his sense of responsibility to truth and to authority gained the respect and confidence of the students, who paid his tuition at the University of Leland Stanford when he was expelled.

I'm The King of The Castle

A Recent Appointment

He who fails to recognize, or, having recognized, attempts to disguise the fact that the confidence of the students of this University in their instructors is being sapped by the ever-recurring charges of favoritism and political and social consideration in appointments to the faculty, either is blind to the trend of undergraduate opinion, or is afraid to face the truth.

If there has been nothing wrong in the administration of the University's affairs, properly conducted discussion can do no harm.

True, the students of the University have no voice in its management. And, therefore it might seem vain and presumptuous for them to enter upon a discussion which can bear no immediate fruit. However, the future is at least as great a consideration as the present, and where is the future hope of the University if not in the young men who eventually must come to the direction of its affairs?

October 17th, 1894, J. Tucker

'We Sent Billy King To Coventry'

annual conversation in the college building.

When the new term opened in January, Tucker, according to custom, turned the editorship over to another staffer, J. Montgomery.

Before Montgomery was more than settled in the guiding seat, a new crisis arose on the campus. The University Council had banned a meeting of the Political Science Association—just formed that year—at which two prominent laborites were to speak.

Official reason for the cancellation was that neither the Council nor the head of the Political Science Department had been asked to approve of the speakers.

"A decidedly lame reason," retorted The Varsity. It quoted reports that the meeting was really suppressed "because of the unorthodox religious views of the speakers."

This seemed unreasonable, said Montgomery, since "the Council is composed partly of professed Christians, partly of professed sceptics, and partly of those who are assuredly neither one nor the other."

The Council, he declared, should act on "some manifestly honest principle"; its policy "should not be allowed to degenerate into a mere trucking to this or that influence."

Retribution was swift. Montgomery was ordered to appear before President James Loudon. The upshot was an apology which acknowledged the inadvisability of some of the editorial statements, admitted one error in fact—but made no major retraction. Montgomery promised to print it.

He did not reckon, however, with his colleagues on The Varsity staff. Backed by popular student sentiment, they refused to print any apology. To do so, they said, would compromise the principle of free discussion for which they were fighting.

Montgomery's only course was to resign. Tucker was given his old job back.

The next issue of The Varsity—which was then a weekly—apologized for being three days late "owing to the recent serious difficulty."

A short note expressed regret for the one "immaterial" incorrect statement in the previous editorial—that the two laborites, Phillips Thompson and Alfred Jury, had been banned from the campus eight years previously for religious reasons.

Otherwise, the paper remained defiant. "It is needless to point out that this is not an apology," it proclaimed.

President Loudon, warned Tucker, should not consider this a minor matter. Never in campus history had a student meeting been "as large, as enthusiastic and as unanimous" as the one which upheld Montgomery earlier that week.

Because he refused to publish the apology, Tucker was suspended from all lectures indefinitely.

But this did not stop him. Some 200 students gathered to hear Tucker promise to continue the fight even if it meant expulsion.

A petition began circulating, asking the Ontario government to investigate student complaints.

The students also promised to support Tucker at another university, should he be expelled.

To date, the dispute had been between the University Council and the students. Now the faculty entered the fray, with letters in the downtown press.

First appeared a letter from Professor Wrong, upholding the Council stand. Students should be allowed to criticize the administration, he agreed, but with "moderation and respect." The Varsity had met neither qualification.

Tucker replied with a short, polite letter to the daily papers, which had been following the campus dispute closely.

A few days later a lengthy letter appeared on the front page of The Globe—signed by William Dale, Associate Professor of Latin at the University.

Dale agreed that the cancellation of the Political Science Association meeting had been more than a disciplinary measure. He raked up the old charges against Wrong, criticized the teaching ability of the late President Sir Daniel Wilson, and termed many of his colleagues unfit to teach.

There was no action for a week. In the interim, Tucker and seven other students presented the petition for an investigation to Education Minister G. W. Ross. It bore 500 signatures.

On the morning of Feb. 16, word spread that Prof. Dale had been dismissed. Students stood about the corridors, heatedly discussing this treatment of a favorite professor. Few went to classes.

About 11:30 Dale entered the building and was surrounded by a cheering mob, from which he eventually retreated.

That afternoon, as President Loudon lay sick at home, the college was almost deserted. Almost every student—700 of them—had jammed into Wardell's Hall on Spadina Ave.

Grouped in the first three rows of seats were the co-eds of the college. Behind them stood and sat men from every department, among them members of the Classical Association who had already decided to boycott lectures in protest against Dale's dismissal.

Tucker, of course, was among the leaders. Loud applause greeted him when he climbed to the platform to urge concerted action. There were cheers, too, when it was announced that one of Dale's faculty colleagues, F. B. R. Helles, had resigned in protest.

But the most prominent speaker of the day, judging by contemporary reports, was Billy King.

Anyone could see that students were forbidden to criticize the university, cried King angrily. Now the faculty could not state the student case either. All they asked was that their charges be investigated.

He himself, King added, would not graduate at Toronto unless there were an investigation. He would be ashamed of an institution which dismissed a professor for such a cause.

It was King, also, who first called for a general boycott of all lectures until Dale's dismissal had been reconsidered or a Royal Commission granted.

His resolution was seconded by Tom (later Sir Hamar) Greenwood. As a prominent British politician, Greenwood was to return to Toronto in 1938 to receive an honorary degree from this same university.

The motion passed unanimously. The next day was Saturday. There were few lectures scheduled—and for those no one appeared.

On Monday, the corridors of University College were alive with students, but classrooms remained empty. Professors either cancelled their classes or gave token lectures to two or three persons.

The handful who did attend lectures met no opposition from the strikers. Many students spent the strike days in the library or gymnasium.

The second day, a few more people attended lectures—sometimes five or eight would be seen in a classroom.

That day, too, science students were warned they might be barred from the use of labs if they continued to skip lectures. Some co-eds said they had received letters from the President threatening expulsion if they were caught persuading other students to join the strike.

As if to whip up any flagging spirits, The Varsity appeared that morning with a special "Mourning Issue" bordered in black. It carried pictures—rare in college journalism those days—of Dale and Helles, "Heroes of the Day." Tucker's editorial was vitriolic.

"We mourn all high ideals and every glorious hope that toil and self-denial have set up in half a century of hard-earned progress," it declared.

"Here, in this year of grace 1895, we behold the University torn by dissension—rent in twain by the fatuous policy of selfish, small-minded men."

"And the tragic aspect of the matter is that he who would dare to speak out, must be willing to sacrifice himself before the blind hatred of those who are determined to rule though the heavens fall!"

In the final analysis, he predicted, the names of Dale and Helles "will shine forth in letters of brass on the tablets of the heroes, long after the names of other men, temporarily triumphant, are lost in a just and retributive oblivion."

On Wednesday afternoon, the strike was called off. President Loudon offered to meet a student committee to discuss grievances, and after more than three hours of discussion, the students finally agreed.

The next Monday, when the Ontario Legislature convened after its summer holiday, the government promised a Royal Commission study of the University. It was quick to point out, however, that the commission was requested by Dr. Loudon, and was not a result of the strike.

Meanwhile, what of young Mackenzie King? History has always considered him a hero of the movement. Certainly he was one of the students elected at the end of the strike to discuss grievances with the University Council.

Yet according to A. M. Chisholm, another strike leader, he was far from a hero. A novel now living in Windermeere, Chisholm recalls King as the only member of the graduating class who attended lectures during a strike.

For this, he says, King was ostracized as a double-crosser after his stirring speech at the first protest meeting.

"So bitter was the anti-King feeling, adds Chisholm, that a group of University of Toronto graduates rose as a body and left the room when King began to speak at a banquet in Aylmer, Que., shortly after he became Deputy Minister of Labor in 1916.

Tucker's nephew, Rev. Dr. Harding Priest, now General Secretary of the Anglican Board of Religious Education, also supports this recollection. "The family history," he says, "has always been that Mr. King kept entirely aloof from the strike and decided with the constitutional authorities."

Strangely enough Bruce Hutchison makes no reference to the strike in his very favorable biography of King, "The Incredible Canadian."

King, however, was happy to maintain in later life the story of his strike role. Shortly before his death, he reportedly told an acquaintance he had remained a friend of Tucker, and had given Tucker's daughter away in marriage after the former editor died.

But Tucker's daughter insists King was not even at her wedding, and that her step-father, H. R. Blade, gave her away. Now Mrs. Lenore Pratt (of Grand Falls, Nfld.) she doubts that Tucker ever saw King after the Royal Commission finished its investigation.

As for the investigation—it was largely ineffective from the student point of view. Tucker and other student leaders were questioned, but no major recommendations for change were forthcoming.

As he foresaw, Tucker was expelled for his part in the strike. The students kept their pledge and sent him to Leland Stanford University in California, then America's richest college. There he met another young man destined like King to be a head of state; Herbert Hoover, president of the United States when the great depression struck in 1929.

After graduation, Tucker returned to journalism in Canada, first in his native Owen Sound then in Toronto on Saturday Night. Never strong, he became seriously ill three years after coming here, and in 1903 died.

He was buried in Owen Sound on his 32nd birthday.

Trinity Ecclesiastic A Fake Students Completely Fooled

By ANNE FRANKS

Trinity College was taken for a one-term ride in the fall of 1949. In a front page, head line story, The Varsity exposed the scandal of a certain R. P. Peters who lectured in Systematic Theology for a full term without degree or credentials from any university. "The impostor," The Varsity said, "did not hold the Oxford M.A. he had represented himself as possessing."

"Trinity College," said Trinity "severed its connections with Mr. Peters."

Peters had previously assisted Rev. Northcote Burke at Toronto-Christ Church and had reportedly delivered several sermons. Mr. Burke said Peters was sent to him by the bishop.

Trinity engaged Peters in an emergency at the beginning of the year to fill a vacancy "caused by the disappointment in obtaining the scholar originally desired for the post."

University degree or no, it made no difference to Peters' students who said, "He seemed to know his stuff like any other lecturer."

Bouquets to the Past - And Future

This year, The Varsity celebrates its 75th Anniversary. The small, twice-weekly journal of education and opinion has grown into a daily college newspaper, with one of the 20 largest circulations in Ontario. The Varsity has become widely known, and among its alumni it boasts a Prime-Minister, a foremost modern humorist, and many other well-known personalities. On this page we print a message of greeting from His Excellency, the Governor-General who has long been associated with this university. We also print congratulatory messages from the Prime-Minister, The Right Honorable Louis St. Laurent, from The Honorable Paul Martin; and from the President of the University. And from the 50th Anniversary issue of The Varsity, we print a message from a former Varsity staffer, the late Right Honorable William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada for over 20 years.

President Smith . . .

The Seventy-fifth Birthday of The Varsity! I cannot "bake a cake," but I wish for The Varsity many happy returns of the year ad multos annos. Student publications (like presidents) are always on the firing line. If there is any subject on which any group of University of Toronto graduates would like to agree, it is that The Varsity isn't as good as it used to be.

At the end of seventy-five years' continuous decline, the flourishing condition of the patient bespeaks a vitality little short of miraculous.

The University was a smaller and simpler place when The Varsity was launched in 1880. In the complex institution of 1955, the need for The Varsity is acute. The dissemination of information to a widely dispersed student and staff population is desirable and indeed essential. The Health Service, the Placement Bureau, The Simcoe Hall offices, and other administrative agencies rely on The Varsity as a medium for announcements of general interest; Hart House, Hart House Theatre, the Royal Ontario Museum, the University Press, the men's and women's Athletic Associations, the Student Christian Movement and other worth-while organizations depend upon The Varsity to acquaint the university community with their programmes and projects.

A university paper, like other newspapers, has a dual function to fulfil. It should report information, and it should comment on issues of the day, particular and general. The second function is a constant challenge to the members of The Varsity masthead.

In its earlier days, The Varsity was mainly an organ of discussion and comment. It was, in that period, more of a political and literary periodical than it has been in recent years. One can understand how the change has come about. We should never forget that a true university is unique in our democratic society because it must provide the best opportunity for free trade in ideas.

A university paper must strive for a higher standard than a "down town" newspaper, since the university organ serves — I trust — a select group of readers with above-average powers of analysis and synthesis. If a university paper resorts to vulgar devices, or indulges in shallow speculation, then it is betraying the community that supports it. Bad journalism juggles facts to bolster fixed ideas; a university paper should juggle ideas, and treat facts with scrupulous objectivity.

We take pride in the roster of distinguished Canadian journalists and writers who are alumni of The Varsity masthead. The high objectives they had as editors in their undergraduate years have established standards of excellence that demand wisdom and good judgment from their successors.

I reiterate that the University of Toronto is a complex institution, with a strong Faculty of Arts and sixteen other divisions ranging alphabetically from Architecture to Social Work. The Varsity has been, and I hope that it will always be, a powerful unifying influence. It gives its readers in all the parts a sense of identity with the whole.

James D. Gillis, the Bard of my native Cape Breton, on the occasion of Queen Victoria's Jubilee was moved to write:

Here's to Queen Victoria
Dressed in all her regalia,
With one foot in Canada
And the other in Australia.

Our Commonwealth of Learning on this campus has smaller distances to be spanned, but the need for that unifying influence is not dissimilar. So, paraphrasing Gillis, in saluting The Varsity's Jubilee:

Here's to The Varsity,
Ancient and unfearing,
With one foot in Trinity
And the other in Engineering.

The Varsity: Maneat; crescat; floreat!

Lidney Smith

Trinity 1912

Reverend A. H. Priest, a graduate of Trinity in 1912, reminisces about his old college days. In 1912, Trinity College was still located on Queen Street West, two miles from the University proper.

The Class of Trinity 1912, who entered university in the fall of 1908, were a fortunate crowd in that we were members of a college, at that time in its old quarters on Queen Street West, almost entirely residential.

The close encounters of mind with mind and the intimate fellowship and friendship with both dons and fellow students possible under such conditions were ample compensation for some of the very minor inconveniences of rooms heated only by a fireplace and food served in the dining hall by "gypps" who a few moments before a meal had been heaving coal in "hell," judging by the dark marks of their fingers in the watery soup.

Two miles away was the University, whither we walked to and fro for certain lectures, while of course collecting our car fare — at student rates — from the bursar.

Perhaps the don who remains freshest in memory was Harold Victor Routh, the brilliant and mercurial Cambridge man, mentor par excellence with his wire-haired terrier "Henry" of the harriers and boxers, who under his leadership attained a standing in inter-faculty sports never equalled before or since. He would arrive in Latin classes "with gashes on his mouth" to expound not the scheduled Satures of Juvenal but his theory on the Kinrade murder in Hamilton (still unsolved by the way).

Gowns were always worn when we were called before authority and I have never forgotten the occasion when I dashed in to his presence and out again just as fast with the rebuke following me from between his clenched teeth. "Mr. Priest, you are academically naked!"

However one looks at it, it was a good life, a life of plain living and high thinking in an era of college days about to close, for 1914 was all but upon us and with the coming of World War I every able bodied man felt called to a sterner game, from which many of the best of them, alas, never returned.

A. H. Priest,

General Secretary, The Church of England in Canada: Dep't of Religious Education.

New York.

Since it is over forty years since I was at the University and the War of 1914 robbed me of the distinction of its degree, about all I can do is to send to The Varsity my congratulations on its survival, presumably in health and strength.

The Governor General . .

OTTAWA

I SHOULD LIKE TO SEND TO THE VARSITY MY WARMEST GREETINGS ON THE OCCASION OF THE SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ITS FOUNDATION, WITH MY HEARTFELT GOOD WISHES FOR THE FUTURE.

VINCENT MASSEY,
GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Prime Minister . . .

Ottawa

It is a pleasure to have the opportunity to send greetings to the staff and readers of The Varsity on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the founding of this journal. I sincerely hope that this paper will continue to enjoy the fine reputation it has earned among undergraduate publications, and I extend best wishes for its future.

Louis St. Laurent
Prime Minister.

Honorable Paul Martin . .

Ottawa

I am happy to join with my fellow alumni of the University of Toronto in saluting this special 75th anniversary issue of The Varsity. We all recall from our student days the important part our paper played in the life of the University. Perhaps nothing reflected campus life with greater sensitivity than the pages of The Varsity. The student paper, of course, performed another valuable function in preparing undergraduates to take up in later life careers in journalism and other literary pursuits.

I hope that in its second 75 years The Varsity will continue to flourish as it has in the past.

Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mackenzie King -- 50th

Ottawa

I should like to extend congratulations to the present editor and members of the staff upon the celebration by The Varsity of its fiftieth anniversary issue.

At this time it gives me pleasure to recall that, in the first prospectus of a university journal and review, the name of my father appeared as chairman of the committee which had charge of the enterprise. That particular project failed for want of substantial encouragement, but was subsequently revived with success in the publication known as The Varsity, with the staff of which I had for a time the pleasure of being associated during my undergraduate days.

I join most heartily with graduates and undergraduates of the University in extending, not only my congratulations upon the achievements of The Varsity in the past, but as well the best wishes for its even higher and more influential service through years to come.

Yours sincerely,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

Presses Foaming After Political Polling

J. B. McGuire was Editor of THE VARSITY in 1935-1936. He now lives in Montreal, and is an advertising executive.

was related to the episode downstairs where the soda ash from the fire extinguisher left a somewhat expensive impression on the piles of paper, lines of machines and fonts of type.

Montreal
It is too late now for anyone to be sued, expelled or otherwise chastised, so I wish someone would help clear up a 20-year-old mystery. Who handed John Dent the fire extinguisher that gummed up the works on the main floor of the University Press at approximately 2:30 a.m. on Friday, October 11, 1935?

There was no fire in the press building at the time. What there had been was a straw vote on the campus, sponsored by The Varsity and the results were being compiled upstairs for the day's lead story. In a strange but reasonable way, that event

With a Federal election in the offing in the autumn of '35, The Varsity staff thought it might be a good idea to find out how the students of the university felt about political matters. It seemed to be a useful, honest project. Plans were made and the staff geared for a short, sharp promotion to get the students to vote. It came then as a shock to the junior and naive members of the staff and a source of annoyance to the more senior members when the publications committee of the S.A.C., exercising the traditional wisdom of censors, vetoed the idea.

The committee advanced two reasons for its stand. One was that the students would not turn out to vote and their lack of political opinions would make the university a subject of ridicule. The other was that the students would turn out to vote and their political opinions would make the university a subject of ridicule.

Permission to proceed with the vote was eventually obtained after a campaign to overcome the objections of the publications committee. This effort succeeded with the support of Dr. Cody, then President of the University, Dr. Dunlop, Director of Extension, and Alec MacDonald of the S.A.C. office.

Unlike the censor-minded folks on the publications committee, these gentlemen shared The Varsity's view that if asked a simple, honest question, the students would answer it simply and honestly.

That they did. More than 80% of the students cast ballots—a much higher proportion than was recorded in the Federal election which followed. To the staff of The Varsity—its political voice neutralized by individual opinions ranging from anarchism and communism to Toryism—the results were interesting but less important than the volume of votes, which represented a triumph for the paper.

When the ballots were counted on the second floor of the University Press building where The Varsity was being printed, there was jubilation among the staff. Since it was after midnight, about a dozen members adjourned to a neighbouring refreshment centre—a sort of sophisticated teahouse operated by a blonde woman known as "Little Eva."

When they returned a few hours later, some had obviously been refreshed to the point of diminishing returns.

Those still working upstairs heard the party re-enter the press building about 2:30 a.m., and then from the babble of voices came a series of anguished howls. The reason for the howls was promptly investigated. The Feature Editor was standing among the presses with the fire extinguisher in his hands, chuckling quietly and asking "What do you want to do with this thing?"

Meanwhile, the extinguisher was performing in the approved manner of activated extinguishers—spraying soda ash all over the joint. To some, the situation was humorous.

The management of the press didn't think so. In fact, the fire extinguisher reversed its role by fanning the flames of a feud that existed for years between the publishers and the printers of The Varsity.

But I would like to know who took it down.

For those more interested in the student election results than in the episode, here is how the students of hungry 1935 voted:

Party	Number of Votes
Conservative	1416
Liberal	1194
Reconstruction	392
C. C. F.	518
Social Credit	62
Communist	128

Estimated eligible voters—449

It is not proposed to attach here any significance to the expression of political opinion. But much was learned from the skirmish with the committee preceding the vote. Later in the year, long before anyone ever heard of Dr. Kinsey, The Varsity took a Purity Poll. Ross Munro was compelled to sit on his competently written story of the results and hate the editors until it was published in the last issue of the year.

It made an international splash—but by the time the paper resumed publication after the holidays, the Christmas turkey and plum pudding had done their work on the Publications Committee. Although the wires took the story to millions of readers who learned that Varsity girls smooched now and again, the publications committee remained mute on the subject.

CANADIAN PAINTINGS IN HART HOUSE

FOREWORD BY H. E. THE RT. HON. VINCENT MASSEY, C.H.
SELECTED AND ARRANGED, WITH NOTES, BY J. RUSSELL HARPER

This handsome new volume shows, in colour and in black and white, most of the more than one hundred pictures which hang on the walls of Hart House—probably the most important collection of Canadian paintings outside the National Gallery of Canada. The volume contains 9 plates in full colour, 69 black and white reproductions, and is attractively bound with transparent protective jacket.

LET US NOW PRAISE...

This University has always been a proud host to famous men, both those who have graduated from it, and those who have visited it. And as official representative of campus opinion, The Varsity has never failed to pay sufficient tribute to these men, or "perpetuate their names," as we might call them.

A brief review of some Varsity articles throughout the past forty years might give a general indication of the many kinds of personalities once associated with this University.

Sir Wilfred Laurier

Let us return to February 19, 1919. That was a sad day in Canada, for Sir Wilfred Laurier had died. All Toronto mourned, and on the pages of The Varsity a glowing tribute was paid to the great Liberal leader. "Canada has lost the most striking personality known to the public since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald"—so commented one official. Never a stranger to our University, Sir Wilfred had been granted an honorary degree.

Dr. J. L. Paton

A banner year for personalities was 1924. In October of that year a lecture was delivered before a Hart House audience by Dr. J. L. Paton, the former High Master of Manchester Grammar School. The famous educationalist was very impressed with Canada, and illustrated this impression with a striking remark: "I have often heard of the milk of human kindness, but when I come to Canada—I find the cow." Any comment needed?

Sir William Mulock

"Chancellor Enters Second Century" was the headline, carried by the Varsity, Wednesday, Jan. 19, 1944, to signal the 100th birthday of Sir William Mulock. On that day The Varsity, along with the university and the rest of Canada, paid tribute to a man who had lived through a century which included the birth of Canada as a nation, and her growth from a frontier country to a world power.

On the occasion of his 100th birthday "Canada's Grand Old Man" reminisced about his undergraduate days. Reminded of his signature cut with a diamond on the window-pane of Room 40, UC, he spoke of the 1854 opening of the west wing of UC of a residence.

Speaking of the University Act that signalled the founding of the University, he termed it a "dream" that had not quite come true yet.

Sir William's interest in sports is symbolized in the Mulock Cup, which he donated 60 years ago to promote intramural sports on the campus. Today interfaculty football squads compete for this prized trophy.

To celebrate his 100th birthday a special reception was held at his home. Almost 600 guests attended, among them, the late Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Premier George Drew, President Cody, and Chancellors Brown and Wallace, with greetings sent by telegram from King George VI.

Sir William was born in Bond Head, Simcoe County, the son of Dr. Thomas H. Mulock, a graduate in Arts and Medicine from Trinity College, Dublin. His father died when Sir William was still a boy, forcing young William to work as a hired boy on neighbouring farms. After graduating from Newmarket Grammar School he

John Buchan

Just four days later John Buchan, the distinguished British novelist, spoke in Convocation Hall. A couple of days prior to this he had granted an informal interview with The Varsity staff. In the course of this "fireside chat" he stressed the journalistic aspects of a newspaper.

J. G. Endicott

In the meantime a home-brew of the University was attracting attention. J. G. Endicott was already well-known as President of the S.A.C., having graduated from Vic in 1923. The controversial figure then retired from active university life with his appointment to a Methodist Missionary Field in West Germany.

W. L. Mackenzie King

Some of the products of our University have become great public figures in their own right, while some have achieved renown within the University itself. In the former category we find that "Incredible Canadian," the late W. L. Mackenzie King. At the age of sixteen he entered the University, and within six years had received three degrees. His rise to political fame was rapid, with his greatest reward the post of Prime Minister in 1921. Five years later King made an unofficial visit to his old Alma Mater. In a memorable address at Hart House the P.M. fondly recalled his undergraduate days, and thanked Varsity "for the little knowledge I have gained, for the inspiration I have acquired".

A personal message to students marked the statesman's address, including the personal recommendation that "Every one of you should be a bearer of the gospel of good will".

Vincent Massey

The name Massey has always been an honored one in the annals of our University. And Vincent Massey is one of the proudest bearers of that name. A brief news article in a Varsity edition of 1926 was typical of the respect held for him thirty years ago. The article concerned his appointment as the first Canadian Ambassador to Washington, and it called to mind but one of the many facts of so complex an individual. Mr. Massey was also to become our first Governor-General, an office conferred upon him while Chancellor of this University.

Sir Ernest MacMillan

A famous name in contemporary circles is that of Sir Ernest MacMillan, whose recent retirement from his duties as conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra has put his name in the limelight once again—a familiar occurrence if Varsity records are any proof. Sir Ernest made headlines in 1926, for example, when he was appointed as principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music and in 1944, when he was interned in Germany during the Great War.

A Varsity undergraduate in Modern History (of all courses), Sir Ernest received his B.A. "in absentia" in 1915 (while still a prisoner), and three years later the British Isles granted him the highly esteemed degree of doctor of music. At one time director of music for the Hart House Theater, the composer-conductor can to-day smile with pleasure upon the Hart House Glee Club; he had always suggested a choir similar to the famous Harvard Glee Club.

Grand Duke of Russia

At about the same time The Varsity managed an "exclusive" interview with the visiting Grand Duke of Russia (Alexander). An eye-witness to the Russian Revolution of 1927, the Grand Duke was fiercely antagonistic toward the meteoric rise of Communism. "Their propoganda will inflame ignorant minds," he warned Canadians. "Your country is young and unspoiled, don't let doctrines of violence be preached."

Jan Christiaan Smuts

An honorary degree was the reward for the visit, in early 1930, of General Jan Christiaan Smuts. The degree had originally been bestowed upon him by the University "in absentia" in 1921.

Addressing Convocation, General Smuts was eloquent in his praise of Canada. "Even in your youth you are magnificent. I wonder what your maturity will be like." It is worthy of note that our University was the first in the Empire, outside of South Africa, to confer an honorary degree upon the General.

Princess Elizabeth

If the four of the Prince of Wales was sedate and quiet, that of Princess Elizabeth and her husband was very much the opposite. The royal couple had come to Canada on an official tour, and publicity was the price paid for fame. The Varsity boasted that its coverage of the event was the most thorough of any event in the last decade. For two days the paper ran articles on the impending visit, and on the Monday after, it featured an eight page edition in blue and white colors.

The royal party entered the campus in a fourteen-car cavalcade and though its tour of the University centred mainly about Hart House, the glamour and gloss of the event was swollen much out of proportion. Perhaps there was too much gloss and gloss, for a Varsity editorial pointed out that "Symbols, unlike goldfish, thrive better when they are not too minutely exposed to the public eye".

The Prince of Wales

"THE PRINCE PROVES JOLLY GOOD FELLOW" screamed The Varsity headline. And jolly good was his choice of adjectives to describe Hart House: "Wonderful... magnificent... splendid... beautiful...". To use his own words, the Prince "never had a better time..."—a feeling generally shared by the campus.

The Princess

The visit of Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip to the University campus in October 1951 brought huge crowds of students swarming. Here the royal couple are shown arriving in front of Hart House, being welcomed by President Smith and other university dignitaries.

came to University College, working nights to pay fees. He graduated in Arts in 1863, receiving the Gold Medal in Modern Languages, and was called to the Bar five years later. During the next three years Sir William studied French in his spare time, receiving his M.A. in 1871.

Not long after this he entered political life, and became Liberal member for North York from 1882 to 1905, serving as Postmaster General of Canada during his term of administration. As Postmaster General he introduced two cent postage into the British Empire.

Other firsts came for Sir William during his political career. He was the first Minister of the Department of Labour, and inaugurated the Canada-Australia Imperial Cable. Royal recognition for his services to the Empire came in 1906 when he was knighted by the king.

After he left the government in 1905 he was appointed Chief Justice of the Exchequer Division at Osgoode Hall. In 1921 he became acting Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario until the death of the Lieutenant-Governor Lionel Clarke. From 1923 to 1936 he was the Chief Justice of Ontario, retiring in 1936 at the age of 92. At this time he stated that he wanted to learn what to do in his spare time.

His University affiliations were numerous and long-lasting. He was appointed to the Senate of the University in 1873 and was Vice-Chancellor from 1881 to 1910, becoming Chancellor in 1924. The present system of the four federated Arts colleges was largely his idea. It was due to his perseverance and foresightedness that the system was finally realized.

One of his duties as chancellor was to confer degrees, and in 1943 he conferred a degree on his great-great-grandson. On the eve of his 100th birthday he conferred an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on Prince Olaf of Norway.

"University Mourns Chancellor" was the headline of the Varsity on Monday, Oct. 2, 1944. The man who had seen the birth of the Canadian nation and watched the founding of the University of Toronto passed away in his 101st year, after a brief illness.

"Canada's Grand old man is dead. The University's most colourful figure has passed away." The Varsity cited him as a rugged individualist with a pioneering instinct which raised him from the level of a country boy to the heights of political and educational fame.

Banting And Best

In February 1922, Frederick Banting first announced the discovery of insulin. Along with his co-workers, Best and Collip, he had produced a successful treatment for diabetes.

Before 1922, Banting's medical career had been unnotable. After his M. B. at Toronto and service overseas, he returned to the Hospital for Sick Children in 1919 as resident surgeon. Thence to London, where he had a part-time appointment on the I.W.O.'s Medical Faculty, and a part-time medical practice. Back in Toronto in 1920, Banting took a lectureship in pharmacology with the Faculty of Medicine. In April 1921, he began his research on the pancreas.

He continued the next year in the department of Medicine as head demonstrator, and worked on in the Physiological lab of the university, with C. H. Best as assistant. He was 31 at the time.

Best was 22 then, and a graduate student in physiology at the University. Originally a liberal arts student, he had switched to Physiology and Biochemistry in his second undergraduate year.

In February, 1922, then initial experiments were complete, and Banting published his first results. Medical experts soon applauded his research, calling it "one of the greatest achievements in modern science," "one of the big discoveries of the age." Under the directorship of J. MacLeod, Best set up production of insulin at the Connaught Laboratories.

The Varsity had no comment to make. Such is the scorn of the young for their elders.

Public recognition of Banting's discovery, despite The Varsity's lack of interest, came soon. In 1923, he was made First Professor of Medical Research, and a chair in Medical Research was endowed at the University. He received the Nobel Prize in 1923 with Dr. MacLeod (splitting his share with Best, who was working towards his M.B.). The Federal Government voted him an annuity of $7,500 for medical research. In 1934, Dr. Banting received the order of Knight of the British Empire.

Best's affiliation with the Connaught labs became permanent, and soon after receiving his medical degree, he became a Professor of Physiology at the University, and head of the Department. He is still a distinguished member of the staff, as head of the Banting & Best Institute of Medical Research.

Sir Frederick Banting died in a plane crash in early 1941, enroute for Britain to work with a war-time research project in aviation medicine.

"Adversity" Meets Adversity As Suspended Varsity Editor Publishes Paper Off Campus

By DAVID GREENSPAN

More than once in its 75 year long history, The Varsity has clashed with Simcoe Hall officialdom on the problem of censorship.

On February 23, 1931, Simcoe Hall suspended The Varsity. The contentious issue, an editorial of February 24th entitled Atheists, maintained that most University of Toronto students, graduates, and staff were atheists. A. E. F. Allen, the editor, wrote, "and while a large percentage of University graduates never see the inside of a church from one year's end to the other, most of those who do go are there either for an aesthetic thrill or to preserve their status in a respectable society whose bridge games they attend, and from whom they hope to derive monetary gain during the week. It is all very nice, but it is atheism."

A storm of protest immediately arose from the downtown dailies.

On February 27th, The Varsity duly reported that the Board of Governors had repudiated suggestions of atheism within the University, and had instructed the Caput to take disciplinary measures against The Varsity for making such suggestions.

On February 28th, The Varsity duly reported nothing, for publication was suspended on that day and the whole masthead forced to resign.

On February 27, A. E. F. Allen, the editor, realizing the axe was soon to fall on The Varsity, the only organ for free student expression on the university, did not write his own editorial. Instead, he inserted Milton's very appropriate "Second Defence of the People of England."

"If you permit the free discussion of truth without any hazard to the author, or any subjection to the caprice of an individual, which is the best way to make truth flourish and knowledge abound, the censure of the half-learned, the envy, the pusillanimity, or the prejudice which measures the discoveries of others, and in short every degree of wisdom, but in measure of its own capacity, will be prevented from doling out information to us according to their own arbitrary choice.

"Lastly, if you shall not dread to hear any truth, or any falsehood, whatever it may be, but if you shall least of all listen to those who think that they can never be free 'till the liberties of others depend on their caprice, and to attempt nothing of so much zeal and vehemence as to fetter, not only the bodies but the minds of men, who labour to introduce into the state the worst of all tyrannies, the tyranny of their own depraved habits and pernicious opinions; you will always be dear to those who think not merely that their own set or faction but that all citizens of all descriptions, should enjoy equal rights and equal laws."

However, the SAC suspended The Varsity the next day.

The SAC perhaps felt justified in this suspension, for was there not a precedent? Certainly there was. On February 7th, 1929, the Joint Executive of SAC dismissed L. J. Ryan, the editor of The Varsity, ostensibly because of a bitter editorial on Wednesday, February 6, in which, SAC maintained, Ryan broke his former pledge to omit from the pages of The Varsity, "personal attacks, attacks on colleges or faculties, attempts to sow discord between faculties, personal bitterness and vindictiveness, and offensive epithets."

Ryan claimed in this editorial that Mr. Dunlop, director of publicity and extension, had sent a third party to him to persuade him to resign the editorship before he had an opportunity to appear in person before the joint executive of SAC, the student body ultimately responsible for The Varsity. Ryan's bitterness is obvious in the editorial — and he wrote:

"In other words, the body which claims to represent the students (Joint Executive of SAC) and which is now put up as a controller of the situation was not considered of such high consequence by one of the faculty representatives, who attempted to put the editor out of the way before the meeting of those who are supposed to supervise the tone of the paper on behalf of the students. . . . Official policy had steadily aimed at our dismissal. The lobbying done before joint executive meetings by Dunlop is only the parallel of the lobbying done in the Board of Student Publications by Burns, his protégé," the permanent secretary-treasurer.

The Joint Executive, after having received complaints from such official groups as the Board of Governors, had already complained several times about the morality of Varsity editorials. One in particular had shocked the university officials of those "Gay Twenties."

On January 18th, Ryan wrote that a large university in the U.S.A. claimed that attractive co-eds won high grades by "working" unsuspecting professors. He felt that if this situation could arise in the U.S.A., it could certainly arise in Toronto, and so he concluded:

"The truth of the matter seems to be that, although some professors have rightly denied the charge that they are influenced by feminine charm, other professors and their classes cannot avoid being affected by the presence of women and that as long as professors are men and co-eds are women, that effect will continue even to the extent that it might be termed 'vamping'."

Another Ryan editorial four days later on January 22nd, 1929, entitled To Pet Or Not To Pet, maintained "Whatever may be the attitude of parents on the subject of petting, for those who indulge in it, the question of morality does not enter in at all. To them it is simply an exchange of amenities, in some cases quite casual, which make

Paper-Burning

Engineers burn The Varsity in the February snow of 1929. They are burning The Varsity that was put out by the SAC-acceptable staff after the resignation of Ryan who had proved "unacceptable" in his views. Ryan published his views in The Adversity, (3 columns of The Telegram) for a week. This was also burned on the same occasion by members of the opposition and so both papers burned merrily away together.

no difference when the 'grand passion' is experienced."

At the SAC meeting on January 25th, 1929, three days after To Pet Or Not To Pet appeared, Mr. Dunlop (now minister of education) said he had asked certain members of the Board of Governors what action might be taken in the event of the Joint Executive of SAC declining to take action which the Board of Governors had recommended with regard to the editor's dismissal and he had been told that the result would be an order from the Board of Governors prohibiting the publication of The Varsity.

Although the Simcoe Hall threats were repeated several times, the Joint Executive refused to take any action at all in the matter. They refused to remove the editor, but said they would stand aside if the Board of Governors wished to act itself.

However, after the last Ryan editorial containing a bitter attack on both the SAC and some members of the administration, the SAC dismissed Ryan on February 7. His entire staff immediately resigned in order to show their support for Ryan.

Immediately Mr. Mitchell, graduate, was appointed to the editorship and he brought out the February 7 and the succeeding issues.

In the meantime, The Adversity, a continuation of The Varsity and written by Ryan and his old staff, was given three columns per day in The Telegram until February 14. The Telegram became very popular with U. of T. students, for Ryan maintained both the editorial policy and the ancient institutions of The Varsity in his Adversity. The Telegram stressed the suspension story in its own columns for an entire week.

For example on February 7 the Telegram featured the following headlines, "Joint Executive Admits Editorial on Student Government of Yesterday Final Cause of Suspension." On the same day the Adversity headlined "University Police Guard Staff of Substitute of The Varsity": "Student Government an Illusion."

On February 8, the Telegram proclaimed in a headline "University Cops Chase Newsboys Selling Telegram Adversity."

But the Adversity was not only concerned with fighting "the U. of T.'s lack of real student government," it continued those ancient traditions of The Varsity, AM & D and the Campus Cat.

On February 14 The Adversity carried the news that the SAC had finally asked for an investigation by the Caput of student government at the U. of T. and on that day The Adversity's last editorial said, "With this the last number of The Adversity, the fight begins at the U. of T. for a logical student government and an unhampered student newspaper. In the first number of our newspaper we faced an uphill fight, but now the battle is on even terms. The investigation we were being requested to demand, has now been requested of the Caput by a unanimous vote of the joint executive and the SAC."

Perhaps Ryan's best defence was in his Adversity editorial of February 8 when he wrote "The homeless staff of The Varsity having found shelter and having become independent in Adversity, is now able to take up the cudgels in defence of its policies without the fear of sudden extinction which accompanied most efforts at independence, when its destinies are directed by that powerful student agent the Joint Executive."

SAC Suppresses "Remedial Sex" Test

By QUENTIN BURKE

"What the Hell" was the centre-column subhead that explained to students that the March 5, 1932 issue of The Varsity was "the first in a series of humor issues to appear weakly from time to time."

The editor's hopes were short lived. The SAC came crashing down and snapped up as many as possible of the printed issues.

Thus few had a chance to read what President Sidney Smith had said on the subject of "Remedial Sex." This article lampooned a report that the University President had delivered on the subject of "Remedial English." Wherever the word "English" was used by Dr. Smith, the Varsity humorists had substituted the word "sex."

From the front page, which satirized the globetrotting of SAC, President Wax, who had recently returned from a junket to confer with student organizations in Brazil, to the last page, where the editorial spoke of "while the dial are they doodling, dawdling over the mugs and the grubs? Oikey, Impostolopulous? Steady, steady, steady, steady, studivivimus," the issue was a riot, wherein reporters and editors had let their hair down and their typewriters run wild with the idiocy that they had been dreaming up since the beginning of the year.

Distribution of this issue of The Varsity was stopped before it got as far as advertisers, subscribers and exchange universities, but many copies got to students and by the afternoon of March 5 were changing hands for $1 a copy.

At a meeting of the publications commission of the SAC called the next day, letters were read condemning the "Slanderous libel, forcible misinterpretations, unauthorised quotations, and extremely poor taste" of the "mad dog" issue.

What was not revealed at the time was the fact that most of the objectionable articles were written by female members of the staff.

Miss Barbara Browne, editor of the Varsity, made a statement to the meeting, in which she pointed out that the "whole issue was undertaken in a spirit of fun. . . . a sense of humour varies from individual to individual and there is no infallible way of predicting the public response. . . . judging by student reactions as far as we could ascertain, the Varsity humour issue was considered funny. . . ."

The meeting passed a motion that the publication of the Varsity be suspended until after the next SAC meeting, which was to be held a week later.

Immediately after the meeting, letters of resignation from the editor and from most members of the Varsity staff were handed to the Publications Commission.

The SAC meeting that followed heard from many student bodies. . . . from the Med Society, V.C. Union, O.C.E. executive, St. Mike's Council, St. Hilda's College, . . . most of whom agreed with the Publications Commission's decision to suspend publication.

A Trinity rep. spoke, not in defence of the Varsity, but censuring the action of suspension, and recommending that the Varsity staff be asked to produce a final issue. "The commission is free," he thought, "to administer a reprimand on the grounds of taste" but nothing more.

A special issue (the last for the year) was published on Tuesday, March 18, after the paper had been off the campus for two weeks. It was brought out by the Publications Commission under the authority of the SAC and published part of the minutes of the SAC meeting of the previous Tuesday.

The Caput of the U. of T. found that the student self-government was sound in the suspension of The Varsity. They decided that the material used was in shockingly bad taste and recommended that "the co-operation of the editors be sought in devising ways to and means of preventing a recurrence."

Four of the editorial board were ordered to appear before the Caput, but were let off with a reprimand—and an interview with Dr. Smith on "matters of taste."

There was no action taken that "would jeopardize the academic status of any of the students involved."

"Dry" Editor Suspended

EPIC EDITORIALS EVOKE EXPLOSIONS

1934

By VERN GLEBERT

College issues and student strikes have been the curses of editors of The Varsity being suspended or dismissed, but the turbulent times produced yet another way for this recurring event to happen.

Liquor reform and the introduction of beverage rooms were hot political issues in the fall of 1934. The Liberal government of Premier Hepburn had decided to introduce beverage rooms to the province and editorials in The Varsity in October, 1934 set out in no uncertain fashion the editorial policy on this question.

A. C. Cochrane, editor-in-chief, wrote three editorials in the issues of October 24, 25 and 29 in which he attacked the premier for what he called "one of the most flagrant breaches of political rights ever perpetrated in this province by any government."

Beverage rooms to be permitted, under the legislation, in all parts of the province, including those which previously had been dry.

The first editorial continued: "The significant fact is that the theory of democracy, referring all important issues to the expressed opinion of the electorate, was totally disregarded. The wishes of the people were never ascertained. Referendums on the question have been consistently refused."

That he was completely opposed to beverage rooms and the government's policy, the editor made abundantly clear.

"The beverage-room is merely the open-bar retouched to attract a larger group of people. The open-bar carried a stigma of indecency. The self-respecting members of the community seldom entered it. Only the lowest types of women frequented it at the risk of social ostracism. . . We have never known a woman, nor a man for that matter, completely surrendered to the liquor habit, who retained a speck of modesty or self-respect. The people of Ontario expressed their disapproval of the open-bars in no uncertain manner, the camouflage of beverage-room is not likely to deceive them nor to change their minds."

Mr. Cochrane continued his attack on the Hepburn government by referring to the agitation for a referendum. "The attitude of the Liberal administration towards the matter of a referendum is a surprising one. It can only suggest that they are afraid of it."

Prominent University men were quoted the following day. The Varsity reported F. Gordon Osler, a member of the Board of Governors, as saying, "The beverage-room appears to me to be the thin wedge of the returning bar-room. It would be a great pity to have them back."

The chaplain of Hart House, Reverend Leonard A. Dixon, said, "The beverage-rooms have become a menace, and for University students to take the stand of that editorial, should be a very desirable influence in bringing a check to bear on that influence."

The editorial continued its attack of the previous day, calling the beverage-room "a social cancer, a malignant condition designed to undermine our entire scale of ethical and social values."

The uncompromising blast concluded, "It is unquestionably in the best interests of the Liberal Party to submit this question to the public. Thus they could determine the attitude of the electorate and be relieved of all responsibility in the matter."

The matter of local option was attacked in the third of the series of editorials on October 29. "Local option has no significance in this day of high-powered automobiles. Those who wish to drink may easily journey to a nearby hotel and imbibe all they can hold. The dry area is not spared the menace of drunken drivers," proclaimed The Varsity.

The name of A. C. Cochrane, BA, disappeared from the masthead of The Varsity with the issue of November 2, 1934. An editorial that day set forth the "definite characteristics" of a student newspaper, commenting "...the policy of the paper is necessarily restricted. Any attempts to step far ahead of the general consensus of opinion and to endeavour to lead it into paths which it would not naturally follow, would show a lack of understanding as to the true status of The Varsity as a student publication."

At the SAC meeting of October 31, the editor was forbidden to refer any further to the current political situation. He, and members of the staff were forbidden to give interviews to any representative of the outside press. The editor was to be held responsible for any material appearing in this fashion.

A further part of the resolution stated that all editorial matter would have to be submitted to the Publications Committee of the SAC, and finally, that any breach of the provisions of the motion would lead to dismissal of the editor.

Mr. Cochrane objected to the decisions, and what he termed "hypocrisy" in "refusing to permit him to publish the outline of policies."

The Board of Governors of the University were, at this time, negotiating with the Hepburn government for additional funds. Times were lean, as far as extra grants were concerned, and the government was extremely sensitive to criticism of its handling of the provinces' affairs.

There is no mention why the conditions mentioned above were placed on the editor, but, in any case, Cochrane submitted his resignation, and informed the press downtown of what he had done. The resignation was to take effect two weeks later.

A special meeting of the Publications Committee of the SAC and the masthead of The Varsity was held on November 5, at which the resignation of the editor was discussed. E. M. Angus, the public domain commissioner, stated that Mr. Cochrane had submitted his resignation to the SAC then had informed the press of what he had done. This was apparently prohibited by the terms of the motion passed at the previous SAC meeting.

Consequently, the editor had been dismissed, and a new editor had been appointed at the next meeting of the SAC.

Very stringent regulations concerning political matters were imposed on the new editor, and all dubious statements were discussed clause by clause. Some donations were modified, reduced, and large. The Varsity continued on its way in 1934, the path already set by its predecessor.

THE VARSITY CELEBRATES ITS 75th ANNIVERSARY

5 Managing Editor Pengelley studies a University of Toronto's history as he prepares an article on the growth of the University of Toronto from a small college in muddy York to a national university.

6 CUP Editor Carol Hoffman gives instructions as she plans page layout for the big anniversary edition. Staff members write headlines. On the blank pages in the background, the position of every story and picture, as well as the 11 Meanwhile, back at the campus office, Carol Hoffman waits anxiously for the final product. "Pass me the arsirins," she says, after staying up all night to get the paper out.

7 As the last of the news stories leaves for the printing plant, the two editors give their anniversary editorial an 11th hour check. They made few changes.

10 At the printing plant, Night Foreman Lance Affleck gives instructions to James Thurston, one of a staff of linotypers who put the copy in lead type. (Below) Pressmen Clifford and Russell Deachman, brothers, watch these pages come off the press.

The Varsity staff total over 100, although many do work only occasionally. Journalistic work is under the supervision of top mast-head members, who come down to The Varsity office nearly every night. Hours of work for staff members can vary anywhere from five to forty-five per week, and reached peaks of continuous efforts during the last few days.

Arms & Ajax - Ten Years Ago

Hugh Kenner was on the Editorial Board of THE VARSITY in 1945-1946. He now lives in Santa Barbara, California. In his covering letter Mr. Kenner says "If anybody ever edits a formal history of THE VARSITY I'd like to reserve space to do a chapter."

Santa Barbara, California

Here in California houses have no basements, no attics, and almost no cupboards. That is why, in defiance of every scrap of training I ever received, I am undertaking a historian's task without documentation. My bound files of THE Varsity for 1945-6 are at the bottom of the most inaccessible steamer-trunk in an overcrowded garage. A couple of hours' heavy lifting would no doubt uncover them, but I did enough manual labour for THE Varsity ten years ago to last a lifetime.

I set type, for instance. There was a compositor who used to come to the shop drunk, or not to come at all, and I learned to set ads and headlines well enough to get the issue to bed. It seemed more important that the issue should get to bed than that I should.

I suppose it was only our determination to get those 100 issues out without a miss that carried us through that year.

We thought, by the way, they were some of the best issues in the history of the paper, but I'm not going to rummage in that trunk to see.

I do know that we lost just about every tradition we'd had except the tradition of continuity. I've never decided if it was too high a price to pay for those 100 issues.

When we put No. 1 together, whistling, we looked forward to an exciting, uneventful year. The war had just ended. There were, suddenly, enough students on campus to ease up the paper's finances. (The previous year rising costs and dropping enrolments had reduced us to alternating two-page issues with our usual four-pagers.) Staff morale was high. The procedures for getting the paper out had been firmly enough established in the golden '30's.

We supposed that we could devote our minds to writing the news of the first post-war academic year.

Every evening a couple of night-editors strolled down to the old night office on the second floor of the University Press. They had the really fascinating job, and most of the staff hung around till past midnight to help them and get in their way.

They edited copy and handed it to a cheerful linotype man who squatted on a sawed-off chair and pecked at his machine. They wrote heads, with one eye on a chart that told you how many letters went into a line. They dummed make-up to the half-inch, and about five in the morning stood over the compositor while he nudged with precision chunk after chunk of type into the forms. They wet down paper for the page-proof and gave it a bleary-eyed once-over.

Then they went to bed while the pressmen took over. About mid-morning a few thousand copies of the four page paper had shuffled off the flat-bed press, and all over campus readers were getting in their morning ten minutes of cursing the editor.

No one who has ever night-edited has ever forgotten it, or lost the desire to do it just once again.

People used to delay writing stories till the night shift started, because they could think better amid clatter (I still can). Old-timers with CP (Canadian Press) bylines used to turn up and shout advice at us above the din of the linotype. We liked having them around. Ours was a staunchly traditional organization, and they had made the traditions.

We were fiercely proud of our professionalism. To dedicated staffers those evenings at the night office were THE Varsity.

Well, it ended.

There were suddenly too many students, some 16,000 including perhaps a thousand freshman engineers 30 miles away on an emergency campus at Ajax. Late in the afternoon unhurried men would be still hand feeding sheet after sheet into that press, and still there weren't enough copies.

Then we lost Jimmy Taylor. Jimmy had been our night compositor for years, and had trained a whole procession of eager but bone-ignorant night-editors. When he got transferred to the day shift we should have known an era had ended. We kept blindly on, though.

The new night-man was the unreliable one I spoke of. When he was alert he was good enough. When he was only half-incapacitated the linotype helped him. When he didn't turn up at all I subbed for him. We were dead set on not missing an issue. There was a tradition to maintain.

A year before, the night of the Big Storm, THE Varsity had been the only daily in Toronto that didn't skip a day.

We scarcely realized that the post-war world was saturated with politics and restlessness. We had staff crises, a Communist cell, more or less, turned up in our midst, dissidents even founded a rival paper full of Social Consciousness. It exposed scandals all over the campus. We paid no attention.

Maybe the scandals were there, I don't know. We were producing a hundred issues.

We fired the sports department and got a new one. We portaged typewriters from office to office (the campus was bursting with housing crises).

For a while we even established night headquarters in the Office of the Health League of Canada, up on Avenue Road. When the University wouldn't provide janitor service after dark, it helped to have Dr. Gordon Bates' daughter for a Women's Editor. Peggy was cheerful, too. She needed to be.

One awful night the compositor didn't turn up and the linotype machine discharged all its brass slugs on the floor not once but twice, and something went wrong with the press, and our first copies appeared about 2 in the afternoon.

But we didn't miss a day.

It got to be a strain. I haunted E. A. MacDonald's office. He was reassuring. I paid unshaven early-morning visits to President Smith, to report on imperfect liaison with the Press. He was agreeably agitated. At one point I attended a meeting of the Board of Governors, to report on conditions.

I don't know whether a student had ever done that before. After he had listened in tolerant sympathy the chairman announced that he would now sum up the mind of the meeting, and read a typed statement plucked from his pigskin briefcase. We should all co-operate in a spirit of—oh, mutual forbearance. I think it was.

Finally we dug in our heels and demanded an off-campus printer. That was in January

The Rotary Printing Company, Oshawa, 30 miles away, could set up our new eight-page paper on six machines in a few hours, and have 12,500 copies, nearly double our previous press run, all folded and bundled, on a truck for Toronto at 8 a.m. This it accordingly proceeded to do.

There were no more unreliable compositors, pictures were cheaper, we could have red-ink headlines for occasions like the someone else selected the type, and rewrote into practised cliche the ones that ran two letters long.

You picked up the morning paper, not to admire your handiwork, but to see what the thing looked like today. We no longer felt like newspapermen, according to the special Varsity definition. Not that we had time to think about what we felt. We were tending a machine that sponse, copy would have a mighty short several times.

I thought they were pretty good editorials, though I can't remember now what they were about. I remember deplored vandalism and John Dewey, and I think debating and Pass Art.

And Ross McLean—now with CBC-TV—turned out marvelous features. One, an affectionate two-part interview with Professor St. E. DeChamp, was headed, I think, "Sixty years with Beard... One Way of Life."

And we reached Issue 100, a bang-up sixteen-pager with aerial photos of the Ajax campus, to secure which an ex-bomber-pilot chaffered me through 25 miles of extremely bumpy lakefront air in a Piper Cub. We hadn't missed a night. We had covered some big stories—I forget what they were. Chiefly we were proud of having weathered that awful year, and made the transition to rotary printing and the big time.

I don't suppose we killed the paper completely; it seems to have reached the age of 75. But we killed nearly everything I like to remember about it.

We scrapped more tradition than we meant to. One that could have been saved I have always especially regretted. From time immemorial—in maybe twenty years—the top of front page had borne the paper's name—the "flag"—in a curious, hand-drawn script, not Backwoods Gothic or Olde English, not a typographer's abomination, something stolid and anachronistic with a satisfying rhythm. At the last minute before our first Oshawa issue someone discovered that if you reduced this from six wide columns to five narrow ones it was too shallow to look impressive. A piece of showy vulgarity concocted out of advertisers' type was hurriedly substituted. We rode out the balance of the year with that. The next editor changed it to something more conservative. Perhaps he was wise not to have the old flag redrawn. The break with the past was too final a pretense.

dynamiting of Hart House, and the staff work was over by midnight.

Utopia.

We were proud of the largest college daily in the country. Night editing was a thing of the past.

And I don't think those of us whose love of college journalism had been nurtured amid the din and confusion of the old night office ever felt that it was our paper again.

You sketched the makeup, you didn't calculate lovingly with a steel rule and plan balanced typographical arrangements. If something didn't fit a man in Oshawa threw in filler about the exports of Uruguay or tossed whole paragraphs into the melting-pot. You scribbled heads; consumed forty columns of copy a day, less ads.

Not that the thrills had ended. Copy went to Oshawa by Gray Coach, and forgetful bus drivers often brought it back to Toronto on the last run. There would be an emergency phone call, and someone—usually I—would arrive to the bus terminal, retrieve the parcel, and set forth eastward on Highway No. 2 (two lanes then).

We filled eight-pager after eight-pager, with the copious help of letter-writing readers. One of the letters nearly got us sued but we went on printing reams of them. We had to.

If the editorials, which a poll once revealed to be the most popular part of the paper, hadn't pulled so much indignant re-

Greetings From Old McGill

The McGill Daily wishes to extend its congratulations to THE Varsity on its seventy-fifth birthday.

As the student newspapers of two of the largest universities in Canada, and as the only daily college newspapers, THE DAILY and THE VARSITY have been friendly competitors for years. They have no doubt shared many of the same problems and adventures, the staff shortage during the war years; the journalistic boom with the veterans after the war; threats of suspension from the university; threats of all kinds from the students. We find in going back over our own record that THE DAILY has gone in cycles of good journalism and bad; of conservatism and radicalism; of having too many "characters" on the paper and of having too few.

A college newspaper provides its staffers with many headaches as well as with a great deal of fun. We sometimes wonder what gets into people who go to work for a paper. Why do they stick it out, year after year? What keeps them there, working their typewriters to the bone, usually for no money and for very few thanks?

We've finally come to the conclusion that journalists, even college journalists, have one thing in common: a consuming curiosity. They like to be there when it's happening. They want to know. They love the feeling that they're on the inside. And the college paper can be exciting; it can give them a chance to do all these things.

But most of all, the college paper is steeped in tradition of its own. More than any other campus organization, it has its own legends and customs. The story of its glorious and not-so-glorious past. Enshrined among its traditions are the stories of the year we were suspended, and of the special issue we published when Princess Elizabeth visited Canada. Our printer, to our ever-lasting mortification, preferred to Prince Phillip as a "navel" lieutenant.

THE Varsity has its traditions too. Many of them are not obvious to an outsider, but they stand out clearly: over the years. THE Varsity has had a reputation for standing up fearlessly and honestly for its beliefs.

We wish THE Varsity every success in the future and hope the next seventy-five years will be as good as the last.

SAC, Sin—Editorials Echo

Frank Moritsugu was Editor-in-Chief of THE VARSITY in 1950-1951, the year of the 70th Anniversary Issue. Frank is now Assistant Editor of CANADIAN HOMES AND GARDENS.

My tenure as editor of The Varsity was during the 70th Anniversary year, a mere five years ago. We put out a special Anniversary Issue, too. But we had messages only from well-known former editors as B. K. Sandwell, Stephen Leacock, Gordon Graydon and Dorothy Livesay then. Unlike the indiscriminating editors of the present paper, we were choosy.

One page in the 70th Anniversary Issue was filled with excerpts from 70 years of editorials in The Varsity. It proved that no campus problem was new under the sun. Be it war, a student union, tolerance or sex, some other editor had expounded on it eons before. And with the same weighty, perceptive and ineffectual arguments we were using.

This seemed to prove one thing: nobody ever learns a damned thing on the campus. Or perhaps another thing: everybody forgets pretty damned fast.

I know I do. Even though it's only been five years, I must confess I was forced to look through the 1950-51 issues to recall what earth-shaking issues had made us pound out burning editorials then. However, there are a few reminders on today's campus that our efforts were not always in vain.

For instance, on my way to work each morning I am stopped on Hoskin Avenue by a gendarme who lets a few vapid young students cross the street. This procedure is illogical, unjust and a waste of the taxpayers' money. It upsets the whole raison d'être for Hoskin. It prevents me from cruising steadily at the 40-m.p.h. rate the street is designed for.

My only consolation as I chafe at the wheel is that back in '50-51 we wrote a spate of angry editorials lambasting official apathy (Simcoe Hall and the SAC) about the danger of Hoskin traffic to walking students. Once we even suggested a student offer himself as sacrifice and be run down on Hoskin to dramatize the need for protection. Naturally it is after I'm converted from pedestrian to motorist who uses Hoskin daily that the traffic becomes controlled for the first ruddy time.

The new library addition is another example of how wonders come to those who wait and do not graduate. From the perspective of an off-campus graduate, the generous space, good lighting and comparative comfort of the new library seems woefully wasted on mere undergraduates. There is one gleam of light, however. Undergraduates seem as persons non grata at the library as they are when they try to park on the campus. Wait your turn, boy. As students, you're only passing through — just transients. Wait until you're a graduate and you don't need freer library or parking privileges every day. Then you'll get them.

But probably the most momentous if pathetic result of editorial campaigns in The Varsity is the new co-sexual room in Hart House. As I interpret it, this is the pacifier given to those pesky students who kept bothering the busy administration for years about a student union building. Instead of a proper union building that would live up to the needs and reputation of a great university like Toronto, we may now have in the campus male sanctuary a juke-box-equipped cove haven that women students are free to infest. And this soft unprincipled younger generation not only doth not protest they thrive on it.

Of course, everybody thinks his year on The Varsity was the best. Especially so if that year was way back in prehistory. Only thing certain is that ours definitely was. The best.

It seems wondrous now to realize that the column ran so unexpurgated without protest.

Except from one or two students who didn't get some of the jokes. Perhaps it was true as we used to smugly explain to ourselves: "If they get it, they won't complain. Those that would complain, won't get it."

Evidence: The Varsity and some of its more prominent staff writers were fervently hated by Skule, devotees of local musical demi-gods who'd been reviewed a bit sharply, directors of college shows that had been reviewed unenthusiastically. Communists, anti-Communists, conscriptionists, anti-sex types, anti-football scholarship types, pro-Christian mission types, and other easy but furious haters.

During my year, too, we received a high accolade. The Varsity was accused by other college editors of being the "sexiest" college paper in Canada. Mostly because we ran a series of photographs that featured beautiful coeds — on any pretext whatsoever (Our favorite photo was that of a succulent cheerleader which proved she had a javel). In those days, we had to do something — this was in the year before television.

And also, The Varsity proved that year as it has in others — before and after — that it was definitely not published in the interests of the students or the SAC. Rather it was published in the interests of and for the pleasure of the staff of The Varsity.

As long as the present and future editors of The Varsity remember this cardinal point — this best of all Canadian college newspapers is on its way to another 75 years of great success (mild admiration and bitter complaints. Long may it come out on an un-biased editorial policy founded on malice, bias, disbelief and strong poking about in handy compost piles

Atheism, Beer, and Suspension

Arthur Cochrane was Editor-in-Chief of THE VARSITY as a graduate student from Christmas till the end of the school year in 1933-1934, and for the first twenty-five issues in 1934-1935. Mr. Cochrane was suspended for writing editorials against the opening of beverage rooms in dry counties. He is now Professor of Systematic Theology at Dubuque University, Iowa, in the United States.

Mr. Allan also somehow provoked the ire of the engineers who in revenge threw him into the Hart House pool and burned copies of The Varsity. That was also the year in which I wrote a sports editorial entitled Two Titles in Ten Years. Why? which subsequently led, I believe, to the appointment of Warren Stevens as the first professional coach of the football team.

My first year on the Varsity staff was under the editorship of Leonard J. Ryan, (Helen Allen was women's editor). Ryan was also discharged and for a time The Varsity was published as a page in the Evening Telegram under the title, Advarsity. Other editors of distinction in our day who managed to escape the guillotine were Norman De Witt, Lou Golden, and De Courcy Rayner.

I do not think that these martyrs for the freedom of the press harbor any ill-will to their cruel oppressors — the S.A.C.

As I now read over those editorials of a quarter of a century ago, I get the impression that we were often inflated with a sense of our own omniscience, and delighted when we could see our scribbles in print. Our journalistic ethics were not always above reproach. During my tenure we published the last "Jazz" issue. It was a burlesque of newswriting and editorializing. An editorial bearing the caption, "Sexton Toady," was written by a gentleman now prominent in the C.C.F. party.

But, as editor I accepted full responsibility. Upon an order of the president of the university, this proved to be the end of all "Jazz" issues.

Or has that quaint custom been revived?

Fortunately not all of our editorial tirades were taken seriously. For example, I wrote in all seriousness a series of editorials entitled, Abolish the Lectures, Abolish the Examinations, and Some Constructive Suggestions.

Now that I happen to be a professor of Systematic Theology, I rejoice that no action was taken upon my advice. How would we professors eat? Moreover, professors, like Varsity editors, need compensations for their egos.

It might be appropriate to conclude these reminiscences by quoting the telegram we received from Arthur J. Stringer, poet and novelist, for the Jubilee issue of The Varsity: "May a grateful old friend who contributed to Varsity nearly forty years ago and in Varsity's columns received his first baptism of ink, venture to congratulate you on your 50th birthday and also venture the hope that you will remain the healthily obstreperous organ of healthily insurrectionary youth."

I echo these sentiments on the occasion of your 75th Anniversary.

Sincerely,
Arthur Cochrane, Professor, Theological Seminary,

What She Used To Be

It is embarrassing to be asked for one's recollections of "the old days" before a sufficiently respectable number of years have passed to take the bloom off them. Memories mellow only with time. It is frankly too soon to tell the truth.

I hesitate to say that the calibre of The Varsity staffers who succeeded us changed—for who succeeded us changed—but I must. This is the traditional attitude taken by the traditional staffers writing for anniversary issues.

It is not without foundation. Where are the dauntless reporters like Jim Simpson who, when told to get the full story about a lion the Blue and White Society were using to promote some event, returned with the animal in a cab and interviewed it in front of University College?

Of course, there really is no comparison between The Varsity of today and that of a few years ago. Nor should there be. But one is pained to pick up a contemporary copy and read in it a highly complimentary article on President Sidney Smith. Now Dr. Smith is a fine Canadian, but The Varsity is the last place this should be admitted.

The Varsity today is entirely too polite. Get an editor fired, or expelled, and keep up the old traditions.

One other point, while minor, is worth mentioning. Though it was never to my knowledge conceded by members of the faculty, The Varsity of a few years ago wrote English. It has been impossible to level such a charge at The Varsity of the last few years. A new tradition, more in line with the practice of the outside world, is obviously in the making.

To borrow a phrase, Floreat!

Co-Sexual Co-Editors

Toronto
Greetings from the Women's Editor, Mrs. J. W. Gardner, (Elizabeth R. Cringan), and the Editor-in-Chief, J. W. Gardner of 1920.

We (editorially speaking) see that there is no Women's Editor in 1955 but a Co-Editor-in-Chief. Could it be that when the Women's Editor of 1920 married the Editor-in-Chief of 1920-21 (in 1925) and "lived happily ever after" that the office of Women's Editor ended?

With all good wishes for the next seventy-five years.

Four Frisky Years

Minneapolis, Minn.

Your invitation to write something for the 75th Anniversary of The Varsity makes me feel quite elderly; and, like most ancients, I run the risk of becoming tiresomely reminiscent.

Those were four frisky years. I treasure them, but for reasons which it is difficult to expose a quarter of a century later. How can I describe the pleasures of repairing to Murray's (is it still on the west side of Yonge, just south of Bloor?) for an Andy sandwich (long since dropped from the menu) with some of the very clever Varsity staffers after the paper had shaped up for the night (is the night work still done on the second floor of the Press building, north east corner?)

You see what I mean.

Cordially yours,

In my tenure as Editor we changed from 3 to 5 issues a week and we published a weekly literary supplement. It wasn't very good, and I'm afraid we ran the SAC badly into debt.

Eric Druce was editor just before me. He is about 6'6" tall and I recall that at the Varsity staff party he drew our shortest girl as his partner. But both enjoyed themselves.

The evening make-up at the University Press usually lasted till well after midnight with two "local editors" on duty. Strangely enough, the job was a popular one. I can't remember ever being short of staff. We thought we had the largest staff of any University paper. I always enjoyed working for The Varsity. I am sure I have never felt so important since.

Best wishes to you all.

Varsity Knights Unhorsed Thru' Years

Reverend Canon W. R. Payton, now Canon Missioner and Secretary-Treasurer of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Saskatchewan, was Editor of THE VARSITY in 1931-1932. For ten years after that he worked in the Diocese of Toronto.

Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.
Here in the snow bound expanse of Northern Saskatchewan at Prince Albert, remote from the academic struggles and intellectual conundrums of the student world, the announcement of the 75th Anniversary issue of The Varsity is like the visit of an old friend unseen for many years.

It prompts a search for those somewhat faded snapshots of memory, to recall the rich undergraduate life.

New buildings have sprung up to house the new and more numerous generations of students that have won their way into the halls of learning. New courses, new professors, new social customs have made their entrance, but The Varsity still goes on its way, seeking to interpret changing conditions in the light of values that are both ancient and modern, eternal and temporal.

It is probable that in pursuing its course under such conditions the Varsity, in spite of 75 years of publication, will hardly claim the right to be looked upon as venerable or patriarchal, but will insist vehemently upon asserting its vigorous youthfulness.

I should be greatly surprised to hear that The Varsity had succumbed to the temptation to take the easy way of life even when 75 years old, and sit, as it were, in slippers and upholstered ease, the while regarding all around with benevolent tolerance and complacent ease!

For that is not the record of The Varsity as earlier generations have known it.

The Varsity is better symbolized as a Knight in shining armour, mounted on a gaily caparisoned steed with heraldic designs that sometimes puzzle, and sometimes perhaps are indiscreet in leaving too little to the imagination!

In such contests in past years it has not been unknown for the rider to have broken his lance and been unhorsed and incapacitated to ride again! It may be that this still happens, but the lists are still open, and one Knight or another has ridden forth as year succeeds year.

During the years covered by my own association with The Varsity such events happened with almost fatal regularity. One young Irish gallant from St. Michael's—"Paddy" Ryan—now a much respected lawyer I understand, co-opted the services of his Women's Editor to write an editorial, which if my memory serves me correctly, he did not read until it appeared in print. It was entitled "To Pet or Not to Pet?" Avidly seized upon by the downtown newspapers to illustrate the decadent morals of university students, it resulted in the dismissal of the Editor and the temporary suspension of publication.

Ryan was a first class editor, and to many it seemed hardly fair that he should suffer such a penalty, although the publication year was almost over. The critics did not perceive the editorial tongue in cheek or recognise the light humor of the writer, but castigated all and sundry for being indifferent to the high moral standards required from those training for leadership of their generation.

It was not very long after this that Andrew Allan, now the distinguished head of the C.E.C. Drama department and himself a son of the manse, aroused similar opposition and received like treatment for an editorial in which he suggested the widespread prevalence of practical atheism at the University. Neglecting to appreciate the adjective, all the forces of conventionalism were hurled first at the editor, and then at the staff and students, with the result that the Board of Governors became alarmed at the possible effect on Provincial Grants to the University, and another luckless editor got the axe.

Practical atheism is living as though one does not believe in God, having no regard for Him, indifferent to His laws and standards, and it cannot be denied that this was characteristic of many students then as it is characteristic of much of society today.

One Jazz Issue, of which I still possess a copy, and occasionally read with nostalgic eye, was kept from circulation because of too lightly veiled satire and humorous allusions to many of the "top brass" at the University. That narrow line which separates satire from liberal humour from material not in good taste, is easily over-ridden, and the responsibility for deciding where to "draw the line" makes good training for the judgements required by anyone who is to live in the public eye.

Taken in conjunction with a university education, experience on the staff of The Varsity still seems to me to have been an invaluable part of undergraduate days.

One privilege which I enjoyed in my final year on the staff of The Varsity was to become the first president of what was then known as the Canadian Intercollegiate Press Union.

Frustrated by frequent scoops on news from other universities by the city newspapers served by the Canadian Press, the editors of the McGill Daily, the Western Gazette, the Queen's Journal and The Varsity, formed this organisation to provide the means for rapid interchange of news between the university newspapers.

It was a time between two wars, the hungry thirties were emerging, and it was a challenging time for those who were graduating with a burning desire to put the world right. Doubtless today, with its overtones of atomic power, is just such a time too, and those who are entrusted with the responsibility of leadership in the university now will acquit themselves as creditably as did their predecessors, many of whom made the supreme sacrifice in the last great war.

To the Editor and his staff, and indeed to all their readers, a one-time editor pauses long enough to evoke these few memories and to congratulate you upon achieving the 75th birthday of The Varsity—may it never grow old!

Rev. Canon W. F. Payton.

Is Your Mark of Success

a "$" sign

Probably not . . . but you certainly want to make a monetary success of your chosen career. Equally important, however, in your hopes for the future is your desire to have an important place in your community and a position of leadership in its affairs. Right now, at university, is the time not only to learn a career, but to train yourself for leadership.

The Canadian Officers Training Corps can give you this vital training. Your membership in the COTC will tell your prospective employer that you are the type to assume responsibility. After a three-year training period (one night a week and summer holidays) and your qualification as a Commissioned Officer, you may continue your Army interests if you desire. The choice is yours . . . but in any event you will have gained invaluable knowledge in making decisions and in handling men.

The COTC offers you guaranteed summer employment for three years with take-home pay competitive with civilian summer jobs. By taking part in the full range of COTC activities it is possible to make up to $1,000 a year — with board, clothing, medical and dental care provided during the summer.

Classes start on December 5th, so you must have the foresight to make your decision now — a decision that will contribute much more than mere dollars toward your career. But you must act now! See the Resident Staff Officer at 119 Saint George Street for full details on this excellent opportunity for Varsity freshmen who are aiming high for the future.

ADVERTISING OVER THE YEARS

Memory Tablets to Cricket Suits Varsity Ads Sold Pills, Boots

By CORINNE GODFREY

Advertising has come a long way since 1880. By browsing through the years, changes and the development of a more efficient technique of selling by advertising can be traced.

In the first issues of The Varsity, ads were small and numerous. Heavy bordering surrounded old-style printing—it is a wonder that readers could fathom what was being advertised.

In one of the issues in the 1880's, ambitious students were offered the benefits of "memory restorative tablets." These, it was claimed, would "ensure the opportunity of standing at the head of the class" if taken regu-found in the pages of The Varsity. Men's fall hats, in 1905, were listed at $2 to $4.

Fashions give the greatest amusement to anyone following the years. Pictures began to appear about 1910, as the style changed from that of a literary magazine to that of a newspaper. Stores downtown had half-page spreads and sporting goods firms were much in evidence — with

College Street, 1850's

This is a picture of the South Gate of The University as it appears in the 1850's. The University was then located several miles away from the newly-renamed city of Toronto, and the roads between the city and the University were notoriously poor. This gate was locked at night in order to restrict the students' activities; and thus was a constant source of irritation. The Gate opened on what is now College St.

A Date Bureau inaugurated at Queen's in the spring of 1934, made news in The Varsity in October of that year. The bureau at Queen's, operated by a single individual, with the co-operation of the Queen's Journal, attained a measure of success although the Faculty were somewhat doubtful of its advantages.

Patrons of this first organization were chiefly those students naturally socially inclined since those unable to get dates on their own initiative were generally too shy to use its facilities.

The majority of these patrons were of the faculties of Science and Medicine, although in the fall of 1934 many freshmen took advantage of the institution.

The procedure for any student desiring a date was to write the bureau giving particulars of age, interests, sex, graduating year and faculty. All this information was considered top secret and the operator arranged the date by telephone, telling the girl that Smith would call for her. Smith, accordingly was told to call for Miss Jones at the Women's residence.

Varsity staff of that year were evidently intrigued by the idea and announced their intention to inaugurate a similar bureau on the U of T campus. This they did, despite unfavourable comments made by certain faculty members,

Dr. Gordon, in whose care the well-being of University College women was entrusted at that time, did not consider the question from the health standpoint, but stated emphatically that 'a University should remain essentially academic in its pursuits.'

The Dean of St. Joseph's seemed amused at the idea but declared definitely that the girls at her college would not patronize such a bureau.

"Such matters should be left in the hands of the students," Dr. Brown, principal of Victoria College said.

The widespread demand evidenced by the student body however convinced The Varsity of the need of such a bureau.

Procedure for applicants was quite similar to that at Queen's. In addition a photograph and ten cents were required. If a date was not delivered within two weeks money would be cheerfully refunded.

They didn't mention what would happen to the photograph.

"This institution is an attempt to remedy an evil," stated The Varsity on Oct. 11, 1934. "There is no reason why any student should sit at home alone because no opportunity for making friends has been provided."

Results at first were promising. Six couples were brought together the following weekend and The Varsity expressed sincere wishes for their eternal felicity. At this point, The Varsity was asked to state that the Date Bureau was in no way an activity of the SAC.

A later issue stated that the bureau was still flourishing but suffering from a shortage of men—at least 30. The bureau appealed for male volunteers in order to continue functioning.

Later on, the bureau apparently died out and thus put an end to an interesting part of the history of The Varsity.

Poll Proves Passion Popular

By CAROL HOFFMAN

U. of T. co-eds averaged 66.4% on a purity roll "privately conducted." The Varsity reported in 1935. Then men on campus fared a little worse, scoring an average of 59.3%.

"The test," said The Varsity, consisted of a questionnaire of 18 questions ranging from smoking, drinking, necking, down to the last query "have you gone the limit." The questions were heavily weighted and heavy penalties put on the person with libertine tendencies.

The Varsity reported that one SPS student had led a very sober and sedate existence, scoring an all-time high for men of 99.5%. "Answering the questions honestly," he declared he had never

Engineers Burn Varsity Vicmen Burn McCarthy Knox Walks 40 Miles

By JO PATRICK

Students have always been noted for their hi-jinks (sometimes referred to as "vandalism" or "rowdiness") and Toronto students are no exception.

Managing football-game crowds has always given University officials cause for worry. In 1923 The Varsity commented "The Queen's game last Saturday was managed by the police force to such good effect that they have been particularly complimented."

Students were as ready to accept a bet in 1923 as they are now, as two Knox students proved. The pair hiked from Toronto to Hamilton to win a bet of a dinner from sceptical classmates, who did not believe they could walk forty miles.

In the winter of 1924, the appearance of a burning cross on the back campus in the dead of night led students to wonder if the university was the scene of Ku Klux Klan activities. It was reported that Klan meetings had been held in other universities, and there had been rumors of Klan literature circulation among Toronto undergraduates. No explanation for the cross-burning was ever found.

The "Klan" made a reappearance in 1953, when Vicmen burned Senator Joseph McCarthy in effigy on Halloween night. The hooded demonstrators, led by a Grand Master in black robe with a white cross, strung a stuffed likeness of the senator to a scaffold and burned it in the light of a flaming cross.

In 1924, students' short-cuts across Queen's Park caused the Commissioner of Parks to call the practice of "making cross-paths" to the attention of the president. The commissioner also added that a policeman would be stationed in the park to arrest anyone caught in this offence. The only comment reported was that of a female librarian, who said "O! I'm so glad they are going to do something about dear old Queen's Park at last. I always felt so sorry to see those awful paths being made across our park."

In the fall of 1928, engineers burned hundreds of copies of The Varsity on the front campus. As the flames devoured the paper the engineers held their hands and uttered cries of "yellow," "rotten," "putrid." The arrival of the local constabulary brought an end to the ritual.

In 1951, students celebrated Hallowe'en with a wave of vandalism, which led the SAC to call an emergency meeting to investigate "rowdiness" on the campus. Signs were painted on the windows of U.C. Whitney Hall, Trinity and Knox, and on the steps of Victoria College. The appearance of the word "Skule" in oil paint inferred that engineers may have been behind the hi-jinks.

Approval Grows, Student Drinking Completes Cycle

By CONNIE CLARK

The heads read "Mr. Boogoes out before July. Get into the fight. Have you signed the Petition?"

This was the story of 1916—the fight for prohibition. Russia was dry, France and Britain restricted, why not Canada? A students over eighteen were canvassed to sign the petition put out by the non-partisan "Citizens Committee of One Hundred." Their cry was—"Our Empire Leaders have with one voice pronounced liquor to be the greatest barrier between us and victory. A monster demonstration will take place with parade, banners and all the trimmings. The students were to follow the Wagon!"

By 1924 there had been a prohibition vote and Ontario was generally dry. This, however, was not long on the campus.

By 1931 there was again discussion on liquor. A ballot on beer sale on the campus had been approved the year before. Student polls on drinking and dances were being taken. The reactions were much the same as those to-day—mostly approval or indifference.

been intimate in any way with a girl, he had never had a drink and the only thing he did "wrong" was to smoke one cigarette." The Varsity said. It was rumoured that there was a 100 per cent in the same faculty but this was "too amazing" and was discounted by The Varsity.

In Whitney Hall perfect purity was reached by one co-ed who scored 100 per cent, indicating she had not even indulged in the lesser sin of smoking. However The Varsity reported that residence girls on the whole were shown to have a lower "purity quotient" than girls out of residence.

"Several women rated as low as 48 per cent and one dropped to 35." The Varsity article declared. Every woman who was asked, except the 100 per center, Whitney, scored on the question "have you been kissed," and a greater majority also chalked up a good score on the next question "have you kissed 10 men" according to The Varsity.

"The question 'have you been alone with a man in a parking car?' was universally answered in the affirmative excepting the 100 per center." The Varsity said. "The various forms of cheating were also predominant in reducing many co-eds scores were all-night dates. The question, 'have you gone the limit' counted against the women in only very few instances.

This is how UC came to be what it is architecturally. "Cumberland drew a first sketch of a Gothic Building, but the Governor-General of Upper Canada (Edmund Head) would not hear of Gothic and recommended Italian showing us an example of the style, a palazzo at Siena, which, if he were not a Governor-General and had written a book on art, I should call one of the ugliest buildings I ever saw. However, after a week's absence the Governor came back with a new idea, it was to be Byzantine: and between them they concocted a most hideous elevation. After this the Governor was absent on a tour for several weeks, during which we polished away almost all traces of Byzantine and got a hybrid with some features of Norman, of early English, etc., with faint traces of Byzantium and the Italian palazzo but altogether a not unsightly building and on his return His Excellency approved."

Printed And Spoken Words

From Far and Near Thru' The Years

By CAROL HOFFMAN

This is a CUP column — but a CUP column with a difference. Instead of places, there are dates, to distinguish stories, for in this column are reprinted items The Varsity has carried during the seventy-five years of its existence. Even before the Canadian University Press was born, The Varsity arranged individual exchanges with other Canadian and American papers. These are some of the stories gleaned from exchanges.

In the first year of its publication The Varsity observed that "in Sweden the dairy-maids are sent to college." Co-education was a much-debated subject at that time in most universities.

The same year The Varsity carried a story of a riot between Harvard freshmen and sophomores. As a result of the fighting "several are reported to have been conveyed home in carriages," The Varsity noted.

As there were 200 students in the crowd, the police, of which there are about half the number needed in Cambridge, were unable to prevent these representatives of the best blood and high-toned culture of New England from having their little frolic out in their own peculiar thoroughbred fashion." The Varsity commented.

1896

Back in 1896, The Varsity noted that the College of New Jersey was celebrating its 150th anniversary. "For some time it has been called Princeton and will be officially christened such on this occasion." The Varsity reported.

1908

A few years later The Varsity informed readers that the University of California was acquiring wealth and buildings. A wealthy lady had offered a prize of $10,000 for designs for a group of college buildings. "The design of a prominent French architect has been chosen." The Varsity reported.

1915

Copies of the Queen's Journal (or College Journal as it was known then) are to be sent to members of University units who are serving at the front, The Varsity reported.

In that same year, the University of British Columbia reported that it had 350 students — a good number considering that times here are even worse than they are in Toronto, a UBC correspondent wrote.

"From the above it will be seen that Canada's baby university is progressing favorably, and that we may expect to see in the future a flourishing institution on the western coast," wrote The Varsity.

1923

Because of an order, issued today, hazing is banished forever from the University of Western Ontario, a special despatch to The Varsity reported. The dangers of personal injury and threats of legal action by property owners involved were given as reasons for forbidding the custom.

"This step which has been taken by the Western authorities is one that brings that University into line with the position taken by larger and more important colleges on this continent," The Varsity commented.

The principal of McGill University emphasized the fact that students were not working hard enough. Less than half the students who entered in 1920 have graduated in 1924, he said.

The wastage is due "principally to the fact that too little work was done by the undergraduates themselves," he said.

A Minnesota freshtette of 1924 was arrested and sentenced to 15 days in the workhouse for her driving. A motor-cycle cop testified she was speeding down University Avenue — at 40 miles an hour. She was finally put on probation for a year.

And a professor of biology at Mercer University, who explained the theory of evolution in his classroom, was asked to resign, in that year.

The expulsion of two students from the University of California made its way into the columns of The Varsity. The students were expelled for attending a football game in an intoxicated condition.

1929

American universities, and their English professors in particular, came in for sharp criticism back in 1929. "The English department is notoriously a refuge for third-raters" wrote the editor of the American Mercury. "In general the American English professor's view of the art of letters coincides with that of a woman's club gabber or a somewhat advanced suburban clergyman and when it comes to actual writing they are hopeless."

1931

A dancing master's degree — either B.A. or M.A. — was offered to students at the University of Wisconsin that year.

1938

The first issue of The Varsity in 1938 carried the story of the founding of Canadian University Press. Hailed as "perhaps the most tangible actuality to come out of the hierarchy of meetings and conferences held in Winnipeg Christmas week" (NFCUS met there the same week), CUP had already set up a wire service and a weekly news bulletin.

"The Varsity . . . wholeheartedly lines itself up behind the newly-formed Canadian University Press," announced a New Year's editorial.

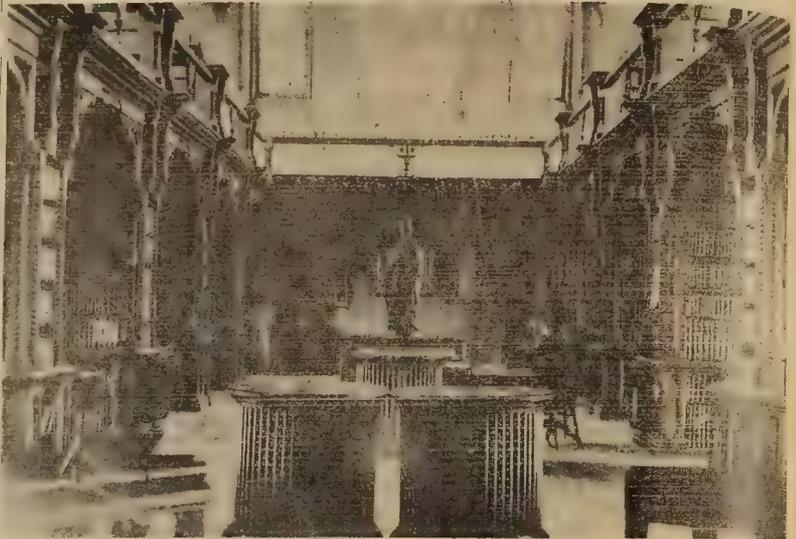

1945

The first national conference of the Canadian University Press was held in Montreal at Christmas 1944. University newspapers from Nova Scotia to British Columbia were represented.

1946-1955

During the last ten years CUP and Exchange coverage in The Varsity has greatly increased. Stories of riots, fines, expulsions, of conferences, speeches, and student exchanges have been carried as Varsity news. But stories from across Canada, from American papers, and from student newspapers of foreign countries have been news in The Varsity for seventy-five years.

Ain't What She Used To Be

This is the first library on campus, the library in University College before the fire of 1890. An undergraduate sits reading in this scholarly atmosphere featuring classical pictures and statues and scholarly commentaries written mainly in the non-vulgar tongue. A most valuable collection of books was burned past reading in the great UC fire.

Library Seats At Premium In '99 New Stack Lift Drops Fifty In '41

By CELIA SCHACHTER

Students still complaining about the library service? There's nothing new under the sun.

As far back as 1899, students of this university complained about the library service and accommodation, but they had good reason to. Conditions were really fierce in by-gone days. The rush for books was slowly increasing and a stampede was in the offing. Seats in the reading room were at a premium.

Not until 1929, was a solution finally suggested. A new library wing was proposed.

A careful investigation of the situation revealed that it was not a scarcity of librarians, but of space that made for the congestion. There were long lines of borrowers waiting for hours to obtain night books.

It was reported that the plans for the new wing were being studied by President Falconer.

In 1932, the new wing still had not been started. There was an urgent need for library space, but times were bad.

The reading room was so overcrowded a fee was charged for admission, and even then many had to be turned away. Since jobs could not be obtained, students spent their leisure time in the library. The librarians themselves were specially trained college graduates, but they were rushed almost to the point of exhaustion.

As an emergency measure, books of special departments were moved out and branches established elsewhere, — the political science reading room at the Economics Building, and the history reading room at Falconer Hall. Even these soon became overcrowded.

In 1941, fifty students were reported to have plunged to their deaths in the library, when the cable broke on the elevator carrying them down to their day's study in the stacks. The tragedy occurred just as the first load was being taken down for the day at 9.17 a.m.

Forgetting even the thought of late books, the library staff rushed to the rescue. The entire student body and staff of the Medical Building was summoned, but their efforts were not required, for there were no survivors.

Today, in 1955, students reap the fruits others have sown. Long overdue improvements were at last completed in 1954. The system of obtaining books is as efficient as modern methods can make it. Freshmen perhaps do not appreciate this library to the fullest extent. Those who remember the "good old times" can, no longer, is it necessary to line up for hours to reach the desk, only to be informed, after another hour's search by the librarian, that the book sought is out. Today there are several copies of books in great demand, and there are many trained librarians to give service.

The Wallace Room system is something new to the library. Books can be taken from the open shelf, thus saving time for all concerned. The stacks are a quiet haven where students bent on some serious work can accomplish it without distractions.

Ed. Note. The story of the elevator disaster was in the gag issue of 1940-41.

Sex, Blood, Thunder - 75 Years' Debates

BY ED BROADBENT

Are we living in an age of radical liberalism, in an era of shocking innovation? A topic such as "Resolved that a Woman's Place is Barefoot and Pregnant in the Kitchen," discussed this year at Trinity College would seem to illustrate the lack of inhibition in today's debates.

Many other subjects debated this year on the campus, in the most part with a sense of levity, have been of the sex, blood, and thunder variety. Should we return, as some suggest, to the good old days of debating when sobriety was the custom and tradition the rule?

Or was it? Apparently not.

It seems that dad and granddad were more argumentative over Kinseyism than we could possibly be. For instance in 1921, a Varsity heading proclaimed the result of a debate—"Mere Men Master Modest Maidens"—in which the affirmative won on the topic that Varsity men make "good worser-halves". Still, more shocking is the 1918 debate in which Victoria College resolved that sex hygiene be included in the curriculum. Shades of Queen Victoria!

An 1896 debate decided that "university education unfits women for domestic life". Later, however, when things began to degenerate and women were entering the professions, male students felt something must be done. Rallying to the occasion

Varsity speakers discussed in 1899 the advantages and the more probable effects, of women doctors, lawyers, etc.

Perhaps the high point in university debating was reached in the roaring twenties. Topics of such intellectual import as "Will Sex Novels Be Banned?", "Students Are More Studious," and "Canada Relishes Trashy Stories" were debated with vigor.

"Varsity" Fiddles While UC Burns Paper Was Broke

The Varsity missed, in 1889, one of the biggest news stories of the period—the legendary Great Fire in University College.

The fire began when a serving man, carrying a tray of lighted lamps to a literary meeting in the West Hall, tripped and fell, snuffing all the lamps.

The fire blazed furiously, and destroyed both the UC Library, which housed a very valuable collection of books, and the Zoological Museum's extensive exhibit of stuffed specimens.

The Varsity, however, due to an unfortunate financial failure arising from an insufficient number of subscribers, had ceased publication three weeks previously.

Universitas Torontonensis CXXXVIII

Highlights In History Of University Growth

By MICHAEL B. PENGELEY

The University of Toronto today is one of the slickest high-powered educational machines on the North American continent. With 11,000 students and over 30 faculties and institutions, its standards are claimed to compare favourably with such venerable U.S. colleges as Harvard, Princeton and Yale. Its annual budget is in the millions of dollars and no longer does it profess to cater, as it once did—to a select group of English-Canadian schoolboys. It is the most important University in Canada.

Despite the colossal strides it has made toward the modern ideal of non-sectarian education for both rich and poor the University's seed lies essentially in a strong English tradition and it may be from this that it has derived its flavour of polished respectability. It is a University which is finding itself today sandwiched between a 20th Century need for administrative efficiency and the traditional concepts of independent thought.

Educators are quick to point out that if there is to be large-scale education, there must consequently be large-scale administration.

The University of Toronto is big business. It runs on a whopping budget of $10,000,000 a year, not including money spent by the Arts colleges of Victoria, Trinity and St. Michael's. Its staff numbers more than 3,000 persons of which some 1,200 are professors, lecturers and assistants.

There are other Canadian Universities which can claim to be older than Toronto: Laval grew out of a Roman Catholic seminary founded as far back as 1663; the cornerstone of Dalhousie was laid in 1820; McGill received its charter in 1821. But since the turn of the Century, the University of Toronto has surged ahead as the most prominent educational institution in the Dominion.

There were days in its history when the University of Toronto had to face rougher weather. One of the problems it had to face was the new awakening taking place in a world slowly becoming aware of the importance of Lamark, Spencer and Darwin in England, scholars were looking ahead to the day when religion and learning would become divorced—at least for purposes of instruction. There came mutterings of discontent at the inevitable hand-in-glove policy of the church and the whole gamut of English education.

In Canada, the situation appeared in danger of duplication. In 1827 an institution called King's College was established at York (now Toronto), embracing all the pomp and formality of the tradition-steeped English universities: its chapel echoed to the staid monody of English plainsong; its student choir arrayed in white surplices gave out with antiphonal arrangements of the responses; at the helm of King's, steering a straight and narrow course, was a formidable, stern-faced, square-jawed cleric named the Rev. John Strachan (he later became Bishop of Toronto).

It looked very much as though the Church of England had secured a firm hold on education in Upper Canada. Yet the mere founding of King's (which in less than a decade became known as The University of Toronto) was enough to stir up a figurative hornet's nest in a youthful land lately inundated by thousands of United Empire Loyalists, many of whom had been Methodists and Presbyterians.

The injustice of King's was apparent to all but the most argumentative of Canadian Anglicans; it was insupportable that while receiving an annual grant of 1,000-pounds from public funds, the only University in Upper Canada should require its professors to subscribe to the 39 Articles of the Book of Common Prayer.

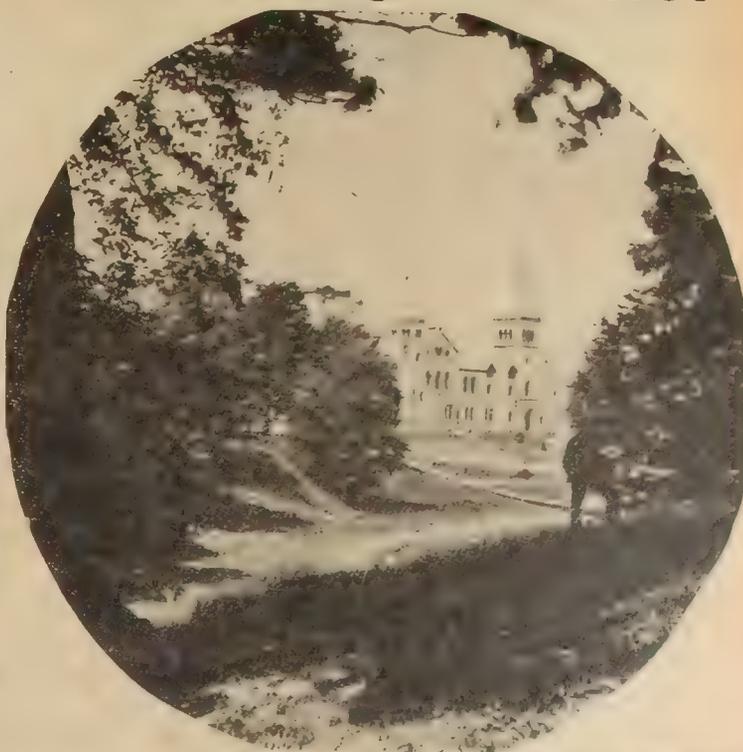

A year after the Charter for King's College was granted, the Wesleyan Methodists were thinking about financing a university at Cobourg, Ont., (Victoria was eventually founded there in 1842) and the Presbyterians, in 1841, founded Queen's University in Kingston. The Roman Catholics established Regiopolis College at Kingston in 1835. Even when some of the sharpest teeth were removed from King's College charter in 1834—permitting "dissenters" to attend lectures—a general feeling of antagonism was not much relieved.

It took over 20 years of political stratagem to put the siege on King's College. Robert Baldwin in 1849 presented the first University of Toronto act to the joint Parliament of Upper and Lower Canada. Baldwin's bill called for:

- 1) the endowments of King's College to be turned over to a new body, the University of Toronto.
- 2) Prohibition of all forms of denominational worship within the University.
- 3) State control of the University.
- 4) Abolition of the Chair of divinity in King's.

Things had come to a head. Bishop Strachan, seeing the handwriting on the King's College wall, pulled out and moved down to Queen street where, at age 72, he founded Trinity University

University College In The 1870's

The above view is of University College, seen through the trees of the landscaped park lands that used to surround the University. When this photograph was taken, about 1870, UC was about the only building in the university, and was considered an architectural wonder. Great care was taken with the layout of the grounds. Here is what the Toronto Daily Globe has to say about the University grounds in an editorial on November 16, 1895.

"Art consists in hiding artifice. Very few, perhaps who have lately visited the grounds immediately adjacent to the University imagine that much skill has been exercised in their laying out . . .

"Where a beauty presents itself, he (the architect) takes advantage of it. Nothing is done unless a reason can be given for it. If a turn is to be made some new scene opens to the view.

"The banks of the ravine have been gradually lowered. The effect is that the College University College appears to rise from the ravine from a rocky outcrop. It is seen from the carriage road to the very best advantage. . . . The carriage road steps a foot at the college. In a natural way, . . . allowing the ground to rise in an occasional angle of the ravine. . . . A surface of earth with gravelled walks and grassy banks has been placed around the building.

"The interior of the quadrangle is also ornamented with a terrace. It is proposed to establish a fountain in the centre.

We would advise parents who think of sending their sons to College to pay a visit next year. They will certainly come to the conclusion that the facilities offered by the University of Toronto are only for the benefit of the physical and intellectual of youth—the very best which can be afforded."

(which remained stubbornly aloof from affiliation with the University of Toronto until 1904).

In 1850, Baldwin's bill was passed. The new University of Toronto promptly took over the King's College building, a small three-storey stone edifice which looked like a Roman senate house—which had been built in Queen's Park in 1843. But King's was too small to accommodate the University's three faculties of arts, medicine and law. Its non-sectarian principles, moreover, ran into heavy seas, for patents were not satisfied to send their sons to an institution which Strachan once termed, "a goddess imitation of Babel."

However, in 1853, a new University act created a brand new institution called "University College" and old King's (which for several years remained standing in Queen's Park as a lunatic asylum) was closed forever.

The last big stumbling block which University of Toronto authorities had to face arose out of the projected location of the new college. The diary of John Langton, who was vice-Chancellor of the University from 1856-1860 reads like a section out of a 19th Century novel.

"It seems that His Excellency (Gov-General Edmund Walker Head) had all along thought that the South front was to face the East (west?) and nothing would satisfy him but so it must be, and under his superintendence we proceeded to measure and stake out, Cumberland's face exhibiting blank despair, for it brought his chemical laboratory where no sun would ever shine into it, his kitchen, etc., into the prettiest part of the grounds, and several other inconveniences which His Excellency said could easily be remedied. However, there stands on the ground an elm tree, a remnant of the old forest, with a long stem as such trees have and a little bush on top of it, not unlike a broom with its long handle stuck in the ground, and it soon became evident that the tree would fall a sacrifice. This he would not permit, and when I hinted that it would certainly be blown down before long, he told me that it was the handsomest tree about Toronto as it certainly is one of the tallest, and pointed out that our Canadians have a prejudice against trees. He then stalked off the grounds followed by his ADC. I thought Cumberland would have blown the whole thing up that day, he was so annoyed, but he took up the stakes and staked it out on my way with the South front facing the south and by a little stuffing and squeezing we got the tree in such a position that it may be saved. However, I bless that tree and hope its shadow may never be less for it got us out of a scrape. When the Gov. paid us a visit the next day he was quite satisfied and complimentary and in congratulating us upon the safety of the tree, he said to Cumberland, with that impertinence which Governors-General can so well indulge in, "For I am sure you can never put up anything half as pretty."

Other historical highlights: —In 1877 four-year honour courses were for the first time introduced into the curriculum (since the days of King's College the regular course had been three years

Also, the University senate set up an examining centre for women (although they were not permitted to enter the University until 1884).

—Snapped Goldwin Smith, when the idea of allowing women to enter University College was broached: "If all the young men and women of the wealthier class . . . were to be thrown together in the same colleges, Presidents would indeed have to undertake . . . the duties of a duenna (chaperone)."

—When Canada underwent Federation in 1867—breaking it into nine provinces—the University of Toronto came under the wing of the Provincial Government.

—With the making of the University of Toronto the provincial university the government decided to withhold financial support from sectarian Universities, including Victoria, Queen's, St. Michael's and Trinity.

—The aim of Robert Baldwin back in the 1840's was realized at last in 1887 when the Ontario Legislature passed an act in which Victoria University, St. Michael's College (up to that time a theological school only) became part of the University. Also included in the Federation were the affiliated divinity colleges of Knox and Wycliffe. Trinity remained aloof until 1904.

—By 1899 the University's landscape was beginning to loom much as it does today: SPS' brick home had shot up across campus from UC; Victoria College had just been completed, the biological, chemical buildings were up, as well as the University Library and Knox College. The University of Toronto was at last a reality.

UC Gutted By Fire

Picture shows University College after fire gutted entire east wing in February of 1890. Some 20,000 volumes in college Library were destroyed when conflagration rushed through building after a servant, carrying oil lamps, stumbled and fell spilling kerosene over stairs.

Because it had just gone bankrupt and stopped publication, The Varsity missed the biggest story of the century.

Among the many curiosities in the Hart House Trophy Case that relate past glories of Blue teams over the years is a miniature tiger cub, bedecked with black and gold ribbons, bearing the triumphant inscription, "Captured in Hamilton, November 26, 1910." Small reminder this, of that great day when the "Big Blue" defeated Tigers 16-7 and won the Grey Cup for the second consecutive year.

"No show, including the 1948 extravaganza or any since, could match the one staged in Hamilton on Nov. 26, 1910," says Canadian Press Sports Editor Jack Sullivan in his book "The Grey Cup Story," recently put on sale across Canada. It was the very beginning of the Dominion's annual fall classic, and this 1910 game, and the final the previous year when Varsity whipped Parkdale 26-6, were a rehearsal of the great things to come.

The Blue were coached by Dr. H. C. Griffith, now a lively octogenarian, and boasted such early greats as Hughie Gall, whose Grey Cup record of eight singles still stands, and Dr. Jack Maynard, Charlie Gage, Whisper Hume, Billy Foulds, Jack Carroll, Bert Alison, Murray Thomson, Frank Park, Jack MacDonald, Art Muir, George Jones, Alex, McArthur, Jim Pearson, Bill Cruikshank, John Dickson and Jim Barton. Big Bob (Lzy) Hyster captained the Tigers and was backed by such as Dutch Barton, Kid Smith, Art Moore, Wally Barron and Husky Craig. But the players and the score seemed almost incidental to the shenanigans of Varsity students and Hamilton rooters alike before and after the game.

"Exuberant Toronto fans travelled the 40 miles by train, boat and trolley-ho," relates Sullivan, and "congregated on downtown streets early in the morning and taunted Tiger followers who stood out like red ties at a funeral with their big black and yellow mums boldly stuck on coat lapels".

The procession of 800 members of the Hamilton Rooters Club was led by a huge banner bearing a picture of a hungry tiger, and this was followed by four grinning men carrying a coffin decked out in the Varsity blue and white, containing a dummy with an "In Memoriam" sign pinned to its breast. The Varsity bands and students followed at a safe distance—this was assured by the Hamilton gendarmes, who kept the two factions separated—and were led by the Varsity mascot, a bulldog named Dooley, wearing a blue and white coat, and with the Tigers' black and gold ribbon tied to his tail.

Once inside the Hamilton stadium, the Varsity students, equipped with song sheets, belloyed defiance at the Tiger fans in another section. Fences fell before the ticketless thousands who overflowed into the stadium and onto the field, lining up in front of the stands and preventing many from getting to their seats. The game was halted several times when police failed to keep the partisan crowd from pushing into the end zones, and Varsity students took advantage of the delays by rushing "onto the field to clean their players' cleats with wire brushes".

Meanwhile, in downtown Toronto, thousands jammed the intersections and crowded outside newspaper bulletin boards to learn the progress of the game. Police reserves were called out as the final caused traffic tie-ups in two cities for the first and last time.

"Immediately the game ended some students rushed onto the field and shouldered their heroes. Others grappled with Tiger rooters, snatched the coffin, took off the Varsity colors, substituted the black and yellow of the Tigers and marched around the field and out of the stadium." Proprietors of shops in downtown Hamilton bolted their doors and gave their employees the rest of the day off when the news spread that Varsity had won. Student high-jinks went on into the early hours of the morning and Toronto crowds were joined by the jubilant Varsity rooters returning from Hamilton the next day. A huge parade was formed with a Highlanders band in front, and the group marched to the Varsity campus where a tiger was burned in effigy.

Of such things was the history of Varsity football and the "Grey Cup Strby" made. Many long years have gone by since 1920, the last time the Blues won the Grey Cup, but throughout the colorful progress of Canada's great fall game, the University of Toronto's gridiron glory is woven. And each fall, when Grey Cup time rolls around, one is conscious of Varsity's contribution to what has become the greatest spectacle in Canadian sport. It won't soon be forgotten.

Interfaculty System Said Best On Continent

By HOWIE MANDELL and ARNIE ENGLANDER

It is considered almost heresy when speaking of the intramural athletic set-up at Varsity not to mention in the same breath John McCutcheon. Under his capable guidance the intramural system has developed into what many consider the finest on the continent. Since 1936, the year of "Mac's" appointment as Intramural Athletic Supervisor, the system has become highly organized with all the many interfaculty sports functioning under the Intramural Sports Committee, consisting of representatives of each faculty.

The history of interfaculty sports at the U. of T. dates back to 1893 when Meds and Arts met for the intramural football championship. Football was the first interfaculty sport on the campus and its prime purpose in those days was to develop talent for Varsity's rugby squad. The next year, Sir William Mulock, later Vice-Chancellor of the university, donated a trophy in order to stimulate competition between the faculties. Meds, who won in 1893, became the first holders of the cup.

In 1895, the Arts Faculty Cup for soccer was donated to Varsity. The following year, the Jennings Cup, emblematic of hockey supremacy, was won by SPS. Basketball was introduced to intramural competition in 1908. The winners received the Sifton Cup. Water polo and the Eckhardt Cup came into prominence in 1913. That same year the Brotherton Cup for harrier was presented.

1920 saw the introduction of the

In the University of Toronto Song Book compiled nearly seventy-five years ago there appears on the title page this quotation from Vergil's Aeneid "Forsan et haec meminisse juvabit," which being freely translated means "Perchance it will be pleasant in times to come to remember these things."

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of The Varsity, as "a weekly review of education, university politics and events," is a convenient occasion to recall the days of long ago and compare the privileges which the students now enjoy with the simplicity of the past. The subject of athletics in the University gives an old-timer the opportunity. But let us go back, for a moment, still further.

Before 1880

Prior to 1880, there had been no athletic organization. To quote W. J. Loudon, B.A. 1880, and for fifty years professor, "the students were few in number, their interests varied, their principal business, study; their recreation, walking." Nevertheless, it is safe to assume that games were played and physical contests indulged in, as they ever have been, where men of British stock are to be found.

The earliest instance of a College game is one at Victoria College, then at Cobourg, where on September 12, 1844 a half-holiday had been granted in honour of the Governor General, Sir Charles Metcalfe, and when, "after an excellent dinner had been partaken of by the members of the Board, the Faculty and the Students, the Board employed the day in business and the students chiefly in playing cricket."

Chief Justice Armour (B.A. 1850) in his Reminiscences in The Varsity forty-seven years later said "cricket was played now and then with the officers of regiments stationed in town but there was no organized club, the most popular games being bowling on the green at the Caer Howell Inn and racquets on the Racquet Court adjoining." (This was on the grounds now occupied by the Hydro-Electric building on University Avenue.)

In the late Sir William Mulock's time — he graduated B.A. in 1863, was Vice Chancellor of the University 1881-1900, and Chancellor 1924-1944 — the students got together in the autumn and played football where the Parliament Buildings now stand. The game was known in after years as "the old University game". In it, charging from behind, hacking and tripping were prominent features and although players were not allowed to carry the ball they might bounce it along with the hand. No other club played this type of game, and consequently no matches could be arranged. However there is in the Athletic Office a record of a game played on November 26, 1861, probably a practice game — called "a football kick" in those days, — with Mulock as captain of one side and James F. Smith (Law '62) of the other. Those playing on the Mulock side were John M. Gibson '62 (Lieut.-Governor of Ontario 1908), James Loudon '62, (President of the University 1892-1906), John King '64, (father of W.L.M.) and W. Tyler '62. As their opponents under Smith were Burnham '65, W. G. P. Cassels '62 (Sir Walter; uncle of the present University Solicitor, who also was a "giant" of fifty years later) and Russell Baldwin '66.

In a picture of the University College Football Club 1870, the ball is obviously round like a soccer ball and the playing garb anything but uniform. In the centre is S. C. Biggs, B.A. '72, Minister of Public Works for Manitoba in 1879.

Reverting again to the 'sixties the name of James Loudon recalls the memory of one of Varsity's greatest sons. Head Boy of Upper Canada College, 1858, Gold Medal and B.A. '62, Tutor, later Professor, and finally President, he was Dean of

T. A. Reed

Mr. T. A. Reed, who was Financial Secretary of the University of Toronto Athletic Association from 1914 until 1947, is without doubt the man most qualified to undertake a record of Varsity sport. "T. A." as many University of Toronto Athletics came to call him, is to this day as interested in Varsity sport as any number of the fired-up undergraduates, and his name has been indelibly written across our campus in the form of the Reed Trophy, awarded each spring to the Faculty amassing the most points in interfaculty athletic competition.

The staff of the Varsity, and especially the sports staff, are deeply grateful to Mr. Reed that his reminiscences are able to appear in this seventy-fifth anniversary issue of the Undergraduate Daily.

Residence from 1865 to 1875. A great believer in physical exercise he prevailed upon the University authorities to erect a building where the men of residence (they occupied almost the entire west wing of University College) and other students might exercise in inclement weather. It was a frame structure, little better than a shed, erected in the steward's garden (now the back campus) about 100 feet north of the University dining hall, now the Junior Common Room. It is said that Frank Somers, the steward of the dining hall, thought so little of its importance that he built a "lean-to" at the end of the building to house the pig that he was fattening to provide winter food for the men in residence.

But the erection of this building marks two things. It was the beginning of a movement example, hockey was represented by a club, consisting of a student executive, which ran intercollegiate hockey. The athletic club appointed a committee to control the intramural phase of the game. Each sport operated as a separate organization, with no relation to another club at the interfaculty level. Each club reported to the athletic society—this being their only central headquarters.

From 1932-35, the U of T studied intramural programs in many Canadian and American schools. They decided that two things were lacking—a central organization for intramural athletics and an overall championship to tie all the sports together competitively.

which today affects a very large percentage of the student body. It also marks the first practical interest of a member of the staff who recognized the importance of physical exercise as a contributory to harmonious educational development.

The needs of the undergraduates in the 'sixties were not great. There were, of course, "The games" (i.e. track and field) held sometime in the autumn, a cricket club, and a club which promoted a game somewhat similar to Association Football Competition was mainly among the students themselves, although junior members of the staff were eligible and contests were occasionally arranged with Upper Canada College. The modest building above referred to gave opportunity for further physical activities. It housed a limited amount of equipment such as horizontal bars, a vaulting-horse, flying rings and such like. It served its purpose for a time, fell into disuse, and, to quote President Loudon, "gradually disappeared, plank by plank," until razed to the ground.

In 1877 J. H. Mayne Campbell, B.A. '78, the son of a prominent Toronto family, who had received his early education at a Scottish school near Edinburgh, introduced the English Rugby Union rules at the University and captained the first Rugby team. His brother, Graham Campbell, '82, who was educated at the same school was captain of the Varsity team in 1881. (He died last summer at the great age of ninety-four, retaining a close interest in our athletics throughout his long life.) In 1878 a soccer club was formed and played under the rules of the Scottish Association.

About the year 1879 Professor Loudon again encouraged the students to approach the authorities to provide a place for indoor exercise, for the University College Literary Society, and for other extra-curricular activities. About that time a building be-

University of Western Ontario won the women's intercollegiate swimming crown for the second year in a row last week end and the best the Blue and White could do was a second place standing.

Results of the races are as follows: 50 yards butterfly; Mary UWO, Greatman, McGill and Bob Gluck, Toronto; 50 yards free style; Moser, UWO, Jean Creighton, Toronto, and Sullivan, Queen's; 50 yards breaststroke; Ellis, McGill, Kaussman Queen's and Jo Housely, Toronto; 75 yards individual medley; Tait, UWO, Greatham McGill and Jan Cunningham, Toronto; 100 yards free style; Munn, UWO, Rechin, McGill and Ada Macpherson, Toronto; 50 yards backstroke; Tait, UWO, Jan Cunningham, Toronto and Ray, McGill; 150 yards medley relay; UWO, McGill and Toronto; 200 yards free style relay; UWO, Toronto and McGill.

In the synchronized figures Joan Orser, McGill, was first followed by Barb Heenan of Toronto. In the solo, the standards were reversed with Barb taking the event. The Vic Twoomey of Joan Davie and Mary Lou Nason won the synchronized duet. Patti Patti Evel, PHE, was the top lady on the board.

Western who kept the swimming crown had 45 points compared to Toronto's 38, followed by McGill with 36 and Queen's with 19.

came vacant, which had been erected thirty years before for the Medical Faculty, and, on the abolition of medical instruction by the University in 1853 had been occupied temporarily by the University College until the completion of the handsome Norman building in 1859. From then until 1875 the building was leased to the Toronto School of Medicine.

A petition was presented to the Senate, which Professor Loudon supported with his usual forcefulness asking for an appropriation to cover certain expenses and the imposition of a fee of one dollar added to the tuition fees. The Senate made a grant of $200 which with $200 raised by the fee was adequate to meet expenses.

In a paper The White and Blue of October 1879 (it was the forerunner of The Varsity) we read, "There is some prospect of having a Gymnasium. A place in the Society's (the Lit.) building has been found and it is understood that the College Council will furnish half the cost provided the students take the initiative and make good the other half." And the same journal reporting the annual "Games" that took place on the Lawn on October 18, added that there was "a large attendance at football practices; that the chief games are football and cricket, and that the annual athletic games interest the students more than either of the former, probably on account of the value of the prizes."

Moss Hall: the first Students' Union—1880

At the first meeting of the Lit. in October 1879 it was decided on motion of W. J. Loudon, '80 to name the building Moss Hall in honour of one of our most distinguished graduates, the Honourable Thomas Moss, B.A. '58 and Vice-Chancellor of the University from 1875 to 1881.

Here were held the Literary Society elections which sometimes assumed riotous proportions. Strong-arm or brute force squads on both sides strove to keep the voters of the opposite party from entering the building. Frequently graduates were routed from their beds to come and vote and it was often daylight before the election was over.

Here too were held meetings of the Glee Club, the Modern Language Club, the Y.M.C.A. and other student organizations. In 1884 a room on the ground floor was appropriated for the editorial quarters of The Varsity which, since its beginning in 1880 had been housed in various rooms in the residence wing of University College.

And here in 1880, two of three rooms were set aside for the purpose of a Gymnasium. An undergraduate of those days said, "The equipment was elementary and quite inadequate for even a student body of 300 men. It consisted of a horizontal ladder, a horizontal bar, vaulting horse, punching bags, boxing gloves, fencing foils and dumb-bells. Where the lockers were situated I don't remember — probably in the basement near the furnace. Fortunately the ceiling of the Gym was lofty, the two rooms allotted to it being the original dissecting room and theatre of the medical school. As a rule men who indulged in out-door sports changed in their rooms in the residence except the soccer men, who mostly came from Knox or McMaster and changed in their own College, if not in the open."

A graduate of 1889 writing in The University Monthly in 1925 referring to Moss Hall as the centre of student life in those days had this to say, "It had a common-place front, bleary lighting, creaking wooden chairs and plain benches; no coats-of-arms; no gargoyled buttresses, nor Miltonic inscriptions; no theatre, common-room, swimming pool or squash courts. But it was the scene of great conflicts, high hopes and high revels and its disappearance was not the least significant of the changes which came to the University about the beginning of the last decade of the nineteenth century."

When it was demolished in 1888 to make way for the Biological Building, The Varsity of November 3 said, "Moss Hall, the abode of the Literary Society and The Varsity, has been swept away and Science has again shouldered Literature to the wall." And, Athletics were again without a home until 1893.

In the spring of 1888 a movement was started to raise funds for the building of an adequate Gymnasium but it was a large undertaking and progress was slow. It was further delayed by the disastrous fire of St. Valentine's Day 1890, which gutted the beautiful University College building. Notwithstanding these discouragements a Gymnasium Committee was formed the following year and took office in March 1892. The Committee headed by Professors Loudon, DeLury and Baker with representatives from the various years of Arts and Medicine and two men from the School of Practical Science, waited upon the Senate and were promised a grant of $25,000. This was made on the understanding that a Committee elected by the students would undertake, not only the management of the building, but the raising of the necessary funds to equip the building.

Warren Stevens, Director of Athletics at the University of Toronto since 1932, has contributed an untold amount to intercollegiate sport, and to Varsity sport in particular.

On returning to College in the fall of 1892 the students were surprised to find that excavations for the new building had already been made, but to their chagrin in the centre of the field north of University College, now called the back campus. Realizing that this would mean the loss of two good playing fields the Committee appealed to the authorities to have the location changed to a position on the edge of the Taddle ravine and south of Wycliffe College, approximately the site of the present Gymnasium. This Gymnasium was ready for occupation in the spring of 1893 and the front part with rooms for the Students' Union were added the following year.

The Athletic Association Formed

The possession of an adequate building provided a great stimulus for organized athletics. The Gymnasium Committee which had been so successful in its promotion of the building was disbanded and there was formed the University of Toronto Athletic Association which took office on October 7, 1893. Its executive committee consisted of a President, a Vice-President and a Secretary-Treasurer (all students) eight students from the four years of the Faculty of Arts; six from the Faculty of Medicine, and three from the School of Practical Science; to which were added three freshmen. The Honorary President was the President of the University, James Loudon.

This directorate took full charge of the Gymnasium, as well as the general supervision of athletics in the University. An instructor was appointed by the University Council to organize classes in physical training, gymnastics, boxing, fencing and wrestling and bayonet fighting. He was also responsible for the training, or "conditioning" of the Rugby and Hockey teams, the organizing of the annual Assault-at-Arms and was generally the mainspring of all athletic efforts.

The Rugby team which played occasionally friendly or exhibition games with Trinity, Upper Canada College, the Ontario Agricultural College and city clubs joined the Ontario Rugby Union in 1883 and was uniformly successful. But the germ of intercollegiate competition is found in the fact that from 1881 onward a game with McGill was played annually, alternately in Toronto and Montreal until 1898 when the Canadian Intercollegiate Rugby Union was formed. Queen's University also played occasionally. A famous game was thus reported in The Varsity of October 25, 1893: "It was one of the roughest matches in the history of the Ontario Rugby Union. Owing to strikes among the stone masons as well as the employees of the Kingston Street Car Company, Queen's was enabled to place their strongest team on the field. Queen's won!" However on the return game in Toronto the following week the tables were turned and the score was Varsity 16 Queen's 6. Evidently the strike was over. (Incidentally, there seems to have been no eligibility rules.)

This return game, played on the lawn in front of University College, was the first occasion at which an admission fee (25 cents) was charged, the College Council giving permission on the understanding that any person having business in the University grounds should not be charged. However this was taken care of by the energetic Rugby Committee by posting a man on each entrance and the sum of $100 realized — a large "gate" in those days.

Interfaculty Competitions

The difficulty of getting experienced players was great even then and it was two undergraduates who evolved the idea of interfaculty competition in order to develop players for the senior Rugby team. D. Bruce Macdonald, B.A. '95, M.A. '97, L.L.D. '06 (and a member of the Board of Governors 1906 — 1945 and its Chairman 1932 — 1945) and A. F. ("Biddy") Barr '96, later a famous football captain and coach deserve special mention. It was their idea that players could be developed, interest created and material provided for the senior team by the formation of a league within the University. As an incentive and to stimulate interest a trophy was suggested and Macdonald was appointed to get subscriptions. He first called on the Vice-Chancellor Mr. (later, Sir) William Mulock and asked him to head the list. Mr. Mulock asked the probable cost of a trophy and on being told, said, "get a good one and send the bill to me." Acting on this order, the Committee purchased the largest cup available. This is the famous Mulock Cup which has now been in competition for sixty-two years, without a break and is one of our most coveted trophies.

It can also be regarded as the foundation of our whole Inter-faculty system, which now, sixty-two years later, engages a large percentage of the student body.

The following year the Arts Faculty donated a cup for Interfaculty Soccer and in 1898, W. T. Jennings, an eminent civil engineer presented a cup to S.P.S. for competition in hockey which they in turn handed over to the Athletic Association for interfaculty competition. The Varsity of January 11, 1899 said, "the scientists (S.P.S.) good sports that they are, have placed the cup at the disposal of the Hockey Club to be competed for after the manner of the Mulock Cup." So for fifty-six years the Jennings Cup has been the objective for worth-while competition.

Intercollegiate Competitions

An important advance was the formation about this time of the Intercollegiate Rugby Union. On November 24, 1897 delegates from McGill, Queen's, Varsity, R.M.C. Trinity and Osgoode Hall met in Kingston, drew up a constitution and arranged schedules for the following year.

Greetings

Greetings and congratulations to The Varsity and the School of Physical and Health Education, on the occasion of your seventy-fifth anniversary. The sports coverage over the years has been well done and has been the medium for expressing to the outside world the healthy attitude of University students towards athletic competition on this campus. The Varsity has contributed in a large measure to the tremendous enthusiasm and interest which students take in the Intramural Athletic Program. It is hoped that The Varsity will take every opportunity to bring to the student body, information relative to the developments in Physical Education which have an importance in present-day living. Best wishes for the future.

Yours sincerely,
J. H. Ebbs, M.D.,
Director

The three first named formed the senior group and played the first game — Varsity at McGill on October 15, 1893; the second — Queen's at Varsity the following week.

So successful was the move, that the next year the Intercollegiate Track Meet was organized, to be followed by Hockey in 1903 and Soccer competition in 1904.

To further these and other branches of athletics the need of a central governing body to control all Intercollegiate competition became obvious. Consequently, there was organized in May 1906 the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union with a Board of Reference, consisting of three senior officials, one from each of the senior members, with power to adjudicate on all questions that might arise during the academic year.

1900 — 1914

After seven years of trial the Constitution of the Athletic Association was revised by a Committee of graduates and students who had experience in the workings of the original body. This constitution, approved by the University Council in 1900, brought all athletic clubs under the direct control of the Athletic Association and reduced the membership from a rather unwieldy Committee of twenty-five to a small but representative body consisting of three members from the Faculty, including the President of the University, one from the graduate advisory board, five undergraduates elected by the students, and a secretary-treasurer. The male registration then was less than 1,200, including 300 from Medicine and 200 from the School of Practical Science, but already the friendly rivalry between the faculties had been accelerated by interfaculty competition in several sports.

The Lawn (Front Campus) and the Campus (Back Campus) were originally the scene of all our athletic competition but in 1898 the University authorities provided an Athletic Field nearer Bloor Street for the playing of all football games. It had a covered "grand stand" to hold 400 spectators, and bleachers for 2,000. It was improved in 1909 by adding a surveyed running track, laid out under the efficient management of Vivian E. Henderson, the Secretary at that time. Due to the rapidly growing interest in college football it became necessary in 1911 to re-construct the field when a grandstand for 3,200 was erected, with a total seating capacity for 11,000 spectators. The concrete bleachers in 1921 replaced the former wooden seats and provided a total seating capacity of 15,000. In 1950 the whole of the western stand was replaced by the present open structure with a seating capacity of 27,000, and adequate dressing-room accommodation added.

Two unfortunate accidents on the football field in 1906 led to the passing of a regulation which required all athletes to be medically examined before enrolling for University sports. As a result of the Report of the University Commission of 1907 and the large increase in enrollment it had more than doubled a few years later. The Board of Governors, appointed under the University Act of 1906, decided that the time had come for a permanent official who would conduct the duties of Physical Director and Medical Director with the title of Secretary-Treasurer of the Athletic Association. Consequently in 1907 Dr. James W. Barton was appointed, during whose capable and energetic regime physical training was instituted and carried out to the great benefit of the student body. He was also instrumental in bringing about intercollegiate competition in Boxing, Fencing, Wrestling, Harrier, Tennis, Swimming, Water Polo and Basketball. Interfaculty competition was further stimulated by the presentation in 1909 of a Trophy by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, for Basketball, by Francis Davison, Esq., for Boxing, Fencing and Wrestling, and by H. P. Eckardt, Esq., for Water Polo.

In 1909 a generous offer was made by the Massey Foundation to erect a building which would accommodate student organizations such as the Students' Administrative Council, The Varsity, the Y.M.C.A. and provide space for the ever growing undergraduate social activities. Shortly afterwards the addition of a larger Gymnasium and Swimming Pool, which had for some time been under consideration, were incorporated in the plans. Hart House, as we know it today, was the outcome of these plans, which received their inspiration from an undergraduate, Charles Vincent Massey, (U.C. 1910) now His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada.

The former Gymnasium, erected as a result of student effort nineteen years before on the site of our present Gymnasium, was demolished in the summer of 1912 to allow for the speedy erection of the new building as a whole. It was expected that Hart House would be ready by 1915, but war intervened, and from 1914 to 1918 athletic activities were restricted, the intercollegiate competition suspended, the male student population was depleted and the unfinished building and the play-

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

The University of Toronto has produced many great hockey teams throughout the years, but none will ever equal the thirteen men who carried the red, white and blue of Canada to the 1923 Winter Olympics in Switzerland. Those men had all played as members of the Allan Cup finalist Varsity Blues in 1925-26 under coach Conn Smythe. Upon graduation, they decided to remain together, and thus was formed the Varsity Grads, with Smythe as coach and W. A. Hewitt, now the Registrar Treasurer of the O.H.A., as manager. They won the Allan Cup, emblematic of Canadian Senior Hockey supremacy, in 1926-27, and the following year it was St. Moritz, success, and world fame.

The capturing of the Allan Cup by the Grads was the climax of one of the most colourful seasons in hockey history. They won the Eastern Canada Championship by defeating Kitchener in a series that was highlighted by a heavy lawsuit involving a fan and referee Mike Rodden, now Sports Editor of the Kingston Whig-Standard. Then they moved out west to Vancouver's newly completed arena and the final series with Fort William.

It was a best two out of three series, and more than 12,000 people were packed into the arena for every game. Thousands more were turned away at the doors. The first game ended in a 2-2 deadlock after 20 minutes of sudden-death overtime. Fort William took the second game in overtime 3-2, but the Grads bounced back to tie the series with a 4-1 victory. It was now not a two of three series, but a sudden-death game. To the loser went nothing but the knowledge that they had lost a great series to a better team. To the winner went everything — the Allan Cup, and the chance to represent Canada in the World Championships. And then, on the eve of the game, both teams announced that they were not satisfied with the refereeing and wanted new officials.

To the Grads manager, Bill Hewitt, went the unpleasant chore of finding two referees to handle the game. He secured one in the person of ex-Varsity star Beattie Ramsey, but another could not be found. For awhile, it seemed as though the game would not be played, but Bill Hewitt had been ordered to produce referees and produce them he did. Frank Patrick, whose brother, Lester, was for many years the guiding light of the New York Rangers, was the owner-manager of the Vancouver Arena. Frank had not been on skates for two years, but it was he who refereed that final game with Ramsey. As Mr. Hewitt related to us in his office last week, "I told Frank that all he had to do was stand at centre ice and call the off-sides, and that's just what he did."

That game was a memorable event for radio listeners as well. Bill Hewitt telegraphed the game from rinkside to the telegraph office in Toronto. In the Toronto office was a man with a microphone, and it was that game, coming to us early one morning in 1927, when Foster Hewitt first delivered his now famous, "Hello Canada..."

The game itself was tied 1-1 at the end of regulation time. In the middle of the sudden-death overtime period, with the referees exhausted, the fans roaring continuously, and hundreds of radio fans on the edge of their seats, Grad defenseman Ross Taylor slammed home the puck to climax one of Canada's most dramatic hockey series, and sent the Grads to Europe the following year.

Along with the Canadian contingent of entries in the Winter Olympics, the Grads arrived in Antwerp early in February of 1928. There they took advantage of a few practices on artificial ice at the Antwerp Arena, and then it was off to St. Moritz and the World Tournament.

After the Olympic Hockey Officials had had a look at the Grads in practice, they decided that the Canadian entry was too strong for the other teams, so they put them in a group by themselves. Captain Red Porter led his team to the ice three times and each time skated off with a smashing victory. Sweden fell first 11-0, then Switzerland 13-0, and the final victory over Great Britain was by an overwhelming 14-0 score.

The easy manner in which they won these games seems to be rather an anti-climax to the hard struggle they had the year before with Fort William. Yet, not only did they win, but they won with the finesse and sportsmanship of a Canadian hockey team. Canada was proud of the Varsity grads.

Varsity Hockey Boasts Long, Colourful Career During Past 65 Years

The game of hockey first saw the light of day, on the University of Toronto campus, in the winter of 1891, and strangely enough, it was a challenge from McGill University which first stirred up hockey interest here. McGill had been playing in the Hockey League of Ontario since 1885. Toronto organized teams which played in Ontario Hockey Association groups for several years. In 1903, the first Intercollegiate Hockey Union, with entries from McGill, Queen's and Varsity, was formed, and Queen's donated the Queen's Cup, which has been emblematic of Intercollegiate hockey supremacy ever since.

McGill and Queen's dominated play in the League until 1906, when Varsity captured its first championship. The same team next year won the Amateur Championship of North America.

Meanwhile, on the Varsity campus, interfaculty competition was underway for the Jennings Cup. In 1910, fifteen teams participated, with Victoria the winner.

After a few lean years, Varsity brought the Queen's Cup back to Toronto in 1911. The Juniors went to the O.H.A. finals three years later before succumbing to Orillia. The stars of that club were Captain Bill Milne and, as The Varsity put it, "little Conn Smythe." The following year, they defeated the Berlin Union Jacks (Kitchener) to win the Ontario championship.

The war put a temporary halt to intercollegiate play, and when it resumed in 1919, Varsity dominated the scene, winning ten successive championships. In 1921-22, they went right through all their games without a defeat, and brought the Allan Cup to Toronto.

In 1922-23 when Varsity lost their group final to the Toronto Granites, Lou Marsh wrote in the Toronto Star, "When Varsity went down last night one of the cleanest teams of sportsmen that ever represented a Club or College in amateur hockey in Canada was submerged in the sea of defeat and they went down fighting gallantly to the last."

In the mid-20's, while the Grads were overseas, L. B. (Mike) Pearson coached the Varsity team, and the championships kept coming. In 1926, a dream came true with the construction of Varsity Arena.

In 1930, McGill took over, and with the exception of one year, held the Queen's Cup until 1939. Ace Bailey began a rebuilding job when he took over the Blues in 1936, and it was that year that the International Intercollegiate League was formed, with teams from Dartmouth, Yale, Harvard, Princeton, McGill, University of Montreal, Queen's and Toronto. This League lasted for four years, and McGill won the Thompson trophy three times. Varsity brought the cup back to Toronto in 1940, as the only game they lost that year was an exhibition contest for war relief, Torontonensis commented in its 1941 issue, "Five years of work and sacrifice on the part of Ace Bailey and Warren Stevens has been finally rewarded and the handsome Thompson Trophy comes to Toronto."

From the end of the war until 1953 the Queen's Cup was shuffled back and forth between Toronto and Montreal. Then came the season of 1954-55 and a near perfect year.

The Varsity Blues last year won eleven and tied one, and were described by Warren Stevens as "the greatest hockey team the University of Toronto had produced in his 23 years at the University."

It is needless to say that our hockey teams have had a long and colorful career. They have won 21 Intercollegiate championships, four Allan Cups, one Ontario Senior championship, one Ontario Junior championship, and of course, the World Championship in 1928. This year's Blues have a great record to uphold. They have the coach and they have the players; all they need is our support.

Cage Blues Tops In Past Mustangs Best Since War

For the past eleven years the Intercollegiate Basketball story has been written by John Metraş and his University of Western Ontario Mustangs. The purple and white crew have captured the Wilson Trophy, emblematic of Intercollegiate basketball supremacy every year since the end of the war.

Although Varsity's cage Blues haven't been too successful in recent seasons, they and McGill's Redmen were the terrores of the hoop loop in its early years. The Intercollegiate Basketball League was formed in 1909 with a strong U. of T. squad carting away the silverware that season. The next year McGill took the trophy back to Montreal and for the next 20 seasons the championship found its home on both campuses an equal number of times.

One of the most exciting seasons of basketball occurred in 1939 when Varsity, McGill and Western ended the season in a three-way tie for first place. The Blues started off by winning four games in a row and went to London confident of extending their unbeaten string. With only three minutes of play remaining Varsity had a 39-32 lead. Then one of Western's players, a fellow named Joe Krol, went wild and led his squad to a 41-39 victory. From that season on Western has always provided a power packed squad.

Varsity have never had any giants on their team. The tallest man ever to don a Varsity uniform was big Bud Natanson who measured 6'7". Some of the other players who have gone down in University of Toronto basketball fame are Frank Dougherty, John Powers and George Stulac.

This year's team under new head coach John McManus shapes up as one of the best the Blues have had in recent years. McManus will have seven of last year's regulars in action again in Pete Potter, Ruby Richman, Leo Madden, Al Vaichulis, Vic Kurdyak, Marv Tile, and Florian Matsalla. John Dacysyn, who was the leading scorer on last year's Intermediates will probably start at centre. Dacysyn is the tallest of a generally short squad, at 6'4".

The cry that this is Varsity's year to end Western's domination of the Wilson Trophy is out and this year's team seems to be the one that can do it.

Cage, Ice Blues Trip To States

Varsity basketball and hockey Blues leave shortly for points in the United States and exhibition games with top American College teams.

The ice Blues face a four-game series in the next seven days with Denver University and Colorado College, flying tonight to Denver from Malton.

John MacManus and his cagers have games with Seton Hall, Iona, and Fairleigh-Dickinson this week before returning for their first home game December 7 against Buffalo State.

ing fields were largely used for military training. A temporary wooden Gymnasium on Trinity field provided limited facilities in the interim.

In 1914 a permanent Financial Secretary was appointed to relieve the Physical Director of the strictly office routine and financial responsibilities. In the seven years, 1907-1914, the male attendance had again doubled; the enrollment being over 2,700, viz., 1645 in Arts, 560 in Medicine and 626 in Applied Science. The attendance at football games had increased to such an extent that the financial and office management could only be adequately handled by a full-time official.

At this point it would be fitting to pay tribute to those who gave generously of their time and influence to further the interests of the undergraduates, namely C. H. C. Wright, '93, Professor of Architecture; A. T. DeLury, '90, Professor of Mathematics and Dean of Arts; and Dr. W. B. Hendry, U.C. '95, Med. '04. These men sat on the Athletic Board for many years.

On the opening of the University in the fall of 1919 and the completion of Hart House athletics were resumed on a larger scale than ever before. The enrolment of male students, many of whom had served overseas, was 3,700. Intercollegiate competition was revived and expanded and the new Gymnasium Wing under the control and direction of the Athletic Directorate, provided facilities for its greater development. Compulsory Physical Training for students in the First and Second years was instituted by the Board of Governors of the University and the administration placed in the hands of the Athletic Directorate. A larger instructional staff was provided and interfaculty competition increased in all branches of athletics. About this time Interfaculty Trophies were presented for Swimming by A. M. Fitzgerald, S.P.S. '23; for Track and Field by the Victoria College Athletic Union in memory of William Langford Rowell, Vic. '24, a distinguished track athlete on the Intercollegiate team; Frank Y. McEachren for the individual champion in Tennis.

In 1921 a University Health Service was established under the direction of Dr. George D. Porter (Med. '94) who also undertook the medical examination of students for both Physical Training and all branches of athletics. Dr. Porter in his student days had been an outstanding Track athlete — for three years University champion — and he brought to his department a knowledge and enthusiasm for the needs of the undergraduate. As Medical Director he sat, ex-officio, on the Directorate to the great advantage of that body.

In 1926 plans for an artificial ice-rink, which had been suggested from time to time during the previous twenty years, were seriously considered. Our President at that time, Professor M. A. Mackenzie, pointed out to the Board of Governors the great need of such an Arena for the extension of our athletic facilities. The Board finally agreed to its construction on the understanding that the Athletic Association would finance the erection and provide for its maintenance. The building was completed in December of that year and has fully justified the vision of its promoter.

After sixteen years of devoted service in the cause of athletics both in our own University and in the Intercollegiate Union, Professor Mackenzie retired as President in 1932, but continued for four years as a Faculty Member. His successor in office, Dr. J. A. McCollum, Med. 1901, a member of the Advisory Board for many years and its representative on the Athletic Directorate, brought to its counsels the benefit of wide experience, both as a student-athlete, and as a graduate who had kept in close touch with University athletics. On his death in 1944 Dr. McCollum was succeeded by Professor T. B. Tommey ("Tommy") Loudon, a member of the S.P.S. Staff, an athlete since his student days, and coach for many years of the Rowing Club. In 1924 he took the senior crew to represent Canada at the Olympics in Paris, France. It reached the final only to be beaten by a powerful crew from the United States. He

Football History Goes Way Back Big Blue Best In Earlier Years Varsity In Four Grey Cup Wins

In all the annals of Varsity athletics nothing has occupied the attention of the sporting world more than the often bloody and more times glorious campaigns of the "Big Blue" on gridirons across the nation.

From its very earliest days, when the Year Book of 1887 reported that there had been a game played on the campus that could be considered a primitive form of the sport, "... although the players were not allowed to carry the ball, they might bounce it along with the hand," until today when strong-armed quarterbacks throw 50-yard touchdown passes with apparent abandon, football has been the highlight of the fall season at the University.

After Varsity adopted English rugby rules in 1877, the first Intercollegiate game was held in 1881 against McGill. The contest soon became a classic and was played annually with Toronto and Montreal alternating as the site of the struggle.

In those days of glory the players bought their own equipment and paid their own fares to out-of-town games, a far cry from the systematized trips of today. Eligibility apparently meant little to the league before the turn of the century, for the Varsity of 1893 reported that the Toronto-Queen's game was "one of the roughest matches in the history of the union Owing to strikes among the stonemasons as well as the employees of the Kingston Street Car Company, Queen's was enabled to place their strongest team on the field, Queen's won." The strike was evidently over before the return game, and Varsity won it 16-6.

Five years later the Intercollegiate Union was formed after Dr. Henry Bridges Yates, a McGill grad of 1893, and a former Redmen football captain, presented the Yates Cup for annual competition. For many years after, that the college champion played with other football clubs for the Dominion title, and thus the Blues have won not only thirteen Intercollegiate championships since 1898, but four Grey Cups as well.

The Blues were best in 1909-1910 and 1911, winning the Dominion title each year, with one of the greatest teams ever brought together in the days of two-backs-and-a-kick. Spearheading the backfield was Dr. Smilie Lawson, the original "Big Train," and the fine kicking of Hughie Gall was a feature of the Varsity attack.

Gall's record of eight singles in the Cup game of 1909 still stands unchallenged.

Unfortunately nearly all of this great team had graduated when in 1912 one of the biggest events in Varsity football history occurred. The occasion was a visit by the immortal Jim Thorpe and his Carlisle Indians to do battle with the "Big Blue." Elaying the first half under American rules, the Indians romped to a 4-0 lead with Thorpe scoring most of the touches, and the Varsity reported that "the consensus of opinion is that his superior has never been seen in action in these parts, and possibly his equal."

A much better showing was made in 1924 when Varsity played the University of Detroit. The lateral passes of the Canadians fooled the Americans in the first half when Canadian rules were used, but under the American code in the second half the Detroit crew went ahead 30-18. The forward pass was still foreign to the Canadian game.

Other great teams pirated in the following years, with Wamie Snyder gaining fame in 1926, and then in 1928 the Orphans, made up of freshmen, cast-off etc, and starring all-time great Long John Sinclair, put the Blues and everyone else to shame.

The 1932 team was the beginning of a new era. Warren Stevens took over the coaching, the forward pass was introduced, and with Sinclair now with the Blues Varsity won the Yates Cup.

The thirties were fat years for Toronto, with such great names as Bob Izbister, Cam Gray, Gus Greco, Doug Turner and the American duet of Marks and Connelly winning fame in the Blue uniform.

Western joined the union in 1929, and then began the great years of competition that have marked the progress of Canadian College football to the present day.

With competition discontinued during the war years of 1940-45 the league came to a standstill. Exhibition games were arranged with clubs throughout the province and then in 1946 the league resumed play with Western copping the Yates. Since then the union has been dominated by the Mustangs and the Blues without fal until this last fall when the Golden Gaels finally emerged as champions.

With such a great record in the past, and with the resurgence of Queen's and McGill as possible football powers, the Intercollegiate union is entering upon what may be its best years.

By FLO MIDDLETON

It is hardly ironical at all that in the anniversary issue of The Varsity 1930, big headlines announced that "a women's gymnasium looms in the near future". Here we are in 1955, and the women's building still has not been built. Let's hope that the "powers that be" can see their way clear by the time the hundredth anniversary issue makes the press that the buildings is an actuality.

In spite of the fact that the girls of the University of Toronto are hampered by lack of facilities, this has not stopped the women of this University from taking an active part both at the Interfaculty or the Intercollegiate level, and the passing years have seen a great forward advance for women's sports on this campus.

Although basketball is one of the foremost sports for girls now it was not until February 5, 1909, that a game was reported in The Varsity and in that tussle in which there seemed to be a lack of standardization of rules, St. Hilda's downed the University. Before that date there was an occasional reference to women's basketball, but no actual record of any games played was kept. In 1907, it was decided to play the game according to men's rules and two teams were chosen.

It was not until 1910, that a league was organized with St. Hilda's, Victoria and the University and it is this same league which is responsible for our present schedule however, in the intervening years the league has greatly increased to take in all the colleges and faculties in which women are registered. At that time, the decision was made to use girls' rules and for a long time, it was St. Hilda's who captured the championships.

In 1921, upon receipt of letters from McGill and Queens, an intercollegiate organization was set up and it was sanctioned by the President of the University. As a result a Women's Athletic Directorate was organized on the same lines as the men's. The Constitution of the Directorate was passed by the Caput in time for Toronto to play in the first intercollegiate tournament held in 1921 at Kingston. Toronto proved to have the best team.

Hockey, which is one of the most popular sports on the campus today, seems to have enjoyed the same enthusiasm back in the days of our grandmothers for as early as January 29, 1901 a league was organized at St. Hilda's, Victoria and University College. As in basketball, in the early years it was the Trinity women who walked off with all the honors. In 1921 there was an intercollegiate tournament at McGill and the Blue and White won. It is a shame that we, at the so-called modern age, cannot have an intercollegiate competition.

Back in 1895, a fencing class was organized and this sport of the sabres seemed to have been one of the most popular sports of the time, but it popularity waned with the coming of basketball and hockey. In 1910, saw the first interfaculty swimming competition, but that was more on an individual basis than the present one in which college participation is stressed.

The Women's Athletic Association was founded in 1901 with the representatives of the three schools then played tennis, swimming and hockey. Since then the box has grown to include volleyball, archery, badminton, bowling, long and short volleyball. This is a creditable indication of the evolution of women's sports on the University of Toronto campus.

organization brought all interfaculty teams to a central point, headed by Mr. McCutcheon and his able secretary, Miss K. Boyd. The presidents of the college athletic societies then formed an Intramural Sports Committee which operates the intramural program.

The committee inaugurated an all-year high point championship, by which competing colleges and faculties were given points for entering teams and winning games. Competing colleges of that year contributed money to buy the T. A. Reed trophy, named after Mr. Reed, who was financial secretary of the athletic society for many years.

This trophy encouraged competition. Prior to its inception, two teams were allowed to be entered from each college in a intramural sport. Entries were now allowed for extra teams, so that every league sport that operates is under a restricted level—the number of teams is restricted by the facilities.

Last year there were 4,139 registered in the Intramural Program. This was 49.3 per cent of the eligible student body. The figure of 4,139 fluctuates very little from year to year and is indicative of total use of all facilities. What does change is the percentage able to play—during World War Two, 75 per cent participated, but in the post-war period, only 35 per cent competed. If the indicated increase in college attendance materializes, there will have to be either increased facilities or a drop in percentage. Outside of the increase in capacity of Varsity Stadium, there hasn't been any increase in facilities since 1924.

In addition to the Intramural Sports Committee, each sport has a standing committee for intramural athletics, with the specific responsibility of operating the league for that sport.

Each team has a manager, representing the team. In the larger colleges and faculties, where there are many teams, a curator is appointed to administer all the teams of that sport in his college.

The Intramural Athletic Office, which is the focal point for the entire organization, handles the details of officials, schedules, standings etc. Each day about 100 managers and officials enter the office.

Varsity's intramural set-up is one that can well be admired by other universities.

Found The Greats Of Yesteryear

retired in 1954 after ten years of faithful service.

In 1932 a further advance was made in the appointment of Mr. Warren Stevens as director of Athletics. The University enrollment included over 5000 male students and the need of a permanent Director had, for some years, been apparent. From 1932 to 1939-40 when intercollegiate competition was suspended on account of war, there was a steady growth and improvement in organization. In 1936, an Intramural Sports Committee, consisting of athletic representatives from the Faculties and Colleges was set up to administer, under the direction of the Athletic Directorate, the rapidly increasing intramural program. In the session 1954-55 the total number of participants on the 321 interfaculty teams and in the 25 tournaments and meets amounted to 4184. Allowing for duplication there were 2550 individual students who took part in the Intramural Athletic programme.

When to this number is added the members of Intercollegiate teams and those taking Physical Training and voluntary recreation, it is a conservative estimate that 70 per cent of the male undergraduates take advantage of the facilities provided under the administration of the University of Toronto Athletic Association.

Further gifts of handsome trophies for interfaculty competition were made by Dr. W. A. Datoe for Box Lacrosse (1932), the Victoria College Staff for Volleyball (1934), by friends of the late Don M. Barton (a member of the Gymnasium Staff from 1919 to 1935) for Gymnasiums (1937), the Massey Foundation, a handsome bronze figure of a boxer for Individual Boxing (1938), and by the Victoria College Tennis Club in 1939 for Team Competition in Tennis.

This then is a brief record of the past. To those who had vision for the future, graduates, staff and undergraduates, who gave of their best and "humbled better than they knew," the University owes a debt that can never be repaid. May the students of to-day follow the same high ideals and uphold, as their predecessors have done, the honour of the "Blue and White."

Out Of The Past

Moss Hall, the first and once the only building of the University of Toronto, was built in 1850 and torn down again in 1888, after an eventful history. "The Varsity" was once housed there.

ONE TO MANY, STU

By MARG VASILEFF

Two world wars, overcrowding, constant canvassing for funds, and a general spirit of optimism marked the history of the University's buildings.

In 1827 George IV granted the charter which resulted in the establishment of the University of Toronto, then known as King's College, Upper Canada. Early classes were held in the Parliament Buildings on Front Street, while the college itself was being built. On April 23, 1842, the foundation stone was laid with a fantastic flourish that included a procession to Queen's Park, accompanied by an escort of dragoons, and "fire and hook and ladder companies". Latin orations, prayers, music, and a salute of 19 guns followed.

The south-east wing of the new buildings in Queen's Park were completed by 1845, and opened as a residence with the following regulation: "The College gate was to be closed at 10 p.m. in summer and 9:30 p.m. in winter; and any student entering the College gate after these hours was to be fined."

1850 marked the end of King's College and the beginning of the University of Toronto. When a bill was passed to abolish ecclesiastical control and replace it by government control, Dr. McCaul, head of the former King's College, became the first president.

Now ejected from the Parliament Buildings with only the Queen's Park residence at its disposal, the new University was faced with the problems of overcrowding and the lack of popular support. Many people thought the new university was nothing less than a "godless institution," and Bishop Strachan labelled it "a godless imitation of Babel".

The Hincks Act of 1853 attempted to remove criticism by making it possible for the various religious denominations to train students in their own colleges, while giving them opportunity to obtain degrees offered by the Provincial university. But other drastic changes were needed, for only Vice-chancellor McCaul, and not one other member of the teaching staff of University College, had any voice in determining the courses of study.

A continual shuffling of the University from the old King's College building, back to the Parliament Building on Front Street, back to King's College and finally to Moss Hall occupied several years. The final insult was the Government's appropriating the Old King's College building for a branch lunatic asylum, named the "University Lunatic Asylum".

Finally in 1856 plans for the present University College were drawn up. A general controversy arose as to whether the rupted the project, which did not re-commence until 1919. St. Hilda's College had started in 1888 with four girls in a house in Trinity Square. On its 50th anniversary in the Autumn of 1938, the new St. Hilda's residence on Devonshire Place opened.

Women's Union opened in 1916, having been renovated from a dingy Faculty Residence. The girls of the College made the curtains and cushions, and planted shrubs in the garden, probably enthused by the pleasant announcement that they might bring their men friends there to tea on Sunday afternoons.

Another delay in projects was caused by the war of 1939. However at the end of the war the spacious home of the late Sir Joseph Flavelle at the north-west corner of Queen's Cres. was converted from WRCNS barracks into a men's residence, although a rumour had circulated that it was to be a women's union.

Post-war construction has continued up to the present time with renovations such as the Arbor Room, and UC Junior Common Room, additions such as the New Trinity College Chapel, just being consecrated this month, and the erection of such architectural wonders as the Sir Daniel Wilson's men's residence.

With Hart House, the Gothic Memorial Tower and Carillon of Bells to honor war heroes just erected, the 1920's found building campaigns vigorously continued. The house of the late R. J. Christie at 29 Queen's Park was purchased by St. Joseph's College for a residence in 1926. That same year the new Varsity Arena opened, with a famous Alumni team in the Ontario Hockey Association.

By 1929 the new Emmanuel College, and the men's residence were being planned for erection on Queen's Park Cres.

several buildings read: "This Building Closed Until Further Notice." Professors and lecturers decided to carry on work wherever possible in other buildings, leading to one of the rare occasions that the men students were officially welcomed into women's residences.

One story from the old Varsityes tell how one of the maids at 184 College St. found a French Dept. professor wandering about upstairs in a bewildered state looking for his classroom. A lecturer at the head of the heat laboratory of the Dept. of Physics contrived his own heating apparatus for the laboratory by using a few large gas burners, and a few upright structures made of bricks, surmounted by large dishes of water. Medical Students solved their problem by taking lectures in the General Hospital.

STUDIES
The course of Studies is divided into two Departments: one Commercial and the other Classical. The first is adapted to such pupils as require only a limited education, suitable to the ordinary conditions of life.

This course comprises Reading, Writing, Study of the English and French languages, Arithmetic, book-keeping, the Elements of Geometry, Algebra, and Surveying, History, Geography, and Natural Philosophy.

The second course is intended for pupils who are preparing for a more liberal profession, and embraces, besides the above elementary branches, the study of the Latin and Greek languages, a more extensive course of Mathematics and Natural Science, Belles-Lettres, History, ancient and modern. In both departments the students are exercised in literary compositions according to their capacities and advancement.

They may also receive, when parents desire it, lessons in music and drawing. There will be also attached to the College a suitable collection of apparatus to enable the students to acquire a more complete knowledge of Natural Philosophy, Gymnastic Exercises are established in order to contribute to the physical development of the students.

From Hart House

Congratulations to the old but ever-young undergraduate newspaper of the University of Toronto. It is quite an achievement for an individual to reach the age of three score and fifteen; it is an equally satisfying achievement when an institution such as The Varsity reaches this ripe and mature old age.

But the important thing about The Varsity is not that it is old but that year after year it expresses the ideas of that youthful community which is made up largely of the undergraduate members of the University. There are those in our community for whom the publication of our daily newspaper is a pretty casual matter, it must not be forgotten, however, that the successive annual volumes of The Varsity constitute an enduring and permanent record of life on this campus. From day to day and from year to year The Varsity reflects the questionings, the criticism, the enthusiasm and perhaps even the follies of a young, exuberant and idealistic community.

For persons outside the University circle The Varsity is much more than a voice of student opinion; it is in a very real sense accepted as the voice of the University. While being faithful to its function as an undergraduate newspaper, it also has the heavy responsibility of interpreting the life and activities of the University community to a very much wider circle. This dual role is not an easy one and the responsibility which rests on the editorial staff is a heavy one.

On the occasion of your 75th anniversary I offer my congratulations and express the hope that, increasingly, The Varsity may adequately fulfil its function as a reporter of University life—the interpreter of University thought,—and as a unifying influence not only on the campus itself but between the campus and the larger community of which we form a part.

Joseph McCulley
Warden of Hart House

From Forestry

On behalf of the Faculty of Forestry I should like to join with the many others on this campus and elsewhere in congratulating The Varsity on the celebration of its 75th anniversary. This is a goodly age indeed and one which in retrospect reaches well back into the history of this country and must rival that of many of our metropolitan and urban newspapers.

So far as I am aware there are no indications that The Varsity is developing those characteristics of decadence and passivity that are sometimes associated with old age. On the contrary, if our university paper is fulfilling its primary function—that of providing a medium for the free expression of the thoughts, ideas and opinions of the student body—it must inevitably acquire some of the attributes of perpetual youth which combined with the maturity of tradition and experience, rather than mere age, would seem to be an important factor for its success.

The valuable experience and training in journalism gained by members of your staff and the day-to-day reporting of events in different categories and representing many spheres of interest are two further important functions of your paper, the latter being particularly significant in a small unit within a large and complex institution such as ours.

The success of The Varsity in the past may be judged by its development over the years, its position it now holds in the University and the recognition has received from time to time in open competition. May it be responsible for its future build firmly on this foundation.

From Library

As custodian of the only seventy-five-year file of The Varsity, which from volume one onward has reflected the daily life of this university and preserved something of its bouquet, I feel qualified to extend congratulations to the present editors on the occasion of their jubilee issue.

It is a truism that periodicals increase their value with age, and doubtless some distant successor of mine will, on state occasions, reverently unveil the crumbling covers of volume seventy-five, in front of the shame which houses the basket containing the hallowed dust of volume number one.

While the antiquity of a journal enhances its value in the out-of-print market, there is a sense also in which a truly venerable paper such as The Varsity acquires, cumulatively, a more intangible quality—a sort of patina of reputation and prestige which adds a lustre to its pages.

It would be a pity, of course, if this heavy tradition should impose its weight too heavily on the present; fortunately an undergraduate journal has an automatic method of renewing its youth, and we can be reasonably confident that during the next seventy-five years of its existence The Varsity will continue to be as lively and entertaining, and as faithful a mirror, as it has been since 1880.

Yours sincerely,
Robert H. Blackburn,
Chief Librarian, U. of T.

From Law

A student paper such as The Varsity has the task not merely of representing student opinion but of assuming leadership in the formulation of that opinion. The proper conduct of these objectives and their reconciliation is far from easy.

To perform them effectively, requires courage in the expression of opinions not always acceptable to the administrative or teaching staff. Further, those in charge of such a project are faced with the extremely difficult task of repairing irresponsible, negative and destructive opinion from the constructive and affirmative, however irreverently the latter may be expressed.

When one considers that this must be done in the name and on behalf of one of the most critical audiences in modern society—the undergraduate students—the task is one presenting not merely opportunities but terrifying responsibilities. I am quite sure that many editors must have felt that they could satisfy neither their constituents nor the powers that be.

Notwithstanding these difficulties, The Varsity has, throughout the years, been firm when it felt firmness was required; has chided and reproved when, in its opinion, chastisement was necessary; and what has preserved a sense of humor and the virtue of taking itself not too seriously, both of which are the saving grace of the educated, or at least the civilized, man.

Cecil A. Wright,
Dean, Faculty of Law

EXTRACT FROM THE REGULATIONS OF THE COLLEGE

3rd. No pupil admitted into the College unless he knows how to read and write passably.

4th. Every pupil will have to present, on entering, a certificate of good conduct and docility either from his Parish Priest, or if he had been in another college, from the President thereof.

5th. All letters received or sent by the students pass through the hands of the President or one of the Directors; the students will write to their families, at least once a month; all letters addressed to them should be prepaid.

6th. No student allowed to go out into the city, unless in cases of urgent necessity, and as the President alone shall think proper to permit.

CLOTHING

7th. All the pupils are obliged to wear a uniform on Sundays and walk-days. The uniform will consist of a black frock coat, waist-coat and pantaloons same color.

From Architecture

It is a pleasure to join those who are saying "congratulations" to The Varsity on the occasion of its seventy-fifth anniversary. Including my student days it has been my privilege to observe the development of The Varsity during nearly two thirds of that time. The publication has expanded in size over the years, but I also feel that it now expresses undergraduate opinion more liberally.

Various articles on architecture have been included from time to time. Some student comments have gone so far as to criticize the design of recent buildings in the University or elsewhere. If my recollection serves me rightly such frankness would not have appeared in the past. Whether we agree with the opinions of the critic or not is not so important. Such articles do stimulate thought, interest and discussions, which might not otherwise take place. Architecture is a visual art. Architecture is a many-sided thing. Illustrations of selected buildings might interest only in interest to cities led to a parade about more of them? Examples of architecture, I mean.

I wish The Varsity success.

In Congratulation Concur

Upper Canada Academy Became Victoria College

We have every confidence in the future of the University to which we owe our existence. We believe it is destined to rank among the first educational forces in the world. To this university Victoria comes; of it may she prove a worthy member."

Thus was Victoria College welcomed into the federation of the University of Toronto at the annual Convocation Day in 1886. Founded in 1836 in Cobourg, Ontario, through the efforts of the Methodist Church, Victoria was first known as Upper Canada Academy. Established under a Royal Charter granted by William IV, five years later, under this same charter, the academy was renamed Victoria College.

Always an integral part of Vic was its religious life. Its founders, facing strong opposition as a minority group, had to be strong in their faith to succeed. The evangelistic spirit played a prominent role in the early days of the College, an example of this being the old feud between the "Plugs" or converted students, and the remainder the Bloods for whose salvation the Plugs prayed.

One phase however, in which he does not take part, and which has been a subject of much controversy, is that of fraternities. In the early days these existed at Vic, and were societies of the highest calibre. Yet it was felt somehow that their presence threatened the democratic principles and family atmosphere within the College, and it is a tribute to the students that it was without the compulsion of authority that eventually they ceased.

At the outbreak of World War I, pacifist sentiment was high at Victoria. It was a pacifism that grew out of high ideals which refused at first to recognize a foe, but once members did, they gave to the soldier fighting qualities strengthened by conviction, for "they knew what they fought for, and loved what they knew."

Six hundred and forty-two Victoria students took part in the war, many were decorated, and one received the Victoria Cross. The memory of the 74 who died will continue to enrich the College for as long as it stands.

The chimes are stroking five and the walk between Vic and Wymilwood is dotted once more with moving figures. It is a chill fall afternoon, the wind whips bright scarves around the collars of their wearers and snatches bits of conversation away with it—"Hey, did you hear we beat Skule?," "See you at 10 tomorrow in the Coffee Shop." From the top of Emmanuel the fragments of a brilliant autumn sunset slowly fade, taking with them yet another day.

"... To this University Victoria comes; of it may she prove a worthy member."

The Ol' Vic Strand

Vic stands on the old Victoria strand once Cobourg and now Queen's Park, where my father sent me resolved that I should be a man.

From Vic

I take great pleasure in sending the heartiest congratulations of Victoria University to The Varsity on the occasion of its Seventy-fifth Birthday.

Three-quarters of a century of university journalism is a notable record and one who speaks well of the quality of the paper produced and the abilities of those men and women who have produced it. The Varsity has played an important role in the complex life of the University of Toronto. The responsibility of the far and interesting recitation of the events of the whole Campus belongs to this paper.

At the same time its pages must become a medium for carrying on worthy and stimulating discussions upon the issues that concern university students.

The Varsity has succeeded in discharging its responsibilities in these regards and in doing so has trained generations of students in the ways of effective journalism. It is a matter for gratification to all that in its Seventy-fifth Anniversary Year the paper will still be going strong in all departments.

Our congratulations and good wishes to you!

Sincerely yours,
A. B. B. Moore,
President,
Victoria University.

From Affiliation To Faculty By Pharmaceutical Fellows

By RALPH BERRIN

Pharmacy has been affiliated with the University since 1892, and a Faculty of the University since 1953. Sixty-one years is slow assimilation on the University's part; and a careful relinquishing of the teaching function on the part of the Ontario College of Pharmacy.

The Ontario College of Pharmacy has licensed practitioners of Pharmacy since 1871, taught Pharmacy since 1882 and erected the first building for the teaching of Pharmacy in Canada in 1886. The present modern building is upon the site of the old, at 44 Gerrard St. East.

In 1892 the University established the degree of Bachelor of Pharmacy (Phm.B) for the one-year course. A two-year course was instituted to cover the rapidly expanding subject in 1927.

September 1948 saw the first group of students enroll in the new four-year course; graduating in 1952 with the degree, Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy (B.Sc. Phm.). This course together with the Ontario Grade XIII entrance requirements compares equally with the five-year course in Pharmacy which will not be required in U.S. universities till 1960.

Just seventeen and a half minutes from the campus (by cutting through Eaton's College St. store) is the University's youngest faculty, the Faculty of Pharmacy.

From Pharmacy

On behalf of the Faculty of Pharmacy I extend warm congratulations to The Varsity on its 75th birthday.

When a newspaper has survived the vicissitudes of three-quarters of a century it may be regarded as having achieved the status of an "institution" within its sphere of influence. That The Varsity should have attained this status may be attributed in no small measure to its founders and to those who guided its destinies during the early decades.

On this anniversary we salute these pioneers as well as those who followed them and contributed to the building of the present structure.

It is axiomatic but worth recalling that The Varsity could never have survived seventy-five years had its founders and its successive editors not, in what might be termed the "P.O.R." principle of public service. They must have recognized that they were accorded a great privilege in being able to serve in such capacity; that the opportunity was provided them to exert a strong and a good influence in the University community; and that they had a responsibility to be true to the trust which their conferees had placed in them.

On this occasion, then, we not only look back with gratitude, but we look ahead with optimism. May your sesquicentennial celebration be even more memorable.

Yours faithfully,
F. N. HUGHES,
Dean

From Connaught

Although the Laboratories have relatively few occasions for communication with the undergraduates of the University, it is noticeable that members of the staff take every opportunity to obtain copies of The Varsity.

It is hard to overestimate the importance of The Varsity as a unifying influence in the life of this large and highly diversified University. The staff of the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories joins me in congratulating The Varsity on its 75 years of service and on the high quality of journalism which it has displayed.

J. K. W. Ferguson, M.D.,
Director

From St. Stephen's

I cannot help wondering how The Varsity has managed to survive 75 years. The eulogies I have heard on the campus seem grossly over-exaggerated in view of the abominable standard of journalism in this love-child of the yellow press.

The time consumed by the pseudo-journalists in their dingy basement could have been put to far better use. The state of disrepair of University buildings could have been vastly diminished by gangs of these immature "writers," if they had been given something constructive to do with their time. Money spent on this useless publication would have been far better employed by adding it to staff salaries; perhaps it could have been used to buy the occasional glass of beer.

The space occupied by the offices is sheer waste. A pool room for professors is what is needed on this campus. If the opportunity ever comes my way, I shall not hesitate to seize it with both my hands, and unhesitatingly ban and suspend the publication, distribution, editing and writing of The Varsity.

It is nothing but a nuisance, spends half its time making corrections and serves no real purpose.

If, however, as it seems probable, this thing is to be allowed to persist on this campus, it might at least be the courteous thing to invite the staff to Varsity parties.

Stupor omnia vincit.

The Engineering Story

Whist and Quoits in Skule Past

Skulemen were not always the rowdiest, booziest crowd on the campus. Back in the "good ole days" when they were "literate" and spelled Skule "School" ingenuitously partook of the most innocent amusements.

Instead of beer-drinking contests they won championship medals for a tug of war in 1890. Later, instead of consuming quantities of brew going to Kingston for the football game, the Engineers preferred to play whist and pitch quoits.

For the first time during the Gay Nineties, SPS men brought their lady friends to visit the School building. However, this was looked on with great distrust as a forecast of co-education.

By the Roaring Twenties, the Engineers were still fairly refined, in "Spasms"—the equivalent to today's Skulenite, there were no "crude references" with music supplied by the "Toike Oikestra."

But by 1928, the Engineers were beginning to realize that they had a reputation to live up to. Two hundred copies of The Varsity were burned outside the little red schoolhouse. The "causa belli" to this day remains unknown.

The next year they were really on their way. Following a very orderly Soph-Frosh banquet, the engineers marched up Yonge St. on the street car tracks, holding up traffic and putting the police-off the street-cars as they went. Then they proceeded to invade Luew's Theatre, where the cashier alarmed by their behavior refused them admittance and called the police. Only after a lecture by a senior student and several plain-clothes officers did they reluctantly disband. Several were arrested but no charges were laid.

The Thirties saw a great chapter in the perennial struggle against the artsmen. In retaliation for "tappings" administered the night of School initiation, some Engineers gathered one night at midnight for an organized attack on Burwash Hall. Vic men retaliated by spraying the SPS men with hoses from the third floor, and gave any captured Schoolmen a taste of Victorian Hospitality—such as tapping, stripping and painting.

Many brave men lost their trousers as well as their shirts that night, a Varsity relates. Vic men unfortunate enough to be caught were treated with black shoe polish from head to toe. But when police finally broke up the attack, the rivals joined forces in giving the Toronto yell.

In 1932, a black year for Skule, initiations were forbidden by the Dean. It appeared that during the annual brawl in the Engineering building, the Dean was rather roughly handled.

A similar situation was the "Engineers' Riot" of 1954 in which furniture was damaged at UC, Vic and Trinity, and Prof McAndrew, the Registrar of UC, was slightly injured. A constructive initiation this year, which included cleaning up some of the city parks, brought enthusiastic praise from Mayor Phillips.

But to prove engineers are still "Skulemen" at heart, one of their number recently gained fame for himself and his faculty by winning the "beer-drinking title of Canada."

art, music & drama & drama & drama & drama All I Want's A Cultured U....

BY DAVID DUNSMUIR

For 60 of its 75 years, The Varsity cheerfully struggled on without an AM & D editor, with any cultural "copy" produced by the editor, the assistant news editor, or any ingenious cub reporter. Art, Music and Drama reviews of any late-nineteenth-century newspaper tended to be pompous and prolix; The Varsity added to these faults the less forgiveable one of utter puerility.

Mind you, perhaps a combination of verve and artistic vision can hardly be demanded of an ex officio department that first could feature only lists of all the new library books, with an occasional brightener in the form of a report on the latest proceedings of the Classical Association or the Banjo Club. Such was the death of AM&D material that an on-campus production of Antigone in 1893 (the first play to find its way into The Varsity's weekly eight pages) was plastered over three pages, under the heading of "editorial comment". Things were happening downtown—judging by the occasional ad of the Princess Theatre or the Grand Opera House, Toronto often found itself playing host to the Rage of Five Continents—but they never found their way into The Varsity. Perhaps there was a complimentary-ticket problem . . .

Came the new century, heralded by a new University Greek play, "adapted from Homer and called The Return of Odysseus." The athletic contests and other spectacular features, the front-page previewer pointed out, "will make it an interesting reproduction of early Greek life, and will provide 'thinking parts' for a number of our graceful gymnasts." The play's other big box-office draw was its daring "adoption of the modern Greek pronunciation".

"House" Drama Now Heartened

"Players' Club—Director Upstairs." Only this terse little direction carved on a non-too-prominent stone pillar remains as a reminder of Hart House Theatre's early days, days of indignant Varsity editorials pointing out that the theatre was the only on-campus organization that did not have close university connections. In these post-war days, times have changed.

Even when the theatre began activities in 1919, as a Toronto Little Theatre centre privately endowed by the Massey family, some surface concessions were made for undergraduates. The "Players Club," entrusted with the care of equipment, was a loose organization to which either grads or undergrads could be admitted. However, there is no record of an undergraduate distinguishing himself in one of their productions.

From 1919 on, the theatre spent most of its time staging plays by the club, under a resident theatre director. One of the most striking early productions, incidentally, was a 1921 production of Candida (playing at the theatre at present) with Raymond Massey as Marchbanks and the sets designed by Canadian painter Lawren Harris.

Student plays and revues were sandwiched in between productions, though as time went on they tended to be ousted by the ambitious "official" programme. In 1925, for example, manager Walter Sinclair issued a playbill for the year, comprising 37 widely varying productions. They ranged from Coward and Galsworthy to a staging of Mozart's The Magic Flute (later cancelled) and of an extravaganza called Turandot ("better than Chu Chin Chow," said they).

In 1925, as student support slackened in spite of ticket discounts, the first real concession was made to the student, as the director and his wife began auditions to find a group of 12 for a few weeks' tuition.

Student indifference to the theatre was dragged out in the open in 1933, when a front-page semi-editorial suggested that the fault lay "not in the lack of interest of the student in Hart House Theatre, but in the blatant lack of interest of Hart House Theatre in the student". Charges of professionalism and general artistic turpitude were levelled, though with little apparent effect.

Times changed sharply in 1946, when Robert Gill arrived from the Pittsburgh Playhouse and the Carnegie Institute of Technology, to take over the directorship of the theatre. Since Mr. Gill's first production, Shaw's Saint Joan, about 500 students have taken advantage of the opportunities offered by one of Canada's most up-to-date theatres, both onstage and backstage. From Toronto, Hart House Players have gone on to New York, London, Stratford (Ont.) and even, on one occasion, Stratford-on-Avon's Memorial Theatre.

—I. G.

Things settled back after the event, back to copies Tennysonian and kindred literary matters—though one of The Varsity's far-flung reviewers obliged in 1903 with an appreciation of the world-famous Agnes Sorina as Nora in Ibsen's Nora oder ein Puppehlein (sic) at the Leipzig Schauspielhaus. Reviews from anywhere were always front-page stuff.

The University's yearly mass visit to the Royal Alex, begun around 1908, was still front-page news in 1911, when students turned out to see the "catchy music, light comedy, and graceful dancing" of The Balkan Princess, featuring Louise Gunning. On the eve of the occasion, The Varsity interviewed the lady, and proclaimed in a front-page headline, "MISS GUNNING INTERVIEWED ANTICIPATE A BIG NIGHT AND PROMISES BOYS THE BEST THERE IS."

Yet, "wonderfully striking . . . very pretty staging . . ." was as far as official Varsity opinion went, after a night mainly of intermission speeches by University and city dignitaries. Those up in "the gods" seemed to have behaved rather well for once, though surely something lay behind the cryptic remark, "The man who threw that missile which struck a member of the company should have been put out of the theatre."

In the same year, The Varsity began its second editorial onslaught on the absence of a permanent campus drama group. The editorials had quick results; "Dramatics have arrived at Toronto University" ran the triumphant lead of the story describing the first group's start in March, 1912. The group was the Women's Dramatic Society, the play "Much Ado About Nothing," and the place, Convocation Hall, on a stage bare of all trappings except footlights and a few potted palms.

Recognition of the fast-rising film and of down-town theatres began at about the same time as drama groups started to use on-campus locations. Still, coverage was patchy—Harry Lauder came and went, ignored, as did Theda Bara as the silent-movie Cleopatra advertised as "the beautiful vampire of today as the serpent of the Nile". But the professional's loss was the amateur's gain, as The Varsity turned to blatant "puffing" of university drama groups. Space and sentiments presented no problems, as AM&D lost the M and became plain AD. The laconic little notices of today contrast strangely with the coy front-page on three plays offered by the Vic Women's Dramatic Club in 1917:

"Three such clever plays they are! You certainly don't want to miss them. If you can't go tonight you'll be glad to know that they are being given again tomorrow, both afternoon and evening . . ."

So it went on, with Hart House Theatre opening in 1919 and giving the makeup staff the chance to use the word "interesting" in even more headlines. "The acting of the cast is well-high perfect" (this of Euripides' Hippolytus), a mild remonstrance after seeing a Viking saga performed that "no Viking chief should wear a wristwatch" such grandiloquent praise of faith-reproof was about all The Varsity dared shower upon the campus' sickly drama society.

Thus drama criticism limped along, the college drama clubs being clutched to the AM&D bosom after often-pained births. One small surprise arose in the formation of a Medical Players' Club in 1927, with what might seem the obvious choice of play—Moliere's A Doctor in Spite of Himself. However, apparently the physician could not minister to himself, for the club quickly perished in spite of all The Varsity could do.

In 1935, the intinerant AM&D section achieved the giddy eminence of having an editor all its own, and soon had some good news to report in the formation of a University Drama Committee.

The war years, hardly surprisingly, brought a slump in theatre, only slightly relieved by Maurice Evan's Hamlet and Paul Robeson and Jose Ferrer in Othello. When the lights went on again in Hart House Theatre, AM&D suddenly woke up, with biting little reviews that frequently said little, but were read more widely. Weekly Book Pages in 1951, a separate page in 1952, were advances, but quality did not improve with the same pace as quantity. The imperishable phrases that bubble from other reviewers' lips stuck in Varsity reviewers' throats.

Some movie called My Friend Irma "packed about as much punch as an aspirin tablet in the Pacific Ocean"; some Players' Guild "had less trouble (than others) with his part, having cleverly neglected to learn it". Neither remark has much brilliance in it, but at least both had a little originality.

Who said nothing is deader than yesterday's news? The deadead thing on earth and Olympia is yesterday's AM&D. For 75 years, plays, paintings, and piano-pieces have all come under the head of "interesting," and most AM&D copy still comes down leading off with the same old capacity crowd that jammed the auditorium in 1880. No artist integrity, no originality, no . . . Oh, hell; maybe next term.

. . . and Movies, Movies, Movies

By GUY GROEN

After this, sound seems to have been taken pretty well for granted by Varsity reviewers. Films like The Jazz Singer received no comment at all.

1931 was a bumper year for movies, although the reviews were still extremely short (averaging 10 lines). Films shown that year included All Quiet on the Western Front — "the best of all films ever made" (plus another eight lines of comment) — Hell's Angels — "in spite of the censors it's an epic" — and The Blue Angel — "the best combination of talking and sound technique that has yet appeared in the same picture. Marlene Dietrich is the best of the supporting cast."

After this, things gradually improved. Filmmakers began to learn how to use sound intelligently and the critics began to get more space. On the whole, they used this extra space to good advantage, panning the bad movies and raving about those that have survived.

And so we reach the present day, another day of major upheavals in the film industry. Such things as stereophonic sound and cinemascope have come into use, and even now no one can tell what will happen. We will leave the critic as he looks into the future:

"For the past few months it has seemed inevitable that one of the many new film processes which have recently appeared on the scene would eventually dominate and perhaps succeed to others . . . it is our opinion that the process to win it, if any, will be cinemascope . . . Only time will tell, though, if this film (The Robe) will take place in film history comparable with The Jazz Singer."

Music Makers From 1880

Last evening the regular meeting of the University College Players' Guild was given a unique distinction by the presentation of the first full length play written by a member of the Guild. The play was a three act tragedy in blank verse by Bernard Delacour named by Bernard Delacour Beamish. The play was extremely well received by a large and appreciative audience.

The play is set in Italy of the sixteenth century when art, love and war reached their peak of Renaissance perfection. In its course the elements of gallantry intrigue cruelty and love were combined with splendid effect.

The Varsity, Feb. 29, '38

The University of Toronto owes its musical stature to five forces — the Conservatory, the organ in Convocation Hall, the Music Committee of Hart House, Victoria College and the Editors of Varsity. Mention of the fifth force is not to occasion backslapping, but rather an examination of conscience.

In 1880, music reviews were assignments for the spare reporters of down-town newspapers, who judged the grandeur of a performance more by the size of the posters that announced it than by its real merits. With the railroads came visiting orchestras, but the most that one was likely to hear at the Grand Opera House was a fantasia from Gounod's Faust for four pianos, or a sextet from Lucia de Lammermoor for six trombones. By 1894, Toronto boasted four choirs and The Mendelssohn, formed that year. In 1906 came the Toronto Conservatory Orchestra, later to become the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. In 1905 came the Toronto String Quartet and in 1911 the organ in Convocation Hall. Thus was established the pattern of Oratorio, Organ Recitals and Soirees Musicales that has survived two wars.

In 1919, Varsity lamented that students were so obsessed by the material aims of culture that they failed to recognize the wealth of pure enjoyment in the capacity to appreciate the works of master composers. In 1922 there was the first Hart House Sunday Concert. In 1924, the Massey Foundation established the Hart House Quartet. But all was not well. An orator from St. Mike's decried the vice of tea drinking—Tea Dances were advertised at Newman Club—the walls of Smith College (Northampton, Mass.) began to crumble as the Charleston rocked the floor. The University Choral Society suspended activity that year and students were exhorted to support concerts of the New Symphony Orchestra of Toronto, in danger of disbanding. But Vie's Orchestra was still playing Schubert's Unfinished Symphony to Delighted ears.

Reviewers' epithets were interesting. In 1880, songs about owls were rendered—now they were charming, entrancing and out of this world. Perhaps it was the choice of elephantine to describe noises from the newly refurbished organ in Convocation Hall that led to the final downfall of the Varsity music critic, who had been so outspoken that the word music became a thorn in the editor's side. M was dropped from A.M. & D. Young performers could now aspire to dizzy heights without their sensitivity being upset.

By 1934, that trouble and the depression were over. The Musical Life of the University resumed. Besides domestic events, Varsity gave fuller coverage to down-town events. International Celebrities circulated again—Horowitz, Schnabel, Gieseking and Moiseiwitch appearing in the new Eaton Auditorium, with special student rates. The phonograph had ceased to be a toy. A Modern History lecturer proposed to precede a class with Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture to provide an atmosphere. The Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra was formed for summer Promenade Concerts in Varsity Arena.

It is generally accepted that the Second World War created a new public need for good music. After the war there were daily record recitals in the UC Women's Common Room. Later, male attendance declined either through the contrasexual click of knitting needles or Ethel Starke's conduct of T.S.O. Refuge was found in Hart House and the Carnegie Record Collection

Promenade Concerts at Varsity Arena continued into October and drew crowds of six thousand and mixed emotions. Speaking of movements of Tchaikovsky's Pathétique Symphony, Varsity said—"the first and last wept all over the beautifully polished floor."

Jazz came of age when Professor Roy Bidwell introduced Toronto's first jazz concert at Eaton Auditorium in 1945. The devotion of Victoria and the Royal Alex to Gilbert and Sullivan must not be overlooked. The Mikado was-house has been ridden well. Recent productions of The Sorcerer and Utopia Limited leave us to hope that Princess Ida is not far behind.

Looking forward, the phenomenon of Hi-Fi is not completely exploited and England threatens us with Stereophonic Tape—Reproducing Equipment. The adaptation of Maple Leaf Gardens for grand opera and ballet also gives us hope. Closer to the Campus are other assets, the Hart House Orchestra, Trinity College Chapel and the Five Forces.

Bicycle Peeves

U of T apathy towards the arts was traced to an unusual cause in 1896 with The Varsity's publication of The Influence of the Bicycle Upon Poetry. Said our poetic prosodist in part:

"Turning neither to right nor to left, with eyes fixed on the long dusty white ribbon of the road, hind as bats to the glories that a lavish Creator has scattered on every hand, the tint of the leaves, the curve of the hill, the spray of the waterfall, men rush like shuttles hither and thither, running up a score on the little machine that sits on their front wheel, and imagine that they are enjoying themselves. A sad enjoyment, for nothing can come of it but a deadening of the soul, a sinking to the level of a compromise between the brute and the machine."

Late, achieving eminence as a Canadian essayist and critic he traced the apathy to deeper causes. The writer B. K. Sothell

UC Guild in Flux

The first thirty-three years of the UC Players' Guild have witnessed a change, by no means constant and by no means conscious, from a small club which presented plays for its members only, to a looser association of those who perform and those who come to see.

The Guild was one of the last Drama Clubs to coalesce on the campus. A Varsity editorial early in 1922 deploring the fact that UC alone among the colleges had no student drama was followed in seven days by a pleased notice of the formation of dramatic society at the college.

Besides the weekly (yes, weekly) productions which they varied with original papers on the theatre, the early members of the Guild produced a threeact play in every term. There is no way of seeing through the mist of the years and the hopeless optimism of the reviewers to tell just how good these productions were. Certainly they were ambitious. Favorite playwrights were George Bernard Shaw, and Lord Dunsany, a writer of horror spectacles.

The guild can point with pride to the list of graduates who are now significant in the professional theatre. One change has occurred over the years that the Players' Guild has nothing to do with. Guild graduates now have a professional theatre to be famous in. The student you pan tonight, Varsity critic, may be a celebrity when your story is three layers of dust deep in the Varsity file. The thought should make you tremble.

Conservatory Now Nearing 70th Birthday

The Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto, the college of music of the University of Toronto, had a humble beginning in two rented floors over a music store on Yonge Street, November 20, 1886. An energetic young Boston organist, Edward Fisher, was its founder, and through his efforts the Conservatory moved to its present site at College Street and University Avenue just 11 years later.

In this short space of time the enrollment of the school grew to 1,000 students, already earmarking it as a leader in musical education in Canada. Now the largest music school in the British Commonwealth, it numbers over 8,000 students. Enrollment figures alone cannot adequately tell of the impact the Royal Conservatory has had on Canadian musical life. Its graduates are to be found in orchestras, churches, and teachers' studios in every province. Its examination system has helped to elevate the standard of musical performance and achievement to a point where this country can rightfully hold up its head among the musical nations of the world.

Work at the Conservatory received particular impetus after the second world war. A senior school (now amalgamated into the Faculty of Music) was organized, preparing talented performers and composers for artist diplomas, more applicants than it accepts constantly growing faculty in their specialized fields. A brought from the United States and Europe, as well as other parts of Canada, helped in giving Conservatory students a broad musical education, rich in the traditions of the art. The Conservatory's Faculty of Music gives Bachelor of Music, Master of Music and Doctor of Music degrees.

Opera in Canada has become synonymous with the Conservatory Opera School, and the Toronto Opera Festival which grew out of the school. Another post-war development, the opera school, turns away that Toronto is regarded in many quarters as the home of our national opera. Training for tomorrow's orchestral players is provided in the Royal Conservatory Symphony under the direction of Dean Neel and Dr. Mazzoleni, and in the University of Toronto's Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Prof. R. Rescovear. From eight in the morning until ten at night budding musicians fill over one hundred studios, six days a week, practising, learning, performing, listening and practising again — always striving for perfection in this great and universal art.

Student Politics and Influenza

48 Years of Progress ?

Students' Administrative Council

By TED SIEVENPIPER

By the majority of undergraduates, the Students' Administrative Council is regarded as one of two things—it is either a mystical body or a mystified body. It has been described by many of its critics by the phrase below:

"Though motor cars change yearly
In engine or in frame,
The water-wagon model
Remains the same."

The Varsity 1912

But by delving into the history of student government many changes can be traced.

Apparently the first effort to bring together representatives from all the faculties and colleges of the University of Toronto in order to carry on combined undergraduate activities other than athletic was in 1901. In 1907 the Students' Parliament was formed and took on some duties of student government. Minutes of the parliament show how similar were students' problems half a century ago to those of today.

The matters of business included sale of a "university ring"; the music committee constitution; a debating report; theatre night; motion regarding damage caused in the parade on "field day"; a subscription fund of $43070 for the unfortunate motorman Pratt (apparently involved in the "field day" episode); establishment of Employment Bureau and continual references to possible methods of dealing with "student disturbances." One topical item was a motion that the executive look into the matter of improving the path which ran from the corner of Hoskin Avenue north-west through the "park."

During the past half century Student Government has certainly made advances. By 1913 it was obvious that the parliamentary method did not have sufficient continuity for business purposes. Therefore on April 3, 1913, the Students' Administrative Council, to which members were elected by the men of each faculty, was constituted. This council took over publication of The Varsity and Torontonensis.

In 1914 a secretary-treasurer was appointed who also acted as business manager of the publications. The Varsity, in 1914, wrote of this and the resulting one dollar Council fee.

"Of the many given serious thought, no one will deny that proper supervision can be exerted only by having some one whose duty it is to keep continually in touch with these organizations. Maybe in a few years the SAC can give a free Varsity to everyone."

The great move forward came in 1930. An entirely new constitution was evolved, doing away with the separate councils and placing entire control in the hands of the Joint Executive, to be composed of the heads of the student government organizations of various faculties, colleges and departments.

The only change of any importance since 1930 has been the election of special representatives to the council in place of the head of the Student Government in each constituency.

The field of council activity has widened far beyond the expectations of those who conceived it. At the present time, in addition to the publications of The Varsity, Torontonensis, and The Students' Handbook, the SAC supports debating, is responsible for the maintenance of the Students' Band and the University Symphony Orchestra and Chorus. It organizes the support of athletic teams, and represents the University in the National Federation of Canadian University Students and World University Service.

In addition assistance is rendered by the Council to innumerable other forms of student service, such as: the operation of an undergraduate loan fund, an employment bureau, a student book exchange, and a housing service.

The council represents the viewpoint of the student body both to the University authorities and to the general public.

Above all, there is a definite trend since the beginning of the Council in 1907. The stronger and more effective student government becomes, the stronger and more effective is the union between men and women of all faculties and colleges.

Flu Bug Hits Campus Lectures, Labs Lopped

BY VERN GILBERT

The great influenza epidemic which swept the world at the end of the First Great War left its mark on the University.

The buildings were closed and lectures cancelled for a quarantine period during the height of the outbreak.

The first mention made in columns of The Varsity was headed "Spanish Influenza Visits Victoria College," and appeared as a small story on page one of the issue of October 9, 1918. The Varsity reporter stated that 30 percent of those in residence at Burwash Hall had "contracted the disease with varying degrees of severity."

Cases were constantly being reported throughout the university as laboratory courses and classes became less and less attended.

In the issue of October 16, the death of a demonstrator in biology is reported.

On October 18, the Caput ordered the University buildings closed. "From 1 p.m. today until November 5th at 9 a.m." with the proviso that the time would be extended if the epidemic persisted.

The Faculty of Medicine called for volunteers to help combat the outbreak. Senior students of the faculty were freed from lectures. All functions of the University were suspended, including meetings and sports schedules.

The registrar announced that the exact time of renewal of activities would be determined when it was seen how the epidemic progressed. It was apparent, he said, that students would rather have a shortened Christmas vacation than prolong lectures into the spring.

The bursar stated that the closure would be taken into account when students were paying fees. He thought it quite likely that students would be allowed to pay fees when they returned.

With the announcement of the shut-down of course, The Varsity also ceased publication, one of the few times in its long history that this has happened.

The issue of November 6, 1918, carried an editorial entitled "We are unflued," which began: "For the second time this fall, Varsity opens its doors to receive its student population. . . . Going on to describe what students had been doing in the interim, the editorial stated that some of the energetic people plunged into relief work, the "more mercenary" obtained positions, but the vast majority studied in moderation, or not at all. Some, needless to say, had become statistics in the epidemic.

A follow-up story on November 29, 1918, told of activities at the Toronto General Hospital and the Connaught Laboratories in attempting to discover a serum to fight the "flu bug." The story concluded with the lofty sentiments: "We can be assured that owing to these discoveries (the serum), the flu bug will have a poor show if it ever visits Toronto again. . . ."

Apparently with that report the great epidemic and "holiday" departed from the columns of The Varsity for the year. Also it disappeared from the campus in serious proportions, and did not reappear until just over a year later.

The Varsity of February 9, 1920, had a small box on its front page giving advice on how to avoid contracting the disease.

Later the same week, it was reported that lectures in the Social Service Department had been stopped for the preceding three days. The outbreak, it seems, was not nearly as serious as that of the previous year.

President Falconer was a victim of the bug, succumbing twice during February, 1920.

A lecture on "Ventilation" by a Dr. J. J. McLeod, reported during the month, was well attended. He stressed the spreading of influenza by breathing polluted air. His advice was to "talk into a newspaper."

With that, influenza finally departed from the pages of The Varsity, to be replaced by more ordinary pieces of news: "Varsity Scores Triple Victory Over McGill," and stories of mundane undergraduate activities.

Mock Parliament Was Gay

By CAROL HOFFMAN

When the veterans came back to Varsity, after the first World War, things began to hop. One thing which came to life was the Mock Parliament. Until 1916, the Mock Parliament had been an annual affair, but the war brought an end to this, as well as to many other things. But in 1919, the Mock Parliament was revived.

The Mock Parliament was at that time produced solely by University College. As well as the actual meeting, skits by each of the four years of UC were features of the evening. "The Blast," a journal revealing "the characters and idiosyncrasies of UC students" was produced for Mock Parliament. Tickets were at a premium.

Students were urged to submit biographies, poems, squibs — anything which might reveal the character of UC students — to "The Blast." "We are not liable for libel," one notice said.

"The Parliament itself will feature all the political parties of sufficient notoriety and in the Cabinet, will be represented all the Ministers," reported The Varsity.

As well as regular members of parliament, the Bolsheviks and the Ladies were represented. Also Labour, and the United Farmers of Ontario had their part.

The whole program of the Parliament was planned before. It was well arranged, with an insistence on terseness in all the speeches.

"An extensive, and it is hoped, amusing program has been arranged along Legislative lines," reported The Varsity. "The Board of Censors has censored all the doubtful parts and an enjoyable evening may be guaranteed to all."

In a review of the evening, a few nights later, The Varsity reported that a very clear impersonation of professors was carried out. An end was put to the parliament by the Bolshevik bomb, and exit was made under the cover of heavy machine-gun fire, said The Varsity.

75 YEARS OF VARSITY SPIRIT

1934 Students Opposed To War Strike Advocated

1. November 1934, students at the University of Toronto were opposed to Canada's participation in war. A questionnaire published in the November 15 issue of The Varsity (in conjunction with the McGill Daily and the International Student Service) asked for student opinion on the following five questions:

1. Will there always be wars?
2. Will you support the Canadian Government in any war or only in a justifiable war?
3. Under what conditions is the Canadian Government justified in entering war?
4. What would you do if the Canadian Government declared war?
5. What body would you endorse for the purposes of peace?

Of the 200 students answering the questionnaire only 13 said that they would support the government in all wars, while 99 would not support any war, most of these being willing to participate in peaceful protest meetings or even a general strike.

The most popular reasons for going to war were an invasion of Canada or a call for assistance by the League of Nations.

The results of this questionnaire were sent to Geneva to be tabulated along with results from other such centres as Oxford, Prague, Yale, and the University of London.

How Long Is Temporary? Temporary Buildings

To supply the need for buildings to accommodate this year's increased enrollment, the University obtained two storage huts from an RCAF depot and converted them into classrooms. The huts were dismantled in sections, shipped to the campus and reassembled during the summer on the vacant lot south of St. Hilda's College on Devonshire Place.

The buildings now house Occupational and Physiotherapy girls who take a three-year course in the treatment of convalescents, helping the injured and sick regain the use of their muscles. The above picture shows a group of the therapy undergraduates entering the building for lectures shortly after it was opened last October.

The huts are constructed in an "H" shape with Occupational therapy in one wing and physiotherapy occupying the other and joined by an entrance hall.

NOTE

The above is an exact reproduction of a picture, picture caption, and picture underlines or explanation, which appeared in The Varsity in 1945. Ten years later, the temporary buildings are still in use.

Football Game Frolics Feature Student Spirit

By BILL SMYTH

Varsity spirit in its various manifestations, never too strong at best but nonetheless always present, has changed with the years, but still maintains its fundamental aspects — noting the football team and supporting one's college or faculty.

The spirit expressed in 75 years of The Varsity takes these forms but there is more behind it — the feeling of belonging, to an institution where intellectual freedom and friendship are paramount. This spirit is revealed in a 1919 story which spends four paragraphs discussing the football crowd, the yells, the wind conditions, the pre-game atmosphere, then starts paragraph five with "The game itself." Perhaps this was because the Blues lost.

Spirit seemed to be a different matter in those far-off days. There were no female cheerleaders, very exceptional instances of "liquor at the football game," many less high-jinks. There were cheering and horseplay, of course, but spirit was refined, almost dignified. The years prior to the turn of the century had seen the University united spiritually, if not physically, so that Varsity winning streaks and college yells were emphasized nearly as much as today — with a somewhat more reserved enthusiasm.

There were exceptions to this state of mind, however. It is recorded that 1919 students of the Faculty of Medicine, out on the town for the evening, managed to: (1) drown out all dialogue at the Gayety Theatre, (2) interrupt a dance to do battle with 80 Dents (3) depart with cheers for "the Dents and their ladies," (4) get thrown out of a restaurant, (5) pull several trolley-poles off the wires, (6) "ring-around-the-street-car" for 20 minutes at the corner of King and Yonge "until the traffic piled up for blocks."

Oddly enough, during the course of this evening soiree, no policeman appeared to stop the riot. Retribution caught up a week later, when the ringleader was fined $50—a huge sum in those days — and others shouldered $3.50 burdens.

University College had the same reputation in 1925 that it has today, a Varsity of the time indicates it quotes Principal Hutton "UC has seemed to lack 'esprit de corps' because there is no need for it, such a large stone body."

The modern era of "spirit" might be said to begin with the Twenties when special football teams to Queens are first mentioned and post-game celebrations are termed "disgraceful."

A front-page article in a 1924 Varsity asks: "Do you want to see the game? The football weekend is absolutely one of the best things in the college year, all the students declare."

The team left Friday night arrived just in time for the game and left immediately afterward. Some hardy souls who wanted to drive down had to leave Thursday morning and "hoped to be there in time for the game."

New phrases come into being: "battling blue boys," the Tri-Color Residence pool money to send a representative who can regale them with a first-hand account. And football crowds are severely censured for interrupting a war memorial service in 1926 after Varsity defeated Queen's for the first time in four years.

Perhaps the most dominating tid-bit from the past occurs in the Oct 3 issue of the 1938 Varsity, when a poll is conducted to determine whether Varsity should have female cheer-leaders.

The answer, "What this college needs is a female frenzy leader." What a change from 20 years before! Several students, however, were considerably worried about the propriety of such a plan, and what clothes the cheer-leaders should wear.

Many comments are right up to date: "She must be a good-looking girl of the athletic type, have a trim figure and lots of 'oomph.'"

Another thought they should wear grass skirts, or something similarly "intriguing."

So we come to the present, with pep rallies, cheerleaders, football teams and dances, liquor at games, stolen goal posts — a well established ritual demonstrating the existence of "spirit." It has not always been so expressed, it has not always been enthusiastic, but it has always been at the University of Toronto, representing her unity and individuality.

Taddle Initiated Frosh

By BILL SMYTH

An uneasy glance back to initiation customs of thirty or forty years ago immediately leads a curious individual to speculate on the relation between the price of shoe polish and the peace of unwitting freshmen's souls.

Shoe polish (black) and flour appear to have been standard ingredients in initiation riots before the late twenties, with an occasional hydrant thrown in to provide "washing facilities." And there was always a harassed University policeman, named Constable Christie, who it variously described as "breaking up" or "trying to break up" fights between the Sophs and Frosh of such faculties as Medicine, Engineering and Dentistry.

This was wilder than the 1880's, when the benighted freshmen were only dunked in now non-existent Taddle Creek. There is a record of freshmen being genuinely welcomed with parties and tours of the University, evidence that things weren't so tough after all.

Until the spring of 1923, when regulations were passed prohibiting "hazing in any shape or form," fall "bashings" between sophs and frosh were annual occurrences on the campus.

By 1921, The Varsity and University staff were taking a severe view of high-jinks. Professors opined that initiations were expressions of savagery, silly, vulgar, degrading nursery stunts or foolish pranks.

But in 1923 we still read the lurid account of a Meds initiation. "One or two at a time the freshmen were let into the old gym. There their shoes were taken off, they were stripped to the waist and blindfolded in scientific medical fashion.

"Shingle stain was then applied to their backs and a shampoo of axle grease, tar and molasses to their heads. In some cases this was varied with fly-paper or flour, and others had 279 painted on their manly chests. To complete their education the considerate second year poured a mixture of glucose, castor oil and flour down their throats."

The modern practice of "Humiliation Parades" is represented by a 1937 South House "riot," when freshmen were taken out for the night in their nightgowns.

"At the corner of College and Yonge, traffic was jammed when the frosh staged a sit-down strike in the middle of the street," the story relates.

"The Embassy then fell under the bombardment of South Housers, when, to the tune of our Alma Mater the frosh put on a floor show, attempting to get autographs from patrons on pieces of paper, and then staged an onion race down the centre of the dance floor, propelling the little morsels by their noses."

At no time until a quite recent period is there mention of the initiation of women, commonplace nowadays. Indeed, if initiations have changed in the past half-century it is only in that women have attained superiority in the arts of torture, a fact that every eligible male graduate might bear in mind.

Constructive initiations have been increasing in popularity lately. A few fraternities have adopted the idea, and this year, for the first time, so did the Engineers, when Skule freshmen were sent out to help the city clean up its parks.

Same Now As Then Tho' Enrollment Up

By STEVE FRICK

"The great defect in the Educational System of Toronto University is that the professors and lecturers never come into intimate contact with the students."

The above was taken from the opening issue of the 1898 Varsity, when the enrollment of the entire university was 800 students instructed by 50 professors.

Great things often come from humble beginnings.

The following years show a slow, but steady increase in enrollment figures. By 1910, registration figures had crossed over into the thousands. A university education was coming into the reach of the many and was no longer restricted to one particular class or section of the people.

We read in the 1919 Varsity:

"The old order is superseding the wartime scarcity of students. At the registrar's office, registrants are lined up like a crowd of New Yorkers trying to hear Billy Sunday preach on prohibition." Figures were high, too. The total enrollment had mounted to 4230, an increase of 20% over the preceding year.

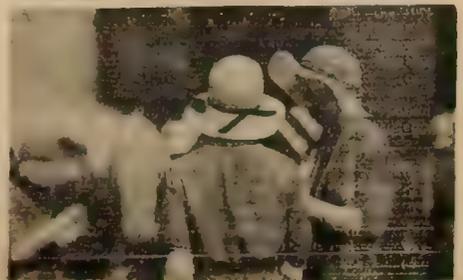

In 1921, higher education was still more popular. The Varsity reported, "Due to the increase in enrollment, especially in the Faculty of Arts, there will be more difficult entrance exams."

The all-time high was reached, in 1946 — with an estimated 16,000 students (13,000 at Toronto—3,000 at Ajax), the corridors in the registrar's office were lined from 9 this morning until 6 this evening. Seven thousand ex-servicemen have helped to make this year's enrolment double that of two years ago." With the tremendous increase in married students, a plea was made to the people of Toronto to take some of the surplus residents into their homes.

Up to the present, enrolment has tapered off slightly, and now stands at a fairly even 11,300. But future increases are very likely.

Convocation Co-Eds

Fashionable coeds (in the 1920's) chat amiably over a cup of tea at a Convocation. Despite the "floppy clothes" obscuring ears and eyes, the young ladies still seem able to carry on an understandable conversation.

"Lots of Endurance"

The W. L. M. King mentioned in this story in The Varsity later became Prime Minister of Canada, a position he held for over 20 years.

JANUARY 27, 1897

Last week we had to notice the activity of W. L. M. King, '95, in his sociological studies in Chicago. On Jan 14th the Chicago Daily Record, in speaking of the work of the track team of the University of Chicago, says: "The latest welcome additions are L. (Fingwell), who runs in the sprints, and W. L. M. King, of the half-mile. King has been out for a couple of days. He has a long stride and seems to have lots of endurance. In the two quarter-mile runs which Steng gave the squad, he appeared to run easily and to have a strong spirit on the end."

PC's Take Mock Parliament Vote VIC WINS MULOCK CUP

Where's The Ball

Second Half Mistakes Spell Loss For Irish

By JOHN BROOKS

Victoria College lived up to their colours on Friday afternoon. They painted the Irish of St. Michael's a solid shade of red and they paraded out of Varsity Stadium at four o'clock with the gold—the Mulock Cup.

Coaches John Chisholm and Jim Pearson had their boys up for this one and they were not to be denied. Vic led 5-1 at the half, and then broke loose in the final 30 minutes with 17 points, while allowing St. Mike's but a single touchdown to take the game 22-7 and the Interfaculty Championship for the first time in four years.

The outstanding difference between the two was the ground play of the men from across Queen's Park. While St. Mike's quarterback Frank Kielty had to rely mainly on the running of Leo McGuigan, Frank Ebenhardt matched McGuigan with Norm Williams and then used Ron Bertram and Paul Newman to up the yardage.

The Double Blue drew Liam when Williams took a Kielty punt and was trapped behind his goal line and smothered by the Irish. Then in the second canto, Bertram got in behind Kielty and gathered in a pass on the St. Mike's five and went over standing up. Williams missed the try for the extra point.

Then came the second half. Victoria broke loose. A fumble by McGuigan at the centre stripe set the stage, as Ebenhardt's Williams crashed through to the Irish two, where Ebenhardt drove over for the touchdown. Williams again missed the convert.

St. Mike's struck back in the final quarter when Kielty intercepted a pass on his own five and led his team the length of the field, culminating in the drive himself when he plunged over for the major and converted it to make the score 10-7.

Vic took the kickoff and powered their way back down the field. It was Ebenhardt again carrying over from the nine. He passed to Handiak for the extra point, Paul Newman plunged over for the final touchdown and Ebenhardt passed to MacPhee for the extra point on the last play of the game.

Just Jots . . . Vic rolled over first downs to St. Mike's 13. Kielty was even in his passing with nine of 18 completed. Ebenhardt had seven of 13. Williams played a top game. . . . Fletcher and Burton stood out for the Irish with several good catches.

Tories To Seat 42 Grits' Vote Down Left Wingers Trail

The next Mock Parliament will have a Progressive-Conservative government. The PC's were only eight seats short of an absolute majority when seats were distributed following the election on Thursday.

Liberal Club members will form the official opposition, with 30 seats to the government's 42.

The CCF won 19 seats and the LPP trailed with seven.

The elections were run under the auspices of the Political Economy Club. The parliament will be staged in January, in the Legislative Assembly chamber at Queen's Park.

Less than 20 percent of the student body voted. If polling officials had not been very active in securing voters as students passed by ballot boxes, the total would have been far less.

At least one student voted twice. This student possesses two ATL cards and voted once at Hart House and once at University College.

Duncan Campbell, secretary of the Political Economy Club, said that some students had trouble following instructions, and voted preferentially, or else could not write an "X." He estimated that of those using the ballot paper which gave such instructions about 20 percent failed to do as asked.

Compared with the last election in 1953, the total vote dropped by about 400 votes. There was, however, a change in the positions of the parties. In 1953 the Liberals captured 34 seats out of 90 at stake and the PC's 33.

The CCF has increased its representation, as did the LPP, but there are no independents this year.

Al Millard, CCF president, said after the election that results show the parliament should be entertaining. "Seeing the percentages are very close, there may be some interesting alliances crop up," he observed.

A M & D

I Am A Candida

By W. R. CHADWICK

It is always with a feeling of apprehension that one approaches a comedy of Shaw's, for he has the annoying habit of presenting weighty philosophies through the medium of comic drama. The puzzling question is always "Does the comedy hide a serious philosophy, or is the philosophy supposed to be comic?" Luckily this is not the case with Candida, which opened Saturday at Hart House. Though it has an underlying philosophy, it is an inconsequential one, and the play does not have to be 'understood' to be enjoyed.

Basically, Shaw is considering the institution of marriage. The two characters are the Rev. James Morell, a physically handsome and powerful man, and Candida his wife, the Mother Figure of unerring wisdom. The theme of the play is the disillusionment that Candida begins to feel for her husband's complacent conception of marriage, a disillusionment that is quickly brought to the surface through the catalytic agency of Eugene Marchbanks who carries in his underdeveloped body a Shelleyesque mind.

The other three characters, Burgess, Candida's coarse father, Prossy, Morell's Victorian and unpredictable secretary, and Lexy his spineless assistant, merely provide a background to straight comedy to the central trio's humorous situation.

The whole cast is extremely well balanced. Mr. Jackman as Morell is excellent as a self-sufficient clergyman suffering from a puncture of the ego, while Miss Griffin as Candida floated exquisitely and triumphantly as all the male sex. Mr. Lawrence's Burgess is coarse and cockney as could be desired, and Copeland as Lexy portrayed a very good religiously.

But perhaps the most enjoyable performance were produced first by Mr. Spivak, who naturally gyrated poetically and crept nervously through the play, bringing a sense of realism to the unlikely character of Eugene, and secondly Miss Bevis who as the prim secretary Miss Prossy climaxed her performance with a brilliant portrayal of a staid spinster suddenly caught in the coils of the demon champagne.

Robert Gill stays very close to Shaw's style and acting directions throughout, and the promising and thoughtful Mr. Cohen who humorously derided Mr. Gill as a director of comedy, we have no complaints with Candida. Thank you very much.

Blue Ruggerites In League Final Top Scots 5-0

Saturday afternoon on the back campus the rugger Blues moved into the Toronto league final for the second year in a row, defeating a strong Toronto Scottish Second side 5-0.

The snow-swept field was not conducive to fast, open play, but a surprisingly good game resulted.

During the first half the Blues were fully extended to prevent Scottish from scoring, and several cross kicks by hard-running backs brought the Scots close in.

Blues were missing backfield strength through injuries, but in the second half Ray Cornbill came up with a clever run, meeting up with the forwards, and Dick Hargreaves went over for the try. Chris Jacques added two points for the convert.

Blues will play in the league final this Saturday afternoon.

Vous ÊTES Bienvenus, Vous Savez

Eh bien, les Carabins, vous voilà parmi nous! Bienvenue nos amis, Canadiens-français! Enchantés de vous connaître! Vous avez fait un bon voyage? Bon! Nous souhaitons que, pendant votre séjour dans la Ville-Reine, vous jouissiez d'un séjour des plus agréables. Il nous fera plaisir de vous fournir tous les renseignements désirés. Bienvenue, Carabins! Toronto est à vous!

Tous les ans, au milieu de l'allégresse générale, quelqu'un demande quand a été conçu l'idée du voyage carabineque. Il se fait peut-être intéressant d'esquisser l'his-toire de l'échange Toronto-Montréal.

Après la guerre, en 1946, on ressuscita les parties de football inter-universitaires. Le voyage annuel à McGill redevenait un des attrait de l'année. Pendant l'hiver 1946-47, plusieurs étudiants du conseil étudiant mentionnèrent à leurs confrères qu'il était dommage qu'un voyage d'intérêt purement athlétique soit reconnu et non pas un échange culturel. On décida donc de combler la lacune.

L'automne suivant, 25 étudiants de l'université de Toronto ont été accueillis chez-vous à Montréal.

Les Carabins à leur tour nous ont visités pendant l'hiver. Trois ans plus tard on a renversé le procédé à cause des activités spéciales qui se déroulaient à l'U de M pendant l'hiver—et c'est encore comme ça.

En 1948, l'intérêt suscité par cette nouvelle activité a force les organisateurs d'augmenter à 40 le nombre des participants. De ce temps, le nombre de concurrents s'accroît toujours, et cette année il y a eu 90.

Au Cours des années, le programme de la fin de semaine n'a guère changé. Il a été prouvé qu'il suffit de trois jours pour que les deux groupes réalisent à quel point ils se ressemblent.

Grâce à la grande valeur de l'échange, à l'enthousiasme des étudiants, et au dévouement extraordinaire des organisateurs, le projet est devenu une tradition. L'année dernière un rapport en règle a été présenté au conseil des étudiants de Toronto.

Le conseil des étudiants accorde son support moral et financier à la fin de semaine Carabin parce que celle-ci aide à produire une meilleure entente entre nos deux provinces. Ce support du conseil est (Continued on Page 8)

Treasure Van At Hart House Sale Will Close This Evening

Treasure Van, currently featured in the Hart House Debates Room, was opened officially on Monday by the Hon. Leslie Frost, Premier of Ontario. He said that he encouraged the students and the citizens of Toronto to support Treasure Van financially and to help World University Service of Canada, who sponsor the sale, to achieve its goals.

Dr. Sidney Smith, in welcoming Treasure Van to U of T, presented it with a Japanese doll which had been given to him by WUS of Japan. This doll will travel with the sale and be auctioned off at the end.

A WUS spokesman said, "There are two goals of WUS: to further student relief in underprivileged countries and to promote international understanding among students of the world. This year WUS hopes to finance student housing developments in Indonesia, Israel and Pakistan, and build a university sanatorium in Japan."

This year the sale consists of goods not only from Greece and India, but also from Egypt, Japan, Hong Kong, Jordan and Canada. There are displays from Russia and Israel.

Kokeshi dolls from Japan have proved very popular, a Van spokesman said. These are greeting cards in Japan but form bracelets, salt shakers, earrings and nick-nacks for Canadians. The dolls are in two parts with the head wobbling in the body. All the proceeds from these Kokeshi dolls will help the Japanese WUS to build sanatoriums for the 22,000 nonhospitalized tubercular students, said the spokesman.

So far, over four thousand people have visited Treasure Van and bought approximately $4,200. Queen's University holds the record with $8,900, established in the first year of the sale.

Treasure Van's fourth tour of Canadian universities is proving even more successful than other years, mainly because of the greater variety of goods, said the spokesman.

McGill is the next stop, after the sale closes today.

ISSUES

The Varsity will be published tomorrow, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of next week.

Toronto Stores Agree 10% Discounts Offered Open To All Students

Varsity students can now receive discount at more than 30 Toronto stores, the local committee of the national student federation announced today.

The long-awaited "Students' Discount Service" includes two book stores, mens' and women's clothiers, shoe-stores, restaurants, jewelers and dry cleaners. The discounts, most of them 10 per cent, will be available to students on presentation of their Admit-to-Lecture cards.

A list of SDS stores appears in today's Varsity and it is expected that extra copies will be available soon in the SAC office.

The introduction of the scheme at the U of T follows its success at McMaster and Dalhousie Universities, said Bill Smyth, NFCUS Co-Chairman here. He said the plan had met with "considerable" resistance at Toronto, because merchants feared cut-throat competition would ensue, forcing a narrower margin of profit.

"The plan is quite obviously in its preliminary stages," he said, "and a great deal of work needs to and will be done on it."

"SDS can only grow up; and it can only grow up if the merchants find it to their advantage. We think that they will, and that next year more well-known stores will take advantage of the opportunity they have been offered."

"Many stores which previously gave discounts have been added to the plan, while others have approached us or have been approached by us. This serves the double function of making students more aware of them, and increasing the shops' advertising on the campus."

SDS has met with resistance on some camps situated in smaller towns. Reports from Queen's indicate that it may be better than their "shop-keepers" feeling that it will pay to cooperate.

At Toronto, the Undergraduate Pharmaceutical Society last night passed a resolution opposing the plan. At the meeting it was suggested that merchants would not continue with the scheme, that it was unfair to merchants who feel that they must comply or lose business to other stores who adopt it, and that there are more important projects which NFCUS could undertake.

Discussing the motion, EAC rep Ralph Berrin said: "This is a vote on the theory. We aren't opposed to stores giving discounts but they shouldn't be solicited by students. It is this soliciting we object to."

Berrin also said that the Pharmacy meeting was poorly attended, and that "Half of the students were on a trip to Guelph."

However, the latest issue of the NFCUS weekly bulletin, Items, reports that 15 out of 21 member camps either "have begun or are about to begin the Student Discount Service."

Member stores will be provided with window displays so that students will be able to identify them readily.

SAC Bulletin Board Met With Protests

A counter-offer for a bulletin board from University officials—like designs for the projected City Hall—came under fire from architectural quarters.

The University Property Committee offered to build a sign-board for the SAC in the official University style, instead of that submitted by the SAC.

The SAC, at an unofficial meeting, turned down the Property Committee offer and decided to push its own original plan.

Ted Selvenpiper, (IV Arch.),

SAC publicity director, declared last night, "We wanted a bulletin board for SAC, not U of T. From an architectural point of view, the University board is like the City Hall. The traditional boards are so dead, they'd make a fitting background for obituary notices."

The SAC-type board, materials for which were largely donated, will be discussed at a meeting of the Property Committee tonight.

If approval is given for its erection, work will commence on Monday, with the digging of holes for the concrete supports.

Winter Carnival

The second annual all-Varsity Winter Carnival is set for the week of January 16, with festivities at Caledon on Saturday, January 21, and Sunday, January 22. The first open organizational meetings will be held on December 6 and 7 at 5:00 p.m. in the Music Room, Hart House.

Anyone interested in helping out in the organizational detail of the Carnival is welcome to come out to one of these meetings, said a Carnival spokesman.

May Be Depression Says CCF Chieftain

The National leader of the CCF said that the forces that caused the great depression of 1929 are still with us. Speaking before a campus group, Mr. M. J. Coldwell said that the present government's farm policy had an influence on the possibility of a new depression.

Mr. Coldwell underlined the recent "sharp reduction" in gross farm income, and recommended fair farm prices based on parity principles and adequately backed marketing boards to remedy the situation.

Mr. Coldwell criticized the Canadian government for spending so much money on arms production which, he said, is economically unproductive.

He said that our contributions to the UN and the Colombo Plan were "pitiful" and that a great part of this money could be diverted to these bodies.

The CCF leader also said it was a shame to have so much wheat lying idle in Western barns when two thirds of the world goes to bed hungry every night.

"We give a negligible amount of help to the under developed countries," he said, "and then we wonder why they turn to the Communist countries for assistance," he said.

He also called it shocking that Canada and the U.S. are the only two Western nations still without a National Health Plan.

Not Love But Self-Love

Makes The World Go Round

Self-love motivates everything we do, contended Marg Bailey, arguing for Vic's resolution that "Love does make the world go round."

The occasion was Vic-Engineers debate held last Monday at Vic, when the motion was defeated 23-13.

"Many people marry only in order to produce an offspring in their image so that they cannot be forgotten by posterity," she said.

Even the things that we supposedly do for others are done only to obtain praise and recognition or plain self-satisfaction, Miss Bailey added.

"Those speaking at the debate were probably doing so in the hope that they would get their names in The Varsity and that out of eleven thousand student someone would surely see their name," she said.

Miss Bailey said "University enables women to get their "MRS" degree faster and provides feminine diversion for the men when they are tired of working.

And as final proof, Miss Bailey said that at a nearby theatre, Love Is A Many Splendored Thing, ran for four weeks, while The Virgin Queen only ran for two.

Leo Bray, speaking for the opposition, argued that if love did make the world go round, man would think mainly of others. In reality, he said, a man wants to see others worse off than himself.

Jim Vassof, the final speaker for the Engineers against the motion, stated that love at first sight is merely for efficiency in response to Miss Bailey's remark that even the Engineers were preceded everywhere they went by the portrait of Lady Godiva. He said that it was the appreciation of beauty which made them do this and nothing more.

Canadian Works Chorus Feature

Works by three Canadian composers will be performed by the U of T Chorus on December 8.

Charles Wilson, a graduate of U of T, has written an intriguing modern selection based on the ancient "Cherry Tree Carol." Another work is the "Christmas Chorale" by Talivaldis Kenins, currently lecturing at the Faculty of Music on the campus. The third, "Who is at my Window, Who?" is by Dr. Welford Russell of Toronto.

CUP

Runneth-Over

Vancouver: UBC students may soon swoon with ecstasy over their cups of coffee if their coffee-tasting panel brings results. This panel includes notable staff and students. This comes as the result of much criticism about their coffee, and so far most blame has been placed on inadequately cleaned urns. However, students were not impressed when the powers that be tried soda bicarbonate to clean the urns and omitted to rinse it all out.

Kingston: A Western Gazette source has come up with a dubious new set of words for our U of T song.

"Toronto is a university, I am glad that it didn't belong to me, Oh, what hell, oh She is always yellow. —It is a mess your alma mater."

Hamilton: 10:45 lectures were cancelled at McMaster to allow a maximum number of students to vote on the issue of their council increasing students' fees by a total of $2. This increase is wanted to aid the Student Union, and to help allow a foreign student study at McMaster.

Fredericton: The University of New Brunswick opened their plush new Lady Beaverbrook rink, ice surface 190 x 83 ft. The front is faced with blue-green porcelain enamel.

Vancouver: Students polled recently showed that they prefer radios, record players, pianos and ping-pong to television and tables for their new two-million dollar student housing project. They hope to plan the cafeteria so there will be no line-ups and bottlenecks and will install a conveyor belt to remove dirty dishes. They hope to follow the 'Harvard' scheme with a large central building for eating and recreation linked by covered walks to four housing units.

LYNDHURSTS OVERCOME WHITES 5-4

Third Period Rally Falls Short Varsity Winless In Four Starts

By BILL LAMBIE

Despite a terrific last period rally, University of Toronto Whites overcame 5-4 on the red-hot two goal performances of Moe Galand and Bob Kennedy of East York Lyndhursts. Hughes scored the only other East York goal to clinch the game played last night at Varsity Arena.

Kennedy scored his first goal, from Galand and Fryday at 6.32 of the first period, and added another marker at 13.12 of the middle frame. Galand picked up an assist on that play as well as potting a goal at 2.25 of the same frame, and one at 6.04. His outstanding display sparked the Lyndhursts through the better part of the game. Fryday and Hughes assisted on both the goals, and Hughes tallied the tying goal at 8.45 of the second period. The Whites managed their only goal of the frame at 14.28 of the period, when Mills swooped in unassisted on Johnson and blasted the rubber home.

In the final frame, Whites potted three quick goals, but couldn't manage the tying or winning markers. Evon tallied at 1.45 on a pass from Elik; Fisher picked up one less than a minute later from Lotocki; and then that same combination clicked for the final goal of the game at 14.13.

Volleyball

Skule A's won the first match of the finals in University league volleyball competition Monday night, dropping Architecture 15-6, 15-8, 15-6. Second game is tonight.

As the league schedule drew nearer a close in intramural competition, UC Pilams defeated Pre-Meds IB 15-10, 15-2. UC is already in the playoffs which begin tonight for the second division.

Yesterday's lacrosse action found Skule Seconds moving into the semi-final round tomorrow by edging UC Seconds 7-5 in Hart House.

Fisher and Caswell each scored three for the winners, while Park added a singleton, Ted Lotocki topped UC with four, while Bill Naylor added one.

Interfaculty Hockey

Senior UC began their hockey schedule on the right foot yesterday afternoon, dropping Senior Meds 4-1 in the Arena.

Led by the same group that paced the UC Thirds to the interfaculty championship last winter, the Redmen appeared to have little trouble with the Doctors. Goals by Nadin, Scott, Green and Sonley sparked UC to the win, while Bob Murdoch notched the lone tally for the Doctors.

Tied 1-1 at the close of the first period, Vic Thirds rapped in two counters in the second frame to top Skule Thirds 3-1 in the first half of a noon doubleheader yesterday. Maxwell with two and Clark with one scored for the winners, while Jim White potted the only goal for Skule.

Skule Sevens dropped St. Mike's 3-1 in the second game after moving into a 2-0 first period lead. Scanlon, Sunohara and Harris scored for the Engineers, while Tait got the lone Irish goal.

Meds, PHE 111 Move To Final In Women's Interfac Basketball

Meds and PHE III have advanced to the women's interfaculty basketball championships as a result of their respective wins over UC Jr.-Sr. and Victoria Freshies. In the games Tuesday evening, the Doctors downed Principal Jeanerret's college 49-25 and Vic moved to PHE III by the score of 34-23.

The Scarlet and Gold-PHE game was not as one-sided as the score might lead one to think, for it was strictly a matter of the athletes having superior shooting ability that gave them the lead. The Vic hoopers could just not seem to find the basket. In the second quarter, Vic dominated the ball during the entire time; yet they were able to raise the score by only three points—more shooting practice next year, girls!

At the end of a close first quarter, the PHE squad led 9-8 as an under-rated Vic team held the high scoring blue forwards. The Vic forward line of Sandra Grant, Jill Segond and Pru Smith played an excellent game and although their shooting was erratic, they inspite of the excellent team play always made up for this deficiency.

By the end of the third quarter, PHE was ahead 23-16 and the fast line of Marilyn Charters, Sylvia Kerr and Ruth Marshall was beginning to exhibit some of its experience and clever plays that had brought this same team to the semi-finals for two years in a row. The Freshie guard line under the fast checking of Ann Waugh did very well and they deserve a great deal of credit for the wonderful game they played.

Whether from exhaustion or from lack of experience, the Vic squad folded in the last quarter and lost all chances of pulling the game out of the bag. PHE after two years of trying, finally, got to the finals by downing the scarlet and gold 34-23. High scorers were Sylvia Kerr with 14, Marilyn Charters with 10 and Jill Segond with 10.

In the second game, which saw Meds take UC by a convincing 49-25 score, the Meds team definitely had the advantage out inspite of the excellent team play by the female doctors, the UC squad line features players Lou Martin, Meredith Robinson and Mary Vickers were outstanding. Time after time, they held off intercollegiate star Sad Wallace and her equally versatile wingers, Doris Kerr and Judy Wicks.

At half time, the black and red squad led 21-11, and from there on in the game was definitely theirs. By the end of the third quarter, they had increased their lead to 31-18. Keeping up the fast pace, Meds made it 49-25 when the final whistle sounded. With 19 points Doris Kerr topped the scorers, followed by Sally Wallace with 15 and Marney Littlejohn with 14.

Don't forget the finals to-night, girls! The first game starts at 7:30 and the location is the Hart House gym which has been donated by the men of this university for this worthwhile cause since the poor struggling girls of this university lack the required facilities to play their basketball games.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

Buffalo State Teachers bring two basketball teams to town next Wednesday to engage our Blues and Seconds in the headline event of the night as Hart House opens its doors to the first of the winter season's Athletic Nights. The State Teachers Frosh take on the JVS in the opener at 7:00, with the big game going about 8:30. Meanwhile, in the pool, the water polo team takes on Hamilton Aquatic in an attempt to gain revenge for the shellacking they took over in the Steel city the other day. The interfaculty finals of the wrestling tournament go in the upper gym at 7:30. There's dancing in the main gym to top off the evening.

Athletic nights have long been a popular event on the campus during the wintry months, and we strongly recommend them to anyone who has a free night. This one coming up is the only such event before Christmas. Next term, most, if not all, will be on Saturday night.

The Basketball Blues will be back fresh from a jaunt to the border so the game should be a thriller. The wrestling tournament is for beginners only from any faculty or college and points awarded go towards the Reed Trophy. It should be a top night of entertainment and the admission charge is a very nominal fifty cents per person.

And Cupid Tells Us . . .

The Hart House Archery Club paid its annual visit to Guelph on Thursday last for a match with the OAC archers, and successfully shot down the Aggies to leave the Royal City veterans. The Hart House team averaged 296 per cent as against 244 per cent for the hosts. Return match sometime in January. The Club will be staging its 10th annual Christmas shoot on Friday, December 9th in the COTC Drill Hall, 119 St. George St. All those interested in archery are welcome to attend. More and expert advice. Equipment, presumably bows and arrows and something to shoot at, will be provided for those unfortunate enough not to have possession of same.

Getting In The Swim . . .

. . . of things we move along to the Varsity senior water polo team who played an exhibition tilt in Hamilton last Thursday and as we mentioned, absorbed a real shellacking. Late word gives us the score. It was 22-2 (water polo?) and somehow Bernie Langer managed to score both goals for Varsity. This Saturday, however, will see Varsity playing McGill at Montreal in the first of a two-game total point series for the Horseman Cup, emblem of intercollegiate water polo supremacy. The return match, to be held in Toronto on the following Saturday. Toronto and McGill are the only colleges entered in the chase for the Cup, presently held by the Montrealers.

And The Royal Word . . .

Basketball Blues Away

At this very moment the University of Toronto Basketball Blues are winging their way over United States territory on their way to New York City for three exhibition games against some stiff American competition. This evening they will meet highly rated Seton Hall at South Orange, New Jersey. They then journey to New Rochelle, New York on Friday where they meet Iona and finally to Rutherford, N.J., where they battle Farleigh Dickinson Saturday evening.

Today's opposition will be the toughest the Blue will have to face in this series. Although Seton Hall has no individual stars this season as they had a few years back with the great Walter Dukes, they are picked as a very strong squad in the pre-season ratings.

Ten players will make the trip, guards—Jerry Edelist, Pete Potter and Ruby Richman; centres—John Dacshyn, Al Vaichulis and Harold Rotman; forwards—Vic Kurdyack, Leo Madden, Florian Matsalla and John Sheppard.

Dacshyn returned to the team last week after missing a few practices with a hand injury. The former Bathurst Heights Collegiate star scored 272 points in 17 games last season with the Baby Basketball Blues. Veteran guard Richman has shown a big improvement over last season in the practice sessions to date. Richman will likely start at one of the guard spots tonight. Pete Potter and Leo Madden are also back this season. Both of these players amassed a combined total of over 400 points last season.

Lyndhursts Top Blues 4-2 Whyte, Cossar Net Goals

Varsity's hockey Blues finish out their exhibition schedule this weekend with four games in Colorado before returning early next week to begin the defence of their Intercollegiate title against McGill Redmen Friday in Varsity Arena.

Blues have been through two pre-season tests to date, dropping both by close margins. St. Mike's Majors held them off in the third period last week to go away with a 4-3 decision, while East York Lyndhursts, currently engaged in the THL Major Series, won 4-2 last Friday night.

Lyndhursts were knotted 1-1 with the Blues after the first period Friday, when Phil Chapman scored midway in the frame, followed minutes later by George Whyte's first tally in a Blue uniform. Don Cossar put Varsity in front in the second stanza, but two quick goals by Nick around the seven-minute mark put Lyndhursts in front to stay. Reg Sprague added another in the third to finish the scoring.

Injury to centre Brian Anderson in last Friday's Mulock Cup football final kept him in Toronto while the Blues took off for Denver Tuesday night. Intermediate winger Ross Woods was brought up to replace Anderson. John MacDonald will move over to centre on the second line and Woods will patrol the right wing. Defenceman John Tolton was forced to stay behind also, and coach Jack Kennedy has made the trip with just four defencemen and three forward lines.

Blues meet Denver University in Denver tonight and tomorrow, and move out to Colorado Springs for Saturday and Monday games with Colorado College. The two clubs are probably the best in the American college circuit, and the Blues should return well drilled for their league opener against McGill next Friday.

University of Montreal Carabins have already beaten McGill 5-3 in the opening game of the schedule last week. McGill, who were expected to be considerably stronger than last season, when they provided the best opposition for the title-winning Varsity crew, looked particularly weak against Les Carabins. Early indications point to a much stronger league than last year, when the Blues virtually walked off with everything in sight, winning eleven and tying one under cover - a discovery

Rumour has it that UC Women may, in the near future, be asked to buy academic gowns and (worse) to wear them to lectures.

The academic gown has definite advantages. It protects clothes from chalk dust, coffee, jam, and the constant friction between "hardwood bench and ischial tuberosity." It makes it unnecessary to wear good, or even clean, clothes to class. But, as with all innovations, it may be best to proceed cautiously.

The dangers of the academic gown are less obvious but perhaps just as real. Greatest is the moral danger. It is a well known fact of psychology that hidden temptations exercise a stronger fascination than those easily examined, and conduce to a more morbid frame of mind. Soon after the introduction of "Mother Hubbards" by missionaries, the native of New Guinea, who had previously regarded each other's naked bodies as wholesome ingredients in a normal and pleasing environment, took to brooding long and darkly on what delights those shapeless garments might conceal. Before long, they had begun reciting dirty jokes, trading illicit post-cards, and sending away for sleazy American and French magazines.

We fear a similar set of events in UC: UC men, now so blasé in regard to the opposite sex, may be seriously affected by the advent of gowns. They will waste hours of lecture time staring at the heavily draped figures around them, and visualizing, visualizing . . . They may, in time, be driven to accost co-eds in the dark corridors (UC needs morality lights) and peek under their gowns. And they will discover — They will discover that 98% of the co-eds are wearing last week's blouse. —E.S.

a warning

The announcement of the formation of a student discount service on this campus marks a real achievement for the local NFCUS committee. The discounts obtained by this committee, which range from five to fifty percent, should prove of real benefit to students.

However, we would advise students to examine very carefully the stores participating in this plan, and the merchandise on which the discount is obtainable. There is no iron-clad assurance that all these merchants are reputable, or that their goods will be offered at a genuine discount.

Despite this grave objection, the scheme does hold great promise for the hard-pressed students, and we hope that the passage of time will enable the committee to weed out some of the more dubious stores on their discount list.

The Bible Must Go!

The Editor,
The Varsity:
The Varsity is to be congratulated on its stand regarding the freedom of the printed page. I would like to call the attention of all book burners and shelf cleaners to some pertinent facts which they have ignored so far.
What right does anyone have to ban certain books because of supposed or factual "obscenity"? I maintain: If this policy is desirable, then The Holy Bible will have to go first. Why? Here are some passages that should be well remembered by the purgers.

You stand there straight as a palm tree; I will climb that pole . . . but to sleep in the blossoms of henna . . . and there I will see you carressing of love . . . Passion flashes . . . like flame . . . Hasten, then, O my darling: play like a roe or a hart upon the mountains."

Canada's Future Materialism or Culture?

By DOUG HUBLEY

This article on the future of the Canadian nation was written in preparation for the arrival of Les Carabins, who will spend this weekend in Toronto.

Since the turn of the half century, competent journalists have been formulating conceptions of Canada's future. Another original opinion will slowly take form as a natural overflow of Carabin Weekend. On this occasion, students from the University of Montreal and University of Toronto will have an opportunity to criticize, emphasize, and project many ideas, which will mold a constructive conclusion to a memorable weekend.

The question of French-English friction, taken in both social and political veins, will play almost a negligible part in the discussions. The topics for debate indicate an assumption that Canada is a unit, accepted as a whole from Atlantic to Pacific, Arctic to Brock's Battlefield, leaving provincial differences in the faded background. The theme (Canada's future as seen by University students) bears with it sub-headings re: education, politics and social problems elucidated by challenging, specific questions such as: science versus humanism, should one pre-dominate? is there friction? Canada, the socialized inhibitions and society.

Such a futuristic study of Canada will produce numerous concepts but, as usual, little or no action. I think that an Exchange Weekend of this nature showers a generous share of its benefits on individual Carabins, giving rise to good-will and mutual friendship in a nation that tends to be bilingual, bi-national and bi-cultural.

In the opinion of at least one interested engineer, materialism and Americanism are outstanding forces in "Canada of Tomorrow." The buying power will be channelled into construction of ships and seaways, bridges and Buicks. In short, these well paid slide rule artists are building a nation with legs of concrete, a belly of steel and a head of fine textiles and timber. To reach this goal and none other would leave us a library, complete in every materialistic way, only containing in all its books nothing more than dy over dx.

We Canadians need something to fill these empty pages—a culture. At present and within the next fifty years, even the Arts students will admit that the engineer is doing his share (possibly more than his share) in promoting Canadian development. It remains with the poet, the philosopher, painter and thinker to off-set the balance that is to strain very low under Americanism. We, as Canadians with a common goal, must accept the challenge and show doubting onlookers that culture and humanism are far more valuable than a hydramatic Cadillac convertible. (I like a red one.)

What individual will take time to harness human resources, keeping pace with science's success with natural resources? Will the thinker be intoxicated with the exhaust from the Benz SL 300? Can the painter escape the smog and great grey factories long enough to develop his God-given talents? The answers to these questions may reveal comprehension of Canada's Future.

Is it possible to arouse you, sleeping but talented, men and women of our University who could counterbalance the aforementioned trend through a 35 hour a-week concentrated effort on something other than the flexural stresses and dy over dx of a steel beam?

Free Expression - For What?

This letter from the registrar of Ryerson Institute concerns a letter to the Editor which appeared in The Varsity some time ago criticizing Ryerson's attack on U of T dress standards. Over a year ago Ryerson authorities took steps to improve Ryerson's dress standards.

The Problem Of Abortion

The Law Says..

..... The Question

From the Criminal Code, 1955

237, (1): Every one who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of a female person whether or not she is pregnant, uses any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

(2) Every female person who, being pregnant, with intent to procure her own miscarriage, uses any means or permits any means to be used for the purpose of carrying out her intention is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

(3) In this section, "means" includes (a) the administration of a drug or other noxious thing, (b) the use of an instrument, (c) manipulation of any kind.

209, (1): Every one who causes the death of a child that has not become a human being, in such a manner that, if the child were a human being, he would be guilty of murder, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

(2) This section does not apply to a person who, by means that, in good faith, he considers necessary to preserve the life of the mother of a child that has not become a human being, causes the death of the child.

150, (2) (c): Every one commits an offence who knowingly, without lawful justification or excuse, offers to sell, advertise, publishes an advertisement of, or has for sale or disposal any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method of preventing conception or causing abortion or miscarriage.

209, (2) (c): Every one commits an offence who knowingly, without lawful justification or excuse, offers to sell, advertise, publishes an advertisement of, or has for sale or disposal any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method of preventing conception or causing abortion or miscarriage.

Creator

Doctor's job is to create life, not to destroy it.
Sandy MacPherson, IV Meds

Subservient

Therapeutic abortion is a purely legitimate action. However, the laws should not be changed. Unlimited abortion is a way of keeping the masses subservient.
XYZ, III UC

Opportunist

If we had easy legal abortions, it would be more convenient for the man.
Paul Weingarden, IV UC

Unfortunate

Yes, the standards should be relaxed. It is a rather unfortunate situation for the child if it is brought into the world from an unwed mother. These should definitely be able to have abortions. Too much money is being spent on orphanages to pay for others' sins. Population is increasing too rapidly.
Anon

Murder

Abortion is murder under any circumstances!
Mary McGriskin, II SMC

Birth Control

Birth control is preferable to abortion; if, however, a mistake is made, abortion becomes a necessity.
Bob McColden, II PreMeds

Always Room

An intelligent approach to each case should produce a course of action that would be condoned by a law-making body—in a word, this has my approval as such. Unfortunately there is always room for extravagance.
A. E. Wilson, II UC

Lucky

I consider myself lucky to have been born.
Les Green, II UC

As an Interim Measure

At present, I think that the law should be relaxed; it is not being observed anyway, and the law should go along with the spirit of the times. This would be, however, merely an interim measure. In the future, we can hope for a universally used birth control measure, such as an oral contraceptive, to stabilize temper-

Vocation

Any kind of abortion whatsoever is murder, it is the intentional destruction of human life. In the case of therapeutical abortions when the death of the mother is fairly certain there can still be no justification. The vocation of a woman is to produce children and if necessary to give her life for this purpose, once she has undertaken the responsibilities of matrimony. In every case, once a child is conceived, it is a human being and as such has a right to birth and existence.
LN

More and More Mistakes

One must take into consideration ethical beliefs. If one assumes that at the moment of conception, there is in fact, a living being within the female uterus, then diverse complexities arise. Can a medical doctor, dependent upon the decision of an overwrought woman—overwrought because of her condition—be justified in depriving an innocent being of life? Is it just to place the life of the unborn child in the hands of those incompetent of effective and proper judgment? For will not a woman faced with the question of therapeutic abortion, be more concerned selfishly and naturally with her own well-being, than with the right and good decision? A problem of such moment requires more than a haphazard and half thought out attempt at solution. The legal allowance of abortions under these circumstances makes a mockery both of the phenomenon of child birth and of the law. If so-called morons, through unpremeditated activity, effect an undesirable situation, they should be humane enough

Hypothetical

If I were married, and if my hypothetical wife's life were endangered, I would go to any means to save her. Otherwise, emphatically and enthusiastically, I am against abortion in any form.
VD, II UC

Unchristian

It is murder; it is unchristian. Just as much murder as if you shoot an adult. Both mother and child have as much right to live.
S. M., III SMC

MD has no Right

The present legal limits on therapeutic abortion should not be relaxed to include criminal abortion as it is not a doctor's right to pass judgment on a human life, even with the consent of the family involved.
S. Premed

to accept its consequences. If the intolerably joyous brew of female flesh and bonded bourbon on the rocks be irresistible, then certainly any end result should be accepted, if not accepted.

If the law sees fit to cater to unrestrained irresponsible activity, then the law reduces its prestige to absurd proportions, and gives impetus to more and more irresponsibility. The end result is a society making more and more mistakes.
John Woods, II UC

What do you think about therapeutic abortion—where the doctor feels that the sacrifice of the embryo child is necessary for the health—or the life—of the mother?

Should the present laws, limiting legal abortions to the above case, be relaxed to allow unmarried mothers, morons, and mothers in those families which cannot afford extra children to have abortions?

The Catholic Position

The Catholic position is that direct abortion is not justifiable. The principle is that you cannot use an evil means to achieve a good purpose, i.e. the destruction of a human life, that of the child, to preserve another human life, that of the mother. In the case of a ruptured appendix or a cancerous womb, the operation is not directly upon the foetal life. But to destroy the foetal life and leave the womb intact is a direct abortion.

Father John Kelly, SMC

Let Us Hope

Fortunate for those who will always oppose legalized abortion on irrational grounds, that the operation cannot be performed with a sufficiently high degree of safety to permit its legalization.

Under the circumstances we can only hope that a cheap and efficient oral contraceptive will make unwanted pregnancy an anachronism.
Richard Kalinovsky, I Meds

Justifiable

It seems to me that any abortion is as justifiable as anything of anything else. The only criterion for judging is "whether or not the individual can get away with it," because it will certainly harm nobody but himself.

On the other hand, it is doubtful that people will ever become enlightened enough to see it in this way.

There will always be laws, and customs, and laws, it is really quite irrelevant whether they are "good" or not.
Bill Smyth, III UC

Oust Causes

Any rational consideration of the problem should, by rights, disregard those absolute moral codes grounded in religious doctrine, for societal justification or disapproval of abortion is entirely relative to a given spatial and temporal context. Abortion is not in itself intrinsically wrong and were it not for the dangers involved in its surgical performance might in time become an accepted practice. However, since contemporary conventions and medical ethics combine to rule it unlawful, those in authority would do well to turn their attention to its causative factors (obsolescent standards of behaviour and economic necessity) and remove them rather than punning solely for the purpose of prevention.
J. E. Harris, I Meds

Refuge

Therapeutic abortion is the refuge of the incompetent obstetrician.
D. J. Enright, III Meds

Have the Child

No, it is much better to have a child, whether the woman is married or unmarried than to have an abortion.
J. C. Gray

Only When

Abortion is only justifiable upon the imminent death of both mother and child.
John Scott Thomas, IV Med

A Blot

An abortion is a stain on the honor of our present society... however, it is a necessary evil in the present circumstances of the world we are concerned.
W. B., III UC

Change View

I don't believe the law of abortion should change, but society should change its attitude towards illegitimate children.
MD, III Eng

Amateurs

When we have a tumor removed, we don't go to a keller surgeon, good hospital care, and all the precautions medical science can provide. But when we have an abortion, we have to be satisfied with the services of amateurs. Do we think more of our tumors than we do of our children?
Aesculapius, IV Med

The Only Answer?

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

Competent authorities estimate that between 10 and 25% of pregnancies end in abortion among women in Canada and the USA. Of these abortions, approximately 65% are accidental, 35% on purpose.

Abortions are not new. Women have been practicing abortion for centuries, by themselves, or with the aid of midwives or doctors. Extra children have too often been the straw on the camel's back to poor working class families. Students have revealed an entire generation of unwanted children born. Large families that are small. And the younger children in a small family may never have a sibling. The parents may have a child, but the child may never be born.

are born to mothers past thirty five than before.

For many mothers of the world today, abortion is the only answer to the problem of more and more children. They are ignorant of or they cannot afford birth-control methods. Or else the sale of and advice about such methods is illegal in the provinces or later in which they live.

What is the answer? Proper education of health and welfare and personal benefits for children cannot help. The world is at present faced with an impending population crisis as numbers go up and, with erosion and poor agricultural methods, the world's food supply for food production goes down. In a rich country like Canada, it is economically possible to have the government support these extra children, but this does not take into account the drain on the health of the mother involved.

The second answer is voluntary sterilization. Since 1909, when the first law for sterilization was passed in Indiana about 50,000 sterilized men have been performed in the States. Sterilization is effective for its purpose. For males it is a simple, quick operation. But it is frightfully expensive for the female.

The third answer is birth control. Leaving ethical considerations behind it, the most effective method of preventing pregnancy is to prevent pregnancy.

elizabeth schwartzkopf bartok premiere for conservatory robert shaw chorale

There are few sopranos in the world today who could get the response from a Toronto audience accorded Elizabeth Schwartzkopf at Eaton Auditorium last week. Paul Johnson, the auditorium manager, said he thought he could have sold out three nights running if Schwartzkopf could have stayed that long. The fortunate ones who managed to get seats for her single appearance had the rare opportunity of hearing a superlative artist at the peak of her career, probably the busiest and most sought-after singer in the concert world today.

Mozart, Schubert, Sibelius and Wolf composed the four parts of the programme, the Mozart showing some minor flaws in interpretation, but the Schubert, Sibelius and Wolf songs each given an artful and brilliant rendering. Schubert's Greichen am Spinnerade, one would think had been sung a dozen times in concert programmes that it could not help but lose one of its original charms: Thursday evening Schwartzkopf sang it with such lightness and delicacy that it emerged once more as something 'new' and 'exciting'. Her Nach dem Geliebten had a searchlessness which I have had to search for in Schwartzkopf—until Thursday evening it had always been her theatrical and technical virtuosity that I admired.

The Sibelius songs, which the soprano requested Schwartzkopf to sing in Helsinki earlier this year, are heavy, harsh, and lesser-known concert items, but were here given a careful and faithful interpretation for all who wished to enter Sibelius' sombre world. For her Wolf lieder, Schwartzkopf is famous and she presented a varied group including, Herr von Trageder Boden hier?, Zum Neuen Jahr and Philine. The programme concluded with the Mausfallen Spruechlein, a gay dramatic lieder in which Schwartzkopf exhibited her talented skill in vocal mimicry. I feel that this is the kind of singing which she does better than anything else except dramatic opera arias.

I feel that her work is highly contrasted in contrast with the warmer, more emotional (though possibly less controlled) artistry of the late Kathleen Ferrer, or, say, Lois Marshall. But it's possible that my reservations with regard to Schwartzkopf's singing would crumble if I were as aware as she and some of Thursday's concert goers are of the discipline and technical mastery which her kind of brilliant singing entails.

On December 1st, a Toronto audience will hear the Canadian premiere of Music for Two Pianos and Percussion by Bela Bartok. This unusual work is part of an all-Bartok programme being presented in The Royal Conservatory of Music's Concert Hall, under the joint auspices of the Conservatory and the Hungarian Helicon. The players will be Earle Moss and Gerald Rutledge (piano), and Thomas Burry and Harry Nicholson (percussion), with Victor Feldbrill conducting.

The balance of the programme, which honours the great Hungarian composer on the tenth anniversary of his death, consists of: Contrasts, with Ezra Schabas (clarinet), Morry Kernerman (violin), and Pierre Souvairin (piano); and Sonata No. 1, with Bartok's compatriot and colleague, Geza de Gresz (violin), and Pierre Souvairin (piano).

The programme is one of The Royal Conservatory's Special Events Series for the season 1955-56.

My reservations with regard to Schwartzkopf's singing would crumble if I were as aware as she and some of Thursday's concert goers are of the discipline and technical mastery which her kind of brilliant singing entails. Anne Carnwath

When the Robert Shaw Chorale performed in Massey Hall last Saturday, they gave their audience some most impressive moments, as well as some disappointments. Mr. Shaw adopts the practice of mixing up the individual voices, so that the choir is not grouped, in the usual way, into clusters of the different parts. This ensures an admirable vocal blending and evenness of tone, but I am by no means sure that it is suitable for Bach's music, where each part in the vocal polyphony counts for so much.

While it bespeaks tremendously purposeful rehearsal, this practice is almost bound to prohibit the communicating of any inspiration by the conductor in the moment of performance, and every last detail of interpretation must be worked out in rehearsal-time. During performance however, Mr. Shaw can have but little control over the individual parts, to blend or distinguish them as the occasion demands.

The performance of King David, by the late Arthur Honegger, was a stirring affair, and the soloists each made noble contributions to conveying to the audience the drama and passion in the work. The narrator, especially, whose role is a frame around which the music is built, created a part of terrific intensity. The chorus showed complete technical mastery over the extreme difficulties in the work.

A group of four "Love-Song Waltzes" by Brahms, was the first encore after the Honegger, scarcely a suitable aftermath to the dramatic intensity of the finale of King David: These were followed by "Oh dear! What Can the Matter Be?" and The Yellow Rose of Texas — a display of an appallingly low level of taste and musical manners: It is for me a problem so far unsolved, how a director with apparently the artistic integrity and fortitude to take on four works of the stature of the Magnificat and King David — both unsurpassed creations of their times — could descend to including such petty music as encores, even if encores were at all desirable in such a concert, which I find very doubtful.

Michael Oliver

We hear with regret of the death of Arthur Honegger, whose romantic symphony King David is noticed in the above review. He was in his 64th year.

Hanson Is... As Hanson Does five o'clocks perk up

Most of the dancing was excellent, but a number of the Willy Blok Hanson recital at Eaton Auditorium, was a very poor evening's entertainment.

The theme of the recital was the life of Willy Blok Hanson, commemorated by Willy Blok Hanson, interspersed with dancing by the student and their group of Willy Blok Hanson, and by Willy Blok Hanson himself. A dance recital to be successful should present to the audience a group of well-postured dancers, appealing through the method represented. It should not be an excuse to lampoon (in between-dance comment) other forms of dance, audiences, or show producers. Mrs. Hanson's philosophy of life may be in place in her dance studio and in her own home, but there is no need to foist it upon an audience who did her the honour of paying to see her group perform.

The choreography was generally up to the excellence we have come to expect from Willy Blok; the sword scene from Romeo and Juliet, and a so-called "samba number" (repeated because the audience liked it "so well"), were brilliantly executed and did ample justice to the choreography. Peter and the Wolf, danced by the children of the group was fantastically good. But the Landscape of the evening, a sequence with a bullfighter, a mature woman, and an immature girl was a danceless choreography, and was danced with a lack of assurance completely alien to the situation.

The dancers on the whole were good, a tribute to their fine training at Mrs. Hanson's Fine Art of Movement Academy, but the majority of them obviously needed more rehearsal. Outstanding were Charlotte de Neve who danced with a grace and fluidity that Willy Blok cannot achieve, and Christie Hanson, Willy Blok's nine year old daughter, who dances with a maturity of expression unequalled by most adult dancers.

This may be Willy Blok Hanson's last Toronto recital. Rumour has it that in addition to being asked to appear on Toast of the Town for two performances, she is being considered for a major role in the review New Faces. I suspect that these invitations have been given to Mrs. Hanson in spite of, and not because of, her snide on-stage references to other dance-forms, and would respectfully suggest that she stick to dancing in future appearances.

Susskind and the TSO

Concert-goers in Toronto on Wednesday night of last week were treated to an evening of good music — unfortunately, it can only be described as "good music" because neither the orchestra nor the guest artists, Mr. Leon Fleisher and Mr. Walter Susskind were performing as well as we may hope to hear them in future.

Mr. Susskind decided to conduct works already familiar to the TSO musicians so that he could concentrate his own particular talents on only one or two of them. This strategy worked very well because within the two hours we heard both the usual and the unusual in music — that is, what we have heard in the past, and what we hope will become the norm when Mr. Susskind has had more time to rehearse with the orchestra.

The Academic Festival Overture by Brahms, the opening work, was taken at a pace actually faster than the orchestra could handle and therefore the folk melodies were rather jumbled. But in the second selection, a Nocturne by Harry Freedman, written in the twelve-tone idiom, Mr. Susskind proved his adaptability. Originally a Stravinsky Scherzo was to have been performed, but since the score did not arrive in time for rehearsals, Freedman's composition was chosen.

pressed your young breasts" etc. Moffatt.

What's wrong with describing human behaviour factually (Kinsey) or poetically? If anywhere it is here that "the evil is in the eye of the beholder." Some unstable minds may become perverted by literature like this, but not everybody has a weak mind.

Unless the C.W.L. and those of like mind are prepared to toss all these books into the flames, including the Bible, they have no right to pour their wrath on the modern writers only. Why deprive them from privileges that we accord to the ancients in this free country?

Or could it be that the self purrers know more about modern literature than, say, about the Bible?

H. L. Wipprecht,
III Emmanuel

Beethoven's Fifth Piano Concerto combined the talents of the two guest artists. Mr. Susskind had carefully planned the orchestra's role and in parts managed to create it. Through the first movement, the balance between pianist and orchestra was delicately controlled. Unfortunately the Adagio and Rondo movements were not so well rehearsed, and the orchestra reverted to its former ways.

Leon Fisher, the pianist, belongs to the new school of tonal perfectionists, in that he recognizes that "tone" is determined only by the velocity with which the finger strikes the key. One could compare him with Julius Katchen, another musical scientist, but obviously Fleisher is the lesser artist because, as yet, his playing lacks passion. It is most important to realize that the mechanics of playing are a science, but it must also be recognized that music is not scientific; it is the expression of ideas within an emotional medium.

It is rather odd that a man with such an intellectual approach to the piano should have changed the tempo in his solo passages as often as Mr. Fleisher did. The most disturbing change was in the Allegro, and Mr. Susskind would not speed up the orchestra to meet his pace.

Susskind's delight in detail was most advantageously declared in the closing work of the concert. — Dvorak's Symphony No. 4 in G major. The Adagio was performed almost as well as it ever could be. Most of Susskind's efforts were concentrated on bringing to life the delightful warmth and sentiment expressed by Dvorak in this symphony. Happily for the audience, the conductor believes that a perfect and well-rounded performance of one work is more important than a whole concert on a mediocre level.

minds exploring words

CBC-TV's Exploring Minds (Sunday 6 p.m.) consisted of an erudite talk between D. Alan Miller and A. Strogdom of the University of British Columbia on the subject of semantics. Semantics, it would appear, is a branch of semiotics, and has two sister branches, pragmatics (emotional use of words) and syntax (relation between words themselves). Semantics itself was defined as "the relation between language and what language refers to" and as "the meaning and use of words."

Anecdotal flashbacks illustrating the use and abuse of certain accepted ceremonial uses of language followed hard upon the heels of learned definitions. These flashbacks were very amusing and to the point. Dr. Strogdom then described for interlocutor Miller some ordinary pitfalls in the use of words. Beware, he warned, of the non sequitur, and the ad hominem in arguments. Above all, he concluded, always ask what a given question really means, and always consider very carefully what is grounds for an answer. As the New Yorker would doubtless remark at this point, "all of which sounds like good advice to us."

First HH Concert Drew 475 Chairman Interviewed On TV

The first Hart House concert of the season, held in the Great Hall on Friday, Dec. 2, drew a record attendance of 475 people. The concert was sponsored by the HHCA and the HHCA.

Henry Best, Chairman of Hart House Activities, stated during an interview by June Dennis on the C.B.C. that 475 people attended the first concert and extra seats were necessary for the overflow crowd. Although quite pleased with this attendance he stated that "more money was still necessary in order to avoid curtailing parts of the final concert."

Walter Susskind, newly appointed Conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, commented that the concert was a perfect setting for concerts of this type. Mr. Susskind attended the concert only to learn Toronto for the first time.

Chessmen Hold Largest Simul May Be On TV

The largest simultaneous Chess Tournament ever held will be sponsored by the Hart House Chess Club in the Great Hall tonight and a Chess Club possession. The Simul is to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of organized chess at the University of Toronto.

Interviewed Wednesday evening by a Varsity staffer, Best stated that cheques were coming in every day and that he could "now anticipate a time when Memberships would be scarce." He urged all students who had not purchased memberships to do so before requests from outside the University fixed seating accommodation.

A lecture will be given by Dr. Boyd Neal in the east common room, Hart House on Friday, Dec. 2. All those holding Associate Memberships are invited to attend. Memberships are now being sold for $6.00 with a special student rate of $3.00.

Doctor Leaves

A member of the staff of the Faculty of Medicine has been appointed Professor and Head of the Department of Medicine at Dalhousie University, Halifax.

The standard number of Varsity's were printed and delivered on the campus. This number is determined according to enrollment and paid for by student subscription paid through the student's council.

Frank Anderson, III UC, the Ontario Chess Champion, and George Berger, II Mads will play 100 people simul tonight. The event is open to all who are connected with the University, including women. Those who wish to play must reserve their place by signing the list posted in the SAC Office or in the Hart House cafeteria, said a Chess Club spokesman.

Dr. E. C. Dickson, Associate Professor of Medicine, has been selected for the post. It was announced last night. Appointment as physician-in-charge to the Victoria General Hospital, Halifax, accompanies the university position.

When the paper was not delivered to the usual distribution points at the regular hour, several students came to the SAC office to complain and found that 10 cents per copy was being charged.

Dr. Dickson is an honors graduate in 1934 from the University of Toronto.

On his return to Canada, he rejoined the Faculty of Medicine.

To help defray extra costs of the 48-page issue, 2,000 extra copies were printed for sale to the general public. The different allotments were confused at the printers and the commercial copies were delivered first, making the student copies late in arrival.

Arrangements are under way to have the event televised by C.B.C.-TV, and filmed by Movie-tone News and the spokesman.

Colored Gowns For UC Women To Give Dignity

Academic gowns may soon appear at UC if further action is taken on a resolution passed by the Women's Undergraduate Association.

Gay Sellers (IV Hist.) enthusiastically supported Miss Barnett's resolution. "I'm all for that sort of snobbery," she said. "The dignity will perhaps rub off on us and become permanent. And besides, anyone who has tried knows you can make a highly dramatic exit wearing a gown."

A motion by Mary Barnett (IV UC) to the effect that women enforce the wearing of academic robes to all lectures and encourage the wearing of academic attire at all other arts colleges was passed by a vote of 19 to 11.

When contacted last night, Principal Jeanneret said that he was unaware that the resolution has been introduced. When asked for a comment he said: "I don't think I have any views. However, I remember when all UC women wore them and I think we were all for it. It made a uniform dress, and I think there is something desirable in that."

A further resolution introduced by Margaret Penman (III Eng. L & L) favoured the adoption of scarlet rather than the traditional black gowns of other colleges on this campus. The motion was amended by Noga Kaplansky (I Soc. and Phil.) to substitute "black, with red and white trim" rather than "scarlet." This motion carried.

The Principal said that the decision lies entirely in the students' hands. It is rumored that a similar motion will be introduced at the Lit. open meeting this afternoon at 4:00 p.m.

The amendment is reported to have been made on the suggestion of a red-haired student.

Bienvenue —

A number of students were reported to have refused to take the meeting seriously and abstained during voting. "Leave it to UC women to take a joke seriously," said Bally Iscove.

The majority, however, are reported to have made definite commitments and to have stated their positions heatedly.

Au cours des années, notre rencontre a aidé à convaincre les Torontois aussi bien que les Montréalais que le but de la culture canadienne n'est pas un mélange, mais une société comprenant deux cultures qui demeureront distinctes tout en se complétant l'une l'autre. Chacun vient puiser dans la culture qui n'est pas la sienne et y découvre des trésors qu'il ne soupçonnait pas.

Rhonda Strauss (IV UC) said that gowns are impractical. "They indicate academic snobbery and it is impossible to enforce them," she said.

Comme vous savez, les résultats de ces fins de semaine sont souvent immédiats. Deux des participants à la réunion de l'année dernière, Doug Hamlin et Rocko Martino, demeurent maintenant à Montréal, et ont renouvelé leurs contacts avec l'U de M. Et récemment, plusieurs Carabins sont venus passer l'été à Toronto.

One of the leaders of the gown faction, Mary Barnett, said in a press release: "For 30 years UC women have been naked academically. There has been nothing in their heads or on their backs to prove their student status."

Nous espérons que vous passerez tous une joyeuse fin de semaine, et que vous ferez de nouveaux amis parmi nous. Bienvenue, Carabins! Toronto est à vous!

Students Find Paper Costs Distribution Dismays Some

A number of complaints concerning the distribution of the Anniversary Issue reached The Varsity office last night.

The general public. The different allotments were confused at the printers and the commercial copies were delivered first, making the student copies late in arrival.

When the paper was not delivered to the usual distribution points at the regular hour, several students came to the SAC office to complain and found that 10 cents per copy was being charged.

"We are sorry about this mix-up," the editors said.

Sexes Divided On Issue Some Comments Vitriolic

The male and female undergraduates of UC are split on the question of wearing academic gowns to classrooms. The results of a poll taken yesterday show that men are overwhelmingly in favour, and the women greatly in favour.

Of the 35 men asked, 31 were violently opposed and 4 in favour, but of the 40 women questioned, 34 wanted gowns and only 6 were against the idea.

Whitney Hall girls thought the idea was "cool and comfy," and that gowns were "real dream-boats." Most of the girls seemed to have illusions of some grandeur in wearing a gown.

Comments from men at the UC residence are as usual unprintable, but one mild resident said, "What the hell do they think we are?" James Knechtel (II Mod H) said, "I'm in favour of wearing gowns to those few classes which I attend, and I think girls should wear translucent gowns and nothing else, so as to give themselves a break."

Claus Nieujaar (I M&P)—"No, no, it's unconstitutional."

Vito Targon (I General)—"the type of neckline on these gowns will suit some UC girls admirably."

D. R. Moffat (II C&F)—"I'm definitely against it. Nothing should be left to the imagination!"

Jerry Higgins (I General)—"Now the UC Women's Union has joined hands with Dior to straighten the few remaining curves in a co-ed's figure."

Annie Miller (II General)—"Yes! With black and white trim! This way you could wear anything or nothing underneath and nobody could tell the difference."

Marilyn Durhal (I Phys Ed)—"Yes! Boys should wear them too! It won't reduce a girl's sex-appeal."

Miss Bulganin, Don of Cody House, commented, "It should be up to the girls themselves. They should not be compelled. Boys might be more comfortable if the girls were covered up."

Betty Kaltenbruner (I Phys Ed) was one of the few girls polled who were against the idea.

Vogue Viewpoint

In view of recent outcries for the return of the traditional academic gowns to the campus of the University of Toronto, The Varsity publishes another 'first' in the field of fashion.

Just recently received from the House of Togliachi, Paris, are first sketches of their proposed new line in academic gowns for the active co-ed. These creations boast of "beauty in the classic tradition blended with the latest in functional design."

The first dream-like creation is to be known as "after five," which will solve that ever persistent problem of all young co-eds; what is to be worn for late lectures and academic soirees? It incorporates the Grecian flow and sweep with the modern sophisticated accentuating ruffle, executed beautifully in ermine, pastel mink or platinum sable.

The second, a must for every young lady who ventures into the world of aquatic activities in the depths of the Lillian Massey Pool, beautiful "sports gown" of the wrap around style. This comes in long medium or short, in the tantalizing softness of terry-cloth, or for the sleek line, a fine Egyptian cotton. All colors and designs are being incorporated into this special model; candy stripes in scarlet, fuchsia, indigo or canary, or polka-dots in all colors of the spectrum.

No academic gown is complete without its complementary mortar-board. Madame Togliachi has not overlooked this major point. "Ze chapeau academique should make ze most use of ze broad service set provides. Thees is to be done by allowing a full play of ze imagination on the sweep of tassels, plumes, ermine tails or florid plumage." One of the strikingly functional aspects of this new line in chapeaux is the combined bathing cap and snorkel-tube tassels, a new zenith in functional beauty.

Young co-eds need no longer roam this world academically naked, nor need they swath themselves in the form-unflattering drabness of university black.

This is an opportunity to cut the ever-so-fashionable figure even though confined within the musty and dank walls of the intellectual world.

Reward-Dead or Alive

This trophy is the property of the Canadian University Press. It is awarded each year to a member paper at the Canadian University Press Conference, which takes place during the Christmas holidays. It was awarded last year to The Varsity. The Varsity must now return it. The Varsity is offering a fifteen dollar reward for the trophy or for information leading to the recovery of the trophy in decent condition.

Conversazione Back Follows Fire Fight

Near the turn of the century, not long after a very controversial addition — coeducation — had been made to University of Toronto life, the U.C. Conversazione was one of the brightest lights in the social season at Varsity.

It was held in aura of soft candlelight and reserved — if not puritan — gallantry. Certainly it was not a boisterous affair but one turned out to be a real hot time. During the preparations for the ball, a servant carrying some lamps up a flight of stairs tripped and dropped them. The result was the famous fire which gutted the West Hall of University College.

To-night, under the direction of the Junior Graduate Committee — chiefly the alumnae — the Conversazione is being held for the first time since that fateful night.

The event, intended to provide a pleasant social occasion for graduates as well as for the undergraduates, will be steeped in tradition and respectability. It is under the patronage of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, the Honourable Louis Breithaupt.

In addition to the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Breithaupt, many University and Ontario government dignitaries will be present.

Although the ball will be an affair of high society it still promises to be fun. Upstairs in Sir James Ferguson Hall there will be dancing to the music of Frank Bogart and his Orchestra. Downstairs, entertainment will be provided by the stars of U.C. Follies of recent years. Wayne and Schuster, C.B.C. stars, have been invited.

Back in the 30's when puritanism was the vogue the superintendent's office tried to discourage dancing, which was considered wicked. This they managed to do, for the fire, and instead of dancing the men and women paraded about the hall to the music. While doing this they enjoyed the most delightful of conversations (hence the name Conversazione).

LINGUAPHONE is the standard scientific method of language study throughout the world.

Learn by Listening

Over a million students, civil servants, social workers, scientists and businessmen have acquired a new language . . . with remarkable ease . . . through Linguaphone. By listening to natural speech of carefully chosen speakers, at your leisure, you get the "feel" of the language. It stimulates your desire to learn. You listen . . . you repeat . . . you speak, naturally, easily.

George Bernard Shaw endorsed Linguaphone's scholarly standards and practical value by making recordings himself for the advanced courses in English. Many other notable figures . . . scholars, artists, statesmen, spokesmen of the U.N. and universities the world over use and enthusiastically acclaim the Linguaphone Method.

Now Linguaphone offers Canadian students its proven method of individual language study at special rates. And Linguaphone's famous 10-DAY FREE TRIAL after holds good! So take advantage of this "Special to Students" occasion. Mail your coupon NOW for descriptive booklet and full details.

... who only stand and wait

French Canada poses a great problem to the rest of Canada. Quebec is a unique province, a province which alone on the Canadian scene possesses a distinct individuality, a national culture, and a sense of acute social and racial consciousness.

Quebec has been suffering from an ingrown inferiority complex for years. She is perpetually afraid of losing her national heritage, her religion, her culture and her language. She wishes to retain her identity, and is afraid that the twentieth century forces of centralism may overwhelm her, and the majority of English Canadians submerge her into a shapeless mass.

In order to protect her existence, Quebec has fallen back on strange stratagems that raise great problems with the rest of the Canadian nation. The veto of the federal aid to Quebec colleges is only one of these examples. Quebec is the only province not to sign a fiscal agreement with the central government. Quebec is the only province to have strenuous and deep-seated objections to national security, and other social welfare proposals.

Quebec has also recently set up a cry about the naming of a new CNR hotel in Montreal with an English name. Petitions have been circulated, editorials have been written, and a lot else done in condemnation of this foul deed. What is remarkable is that if a hotel in Ontario had been named a French name, there would have been absolutely no reaction.

Quebec's suspicion of the rest of Canada has led her to fight with all her full vigour against any extension of federal powers. Yet without this extension, the federal government lacks the power to implement needed social legislation, to deal adequately with emergencies, and to employ contractual policies.

For Quebec's suspicion, the rest of Canada has had to pay dearly.

Quebequers cannot say that they are attempting to preserve provincial influence in order to maintain their civil liberties, because there is no province that tramples on civil liberties to such an extent as Quebec. They cannot say that they wish their independence to work out their own patterns of living, because all that they have in that regard are obsolete holdovers from another century.

The real basis for the persecution mania is that the entire structure of the French Canadian society is breaking up. The entire province is moving slowly and painfully out of the pattern of church-dominated narrow provincialism. It is becoming more cosmopolitan. Trade unions, socialism, new ideas, have all come to Quebec. And this transformation promises to be a long and painful one, although it is inevitable. Quebec cannot retreat into the 17th century, although powerful segments of her people seem to want to do so.

The rest of Canada stands waiting for Quebec. We will be glad when she wakes up and realizes that Canada is one country, not two nations or ten provinces.

On Christmas

By MARY MITCHELL, II MEDS

I can't understand Christmas. Santa Claus, Christmas trees, jingle bells, Rudolph, superficial goodwill, trying to get along with the guy next door. No, I'm sure these aren't really it. There's nothing in the words Christ's mass that has anything to do with these. "Christmas is the remembrance of a historical event."

Yes, I can see that. We think about something that has happened in time and space. But what?

"A baby was born in a stable — Who was the Son of God — Who was God as man."

That's absolutely beyond me. Why should God want to do that?

"Christmas is the manifestation of God's love. God so loved man that he did this."

Why should He love man? Man is such a minute imperfect being. Yes, I do believe that God is love. But why should he show his love for man this way? Why not just make sure that he has enough delicious food, smart clothes, high-power cars and ranch bungalows?

Because that still leaves man desperately longing for self-fulfillment. But how does man fulfill this longing?

"In Christmas God made it possible for man find this self-fulfillment."

Yes; people are always talking about making something of themselves, and about finding themselves. But what is this hypothetical man and how does he live?

"He lives in complete union with God."

Everybody agrees that Christ was this hypothetical man. He was the complete union of God and man. But isn't that just for monks and nuns and maybe some pious ministers? What about the ordinary guy like me? Why should I ever try to live like this? Because God is very God — Holy — Infinite — Eternal Creator — Omniscient — Omnipotent — completely beyond man's capacity to know or understand. Because He is our God and Creator; and we are his children. Yes, but how could I ever presume to attempt to live in union with this God?

"In Christmas God not only made his demand upon man; but also enabled him to fulfill this."

But how? God showed man the perfect human being and perfect human life. But this is not all. God revealed himself to man that man could better know him — serve him — worship him. He came to man to guide him — to help him — to live with him.

This is all too much for me to understand. Surely it is a mystery far too great for man ever to fully comprehend! I can only approach Christmas in awe — reverence — wonder — thanksgiving — humility — self-dedication.

Hoey!

The Editor,

The Varsity:
Hoey is the only decent work I can think of fit to describe the idea of UC girls wearing academic gowns. I remember the comment by a UC representative at the beginning of the term—no initiations because individuality was too strongly believed in at UC.

Is all this going to be washed down the drain by the snobbish sophisticates (supposedly) of our college? Several girls are strongly opposed to the idea. Are they going to be compelled to conform? The idea is fine for these girls that come "dressed to the teeth"; but what about the ones that depend on white bucks and saddle shoes? They'll look downright ridiculous. And finally, the "shrouds" are expensive. I for one refuse to pay out twelve or fifteen dollars to look like I'm on the verge of being buried all the time.

Will You Help?

The Editor,

The Varsity:
You, we think, as Editor of the Varsity, would be the most logical person to turn to for, with a position such as yours, you must be in close contact with many people around our age.

You see, recently we moved to Toronto and now that we are no longer in the High School league, we find it difficult to meet friends in the twenty-one and on age group.

No doubt, at this point you will advise us to join a Y group. We have, and now we ask you: "Have you ever attended a Y dance?" And the church groups seem to range around eighteen or nineteen. The friends we have made in our vocational field are numerous, but our particular companies frown on business friends and social friends being one and the same.

Toronto is a pretty big city with many kids our age. Do you believe you can help us solve our problem?

We would be most grateful if you could help us.

Varsity office) bore a substantially large white banner on which were boldly printed the words, "We want our own flag." That same evening a story describing this banner appeared in the Toronto Daily Star, and a prominent Toronto Radio commentator mentioned the banner saying that "It is a pity that a great nation like Canada should be represented by a foreign flag."

The point I wish to emphasize is that The Varsity carried no account whatsoever of this display of true Canadian National Pride. Can it be that the reporting staff of The Varsity has become so inefficient that such a large black and white banner should go unnoticed while in plain sight of The Varsity office? Or is it that, for some reason, The Varsity was afraid to print such news and is trying to keep the knowledge of this incident from the student body? Is the situation such that displays of national pride in Canada are to be put down and quickly silenced? Is Canada so stuck in the mire of British tradition that we must fly the British flag and sing the British National anthem? It is a pity that the staff of The Varsity choose to show such a bigoted attitude towards those few real Canadians who show some spark of true national pride.

Hart House Orchestra Present First Concert

"This was all the students' idea, and they deserve the credit for having brought this orchestra here tonight despite many obstacles," commented conductor Boyd Neel at the conclusion of the first concert of the Hart House Orchestra Associates' season. Four more concerts will be presented by the Hart House Orchestra, the next to held on Dec. 11.

Boyd Neel set the tone for the whole series by delivering a witty background briefing before each number was played. In contrast to the dignified silence that devoutly permeates the regular Hart House Concerts, Great Hall Sunday evening emanated laughter and an air of informality rare in this setting. A small orchestral group and a warm rapport with his audience seem to be all Boyd Neel needs to create a spirited evening of music. Vivaldi's Concerto in D Minor came first on the program, and received a skippy yet respectful treatment.

A Mozart Divertimento (K138), described by conductor Neel as "coffee-house music" followed without as strict and controlled a rendering. The last two items, and by far the two most interesting—Grieg's Holberg Suite and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C, Opus 48 for strings—seemed more challenging. The Holberg Suite is actually quite a vital piece of music, but has to be played at a quick pace with a sustained level of clarity which I do not feel the orchestra here succeeded in achieving. The Tchaikovsky, however, was satisfactorily handled, particularly the second and third movements. It was by far the best part of the programme.

When the enthusiasm for listening to 'paid' music on a Sunday evening has subsided a little, it will be interesting to see if the Hart House orchestra manages to survive, and if Sunday evenings at Hart House can carry two concert series. If anyone is able to keep the orchestra going, it is Boyd Neel, and the breath of fresh air he and his orchestra brought Great Hall Sunday evening is something the students should try to hang on to—say nothing of the luxury of having an orchestra that is really their own.

Magdalene Choir Concert

The St. Mary Magdalene Singers under the direction of Dr. Healey Willan will sing this Sunday at the Christmas Concert of the Hart House Sunday Evening Concert Series. The choir have sung at this concert intermittently since 1932, and every year since 1944.

The first part of the programme will consist of English Church Music. The duties day now closeth, Healey Willan's Missa Brevis XI, and works from the great Tudor School of English music by Thomas Weelkes and William Byrd.

The second part of the programme will be made up of carols, many of them traditional, and have been sung before and are repeated this year by request. They will include Ave Maria by Bach, Dormi Jesus by Rubra, Lullaby My Liking by Holst, The Shepherd's Song by Fleming, Here are we in Bethlehem and Sun of Righteousness by Healey Willan, The Twelve Days of Christmas.

canadian academy art hands high

The scope of the seventy-sixth annual Royal Canadian Academy show embraces architecture and mural cartoons as well as painting and sculpture. The murals are hung so near the ceiling that one can only roughly estimate their merits, and the architectural display is too fragmentary to stand as an exhibit.

Amateur technique and a dearth of inspiration typify a bulk of the painting and sculpture. The best, though unashamedly derivative for the most part and not notably ambitious, are worth seeing.

The trend to freedom of personal expression and design for its own sake have given the artist such scope that he may find it difficult to discipline himself to a well-defined program, especially if his judgment cannot keep pace with his imagination. This was apparent in the sculpture exhibited. U.S. artist James Lord of Donald Davis was not only satisfying as a portrait, but was also superior as sculpture to those with purer aspirations.

Two Figures by James Kump bears a superficial resemblance to Braque's C 26 but has resonant harmonies and powerful rhythmicising with a joyous vitality that is entirely his own. Jack Markell's Two Figures is a romantic portrait of the equivocal gesture and human predicament tinged with decadence. A provocative composition by Tony Urquhart The Inn Chairs is a varied and lively provision rendered in a casual impasto of greys. My favourite

A special feature of the Academy show this year is an exhibition of sketches and photographs of sculpture of the late Walter Seymour Allward. The sketches Art Nouveau in character are delightful renderings of allegorical themes. Personal and impetuous they afford direct contact with the man and a better understanding of his serious work. Many of his original decorative monuments are pompous and dull. But Art Nouveau study of Allward's sculpture reveals a fine sensitivity and a masterful knowledge of anatomy. I was reminded of Rodin. Yes, I feel that the anecdote, so delightful in his sketches, does not come off in monumental sculpture. The fault may also derive from his obsession of enlarging from plaster models conceived at a small scale. At any rate the formal monumental setting in which his sculptures are often found is enough cause to destroy its humanity.

Humane 'MIKADO'

There is something heartening in seeing a theatre company handle a traditional piece in an almost belligerently traditional way, yet managing to put the whole thing across with a vitality that makes the reviewer rub his eyes and wonder whether he really has seen the piece done before. This effect is currently being achieved by the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, in their two-week stand at the Royal Alexandra with Gilbert and Sullivan tried-and-true. Their opening offering, The Mikado (began 'way back at the beginning of the week) must surely be the prime example of the company's ability to pick up the shards left them by the amateur company, and piece them together again to form another piece of delicate porcelain.

"Delicate" may seem an odd adjective to apply to G and S, yet in the case of The Mikado it is an apt one. And in this production we had all the bubblemeness we could expect—even Fisher Morgan's Pooh-Bah didn't thump around the stage, but bobbed about like some seraphic barrage balloon. The mammoth, many-colored chorus managed to be at once litous and audible, while Peter Goffin's scenery created an effect of halcyon spaciousness. The whole show, in fact, was as breezy as a peppermint-drop.

The rest of the cast could hardly have been better, especially Donald Adams as the Mikado himself. His brawny frame and bar-room bass were supplemented by a triumph of makeup that left him looking like a cigar-store Indian. Altogether, a magnificent little characterization, as was the supremely self-important Pooh-Bah that shrivelled away before our eyes at the touch of authority.

The D'Oyly Carte first came to this continent in the year The Varsity started publishing. There should be something in this fact to help me round off this review nicely, but the polished phrase escapes me. Anyway, it's a coincidence, isn't it?

Neil Ralston

Numbing Night Number

The title of the current attraction at the Odeon Hyland—The Night My Number Came Up—does not refer to the picture's chances for an Oscar. Yet it does provide an interesting ninety minutes of entertainment.

The story opens in Hong Kong where one Air Commander Lindsay, ably and (in the final scene) delightfully acted by Michael Hordern, is demanding that the search for a missing aircraft be conducted in a most unlikely region. Then follows a flashback which constitutes most of the film. (This, to the momentary confusion of the viewers is introduced without warning.) At a party, Lindsay is revealing a dream which he has had. In the dream he saw the vivid details of the crash of a plane which carried some of his fellow guests. As soon as this flashback within a flashback is finished and we have returned to flashback 1, the conditions for the dream's fulfilment begin to occur, until the people involved become quite alarmed about the possibility of its proving true. The final strange events of the flashback are overshadowed by the conclusion of the picture; an ending effective if not brilliant.

Unpretentious concerned only with presenting the simplest of plots, the film does not deal with extraneous perception or any novel theories of fate. Also a delectable philosophy regarding the situation is kept to a minimum. The events are not used as a background for uniting several different and individual plots as in the more typical story such as The Bridge of San Luis Rey. Not one extraneous clutter up the main theme.

All attention is focussed on the plot, which does not suffer because of its superstitious nature. The climax that the plane will crash seems as great and as certain as No Highway in the Sky in which a similar catastrophe was based on scientific fact. The film is a good one, and it is a pity that it is not more widely seen.

Margaret Penman

attempts at human. Some of these involve references to such hackneyed subjects as the number 13. Because of this emphasis on action and anti-plot there is no psychological depth to the picture. An example of this occurs when the passengers are at a dance and the subject of one song is about a dream. In real life such a coincidence (which could happen) in such a situation would be uninteresting. This seems to have escaped the moviemakers who have used the incident merely to jolly the audience.

Of the two characters consistently concerned about the dream and who would have been good psychological studies, one a former fighter pilot well portrayed by Denholm Elliott, is neglected in favour of more colorful characters. The other, a broad civil servant amusingly played by Alexander Knox is not treated seriously. Some unintentional suspense arises because a detail of the dream was the crash-up of one of the passengers. Which one will probably not emphasize by the end of the film. The question arises, and a general theme whether or not the plane will crash.

Although The Night My Number Came Up is not such a good picture as it is and does not hold as a work of art, it is a good one. It is a pity that it is not more widely seen. A final word—the picture is a good one, and it is a pity that it is not more widely seen.

Muriel Morley

the night of the shamrock

Most recent among the new companies attempting to establish themselves in Toronto theatre is the Irish Theatre group. This company hope to found a permanent theatre in Toronto, intending to produce Irish plays, although by no means intending to limit their selections to Irish literature. With their first production, Shadow and Substance, running currently at the Museum, they make an auspicious debut into the local stage scene.

For their first production the Irish Theatre has chosen a modern drama by Paul Vincent Carroll. Conflict centres in the formalistic religious views of the austere classical canon, opposed by the more liberal, reforming position of the young village schoolmaster. Set between these two protagonists, placating them and at length sacrificing herself to them, is the servant Brigid with her pique and simple faith.

A revealing study of Roman Catholic Ireland, Shadow and Substance postulates the absolute authority of the Church, symbolized in the canon, with its demands upon the personal lives of its people, and shows the Church's final inadequacy to meet their needs. In the ultimate detail of self and sacrifice of the personal emotional factor as the overbearing rigidity of doctrine the play as a title implies points up the ironic and tragic differences between varying conceptions of "shadow and substance."

Flowering in physical stature and spirit, Brigid, Grace, the young woman who is the Canon Skerritt rules with an iron hand. The man never breaks until required to do so in the final scene, achieving this break, as well as the rest of his part, with eloquence and dignity.

His grandeur is offset by the moving performance of Brigid, the simple servant girl, who is at once haunted and inspired by her visions of St. Brigid. Miss Pözer, who looked the part beautifully, plays quietly and effectively throughout, avoiding the pitfall of overacting and exaggerated sentimentality.

Perhaps the comic successes of the evening go to Elizabeth Hicks and Lawrence Beattie. Miss Hicks was an admirable spinster. Her nephew, Francis Ignatius O'Connor, played by Lawrence Beattie was extremely amusing as the simpleton schoolteacher.

With regard to staging one can only regret the limiting facilities of the Museum Theatre. The set designers, however, made the most of its barren possibilities and did achieve a wonderful "through the window" glimpse of the Irish countryside. Entrance and exit were carefully planned and well thought out. The lighting was superb and seemed to double as outside effect as well as being to the point of the interior.

The production is a most interesting and successful one. It is a pity that it is not more widely seen.

Rabbi Bokser Addresses Service Smith And Cunningham To Attend

Rabbi Bokser

Rabbi Ben Zion Bokser, one of America's leading religious personalities, will address the third University Religious Service, this Sunday, December 4, at 11 a.m. in the Great Hall of Hart House.

President Sidney Smith and the Hart House Chaplain Rev. and James Cunningham will take part in the traditional Jewish service. Rabbi Aaron Kammerling, with the assistance of Beth Tsedek Synagogue Choir and Cantor Joseph Cooper, will conduct the prayers.

A United States Army Chaplain during the last World War, Rabbi Bokser is at present spiritual leader of the Forest Hill Jewish Centre, Forest Hills, Long Island. He is a lecturer in Homiletics at New York's Jewish Theological Seminary, centre of Conservative Judaism in the U.S., and acts also as editor of the Seminary's weekly radio programme "The Eternal Light."

Dr. Bokser has written Pharisaeic Judaism in Transition, The Legacy of Maimonides and, in 1954, his latest work The World of the Caballah wherein he examined mystical Judaism.

Among the journals in which his writings have appeared are Journal of Religious Thought; Judaism; Review of Religion; Reconstructionist and The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

Ottawa. The Rector of the University of Ottawa recently announced the possible opening next Fall of a Faculty of English Common Law in the capital's French language university. The proposed Faculty would be the fourth such school in Ontario, and would make the University of Ottawa the only university in the world offering courses in both English Common Law and French Civil Law.

St. John's, Newfoundland: Burning with "righteous anger," a motocrade of irate university men pursued a busload of specially-invited Memorial women to the very gate of their host's home at Pepperrell Air Force Base on the night of October 20. A female U.S. Air Force captain had previously invited several hundred "nice girls" to meet the "anxious" men on this American base, but religious authorities sifted the acceptable number to a mere fifty co-eds.

The latter attributed the protests of their male classmates to "jealousy and childishness," while one outraged bachelor insisted that the girls should be punished as their kind would have been by their more primitive ancestors—by "branding on the forehead."

Winnipeg: President Saunders of the University of Manitoba officially opened the ninth annual session of the student mock parliament in the Provincial Legislative Buildings last Wednesday night.

The House discussed issues including: a thirty million dollar increase in Canadian Colombo Plan aid; recognition of Communist China; the Conservative National Health scheme; amendments to the Trade Unions Act; Federal Government interference in private radio, TV and airlines; cash advances to farmers on stored grain; and a Canadian-owned Trans-Canada Pipeline.

Bad Penal Code Charged McGill Daily Probes Jails

Montreal, (CUP): Inhuman treatment of prisoners and an unsatisfactory penal code highlight charges levelled by the McGill Daily in a recent four-page section devoted to the Canadian prison system.

Attacking Montreal's Bordeaux Jail in particular, the student daily quoted "an ex-convict who was there" on his treatment in the penitentiary. Details in the stories bring to mind tales of persecutions in the Middle Ages.

This ex-prisoner wrote of "unbelievable filth and vermin" and

"blasphemous ordeals in which prisoners were chained to the floor for as long as three days and nights," and "a system in which the fearful power of the guards can be assured only by constant bribery."

The special spread also attacks the problem of homosexuality. One of the stories quotes a letter written by one female prisoner to another. It illustrates the incidence of this ever-present problem where people are shut away for lengthy periods.

Stories in the issue attempt to show the stigma of imprisonment does not end on leaving prison. One writer claimed he was "hounded as a jail-bird, arrested on any or all suspicions, prevented by my past from obtaining employment and living as a respected citizen."

Reformers base their attacks on the system on such revelations as this. They are seeking an abolition of prisons in Canada. Far from being an impossibility, they consider it a necessity in deterring crime. With a population about three times that of Canada, Britain has only one-sixth the number of prison inmates. Many jails there have been closed. Crime, moreover, has decreased there by as much as thirty-five percent under the new order.

Probation is widely practised. Canada follows this lead only to a very minor extent.

The McGill Daily describes conditions in men's prisons as wretched, and those in women's penal institutions as "unbearable." The paper says "More than 50 percent of the inmates are insane, and this coupled with the filth and oppression existent makes prison life a torture rather than a deterrent."

Whether the prisoner is man or woman, sick or well, the punishment should fit the individual and not the crime, claim prison reformers.

This state of idealism could be reached in part if the Archambault Report recommendations were carried out. These include allowing time for the payment of fines and an effective probation system.

The theme of the McGill campaign is that citizens will not be made to obey laws by force; such a state can only be secured by improvement of standards of living through education.

Bill of Rights Needed? Pickersgill Will Speak

The Hon. John W. Pickersgill will be the Honorary Visitor next Wednesday at the Hart House debate on the motion "A Canadian Bill of Rights is Imperative."

Speaking for the motion will be Ron Price (III Law), and Norma Stoner (III Law). The speakers for the noes will be Tom Hammond (IV UC) and Michael Shoemaker (IV Trinity).

Mr. Pickersgill is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. He is a graduate of the Universities of Manitoba and Oxford. For eight years he was a lecturer at the University of Manitoba.

Mr. Pickersgill was private secretary and close adviser to Prime Minister Mackenzie King during the last ten years of his term of office. He continued in the same capacity when Mr. St. Laurent succeeded Mr. Mackenzie King in 1948. He was appointed clerk of the Privy Council and secretary of the cabinet in June, 1952.

In June, 1953, Mr. Pickersgill was appointed Secretary of State and in August, 1953, he was elected as member of parliament for the Newfoundland riding of Bonavista-Twillingate. He was made Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in July, 1954.

Women will be allowed to attend the debate, as is customary when a cabinet minister is the honorary visitor.

Century of Tradition Will Go If Lit. Soc Adopts Oligarchy

A hundred years of tradition may go by the board if a motion to amend the open meetings of the UC Lit is passed at the next meeting.

Concerned with the poor attendance and lack of interest in these meetings, a member of the executive administration has cast a vote at a recent meeting and moved the adoption motion from the floor.

The motion tabled was that the "open meetings of the University College Literary and Athletic Society be abolished."

Executive member Bill Smith (III McP) moved the motion from the floor at the house as a private member.

The motion will be voted upon at the next open meeting of the society in mid-January, since the latter involved a change in the constitution.

If it is carried it will mean that the Lit meetings will be closed for the first time in a hundred years. Should the motion go through, aid Mr. Smyth, "it will mean that the executive becomes an oligarchy and that ordinary members of University College will have no say in what goes on at the meetings. Even at the end of the year they will only be able to vote for members nominated by the executive."

"However, I felt a tremendous burden had been reached in the affairs of the UC Lit when I saw the beautiful student who attended today's meeting, with barely enough interest or energy to vote, and decided that the executive could quite capably handle any of the problems that may arise."

If the next open meeting does not pass the motion a committee is to be set up to study these meetings with a view to increasing attendance.

This development parallels the recent motion discussed by the Women's Undergraduate Association of UC, for "Revision or Abolition" of open meetings of the WUA.

Advance notice of the motion ensured a large attendance at the November 3 meeting of the WUA in the newly opened JCR, when the motion was defeated by a unanimous vote.

Canadians and Canadiens Mix Then Carabins Return Home

Bonjour et Au Revoir

Gave New Ideas About Quebecois

Amid camera flashes, cheer leaders and "Le Chant des Carabins," more than 45 students of the University of Montreal were welcomed to Toronto Thursday night for a weekend of discussion, parties and sightseeing.

Four days of challenging ideas later, participants were able to say: "Les Carabins gave us a new understanding of French-Canadians."

Or, in the words of President Smith: "The visit of Les Carabins has become a regular and inspiring part of our academic and social time-table."

You teach us that to be Canadian is also to be Canadian; that the University of Montreal and the University of Toronto are but different aspects of our one national heritage.

Principal Jeanneret of UC officially welcomed the visitors at a reception in the Trinity College cafeteria Thursday night and shortly afterward the piano was playing favorite French-Canadian songs.

Friday morning the visitors were welcomed throughout the campus at lectures and on tours. President Meeks and Professor Tretloway of Victoria College welcomed the group to the Vic Union.

Every participant on the weekend had a chance to interchange ideas within a small discussion group, and Doug Hudson, publicity manager for the weekend.

Friday evening, Warden McCulley received the students in his apartment before the candlelit dinner in Great Hall. The group spent the Saturday morning, and the rugs were rolled up for "une grande soiree."

To see the city as a whole, Les Carabins were taken on a bus tour Saturday morning, followed by an impressive banquet at the Royal York Hotel.

The group settled down at the St. Michael's College Co-Op for an afternoon of discussion groups. It was not enough to subdue the vivacious French-Canadian spirit, however, which came to the fore Saturday night.

Said Donna Lough (III Vic) after it was all over, "The atmosphere that develops over Carabin Week is unique — you really have to experience it to understand it."

LEFT: Les Carabins from the University of Montreal and Toronto students listen as Principal Jeanneret of UC addresses them in the Trinity Buttery after their arrival. Should Movies Be Censored? -- POT To Debate

Censorship, a topic of much informal debate at Varsity this year, becomes formalized tomorrow evening as the Engineers and girls of Physical and Occupational Therapy debate the resolution "Resolved that Censorship of Books and Movies is Desirable."

POT will defend the resolution starting at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the POT huts.

Setting forth the Government position, Judy Christie (I POT) said, "We maintain that children should be protected from immoral films and literature until they have reached maturity."

She is opposed by Jim Vasoff (IV Eng Bus) who is "dead against the principle of censorship for an adult audience."

Supporting the resolution is Beryl Luttrell (III POT) who recounted that "since the League of Nations had once advocated

Juvenile Delinquency TV Show Feature

Five Montrealers got together on Exploring Minds Sunday evening (CBC-TV 6 p.m.) to discuss the current and controversial problem of juvenile delinquency.

The men—two police officials, a court official, a psychiatrist and a sociologist—pointed proudly to Montreal's record in handling the problem. They said that only 10 per cent of juvenile offenders in Montreal courts ever appeared a second time.

Talk on the McGill-sponsored Program centred mainly on the problem of rehabilitation. The police officials felt that discussing the teen-ager's problems with his family was the most important factor, while the psychiatrist and the social worker thought they needed social facilities to keep them out of pool rooms and off the streets.

"Although there was a dramatic flashback at the beginning showing a group of teen-agers living it up in a pool hall," said a viewer, "the rest of the presentation was just disparate talk that simply put in the time."

"All in all, one of Exploring Minds' poster attempts to get its teeth into a subject."

Student Injured In Accident Friday As Treasure Van Truck Overturns

A U of T student was injured Friday night when the Treasure Van truck, returning from Montreal to Toronto, overturned on Highway No. 2 near Cornwall.

Colin Hamilton, II UC, a passenger in the truck, had the tendon of his leg badly cut, and the driver, Bob McNight, escaped with a shaking-up, when a car suddenly swerved in front of the truck. The truck skidded on the slushy highway, and overturned in a ditch.

The two boys had driven the truck down to Montreal, loaded with Treasure Van goods and were returning to Toronto the same day to pick up a second load.

Police and an ambulance were called, and Hamilton was taken to the doctor in Cornwall. McNight began to hitch hike back to Toronto, arriving here late Saturday afternoon. Hamilton came in from Cornwall via bus and was taken to the hospital.

Considerable damage was done to the truck which is one of two belonging to Treasure Van. The top was crushed in, as was the driver's door, and the windshield was smashed. Colin Hamilton's glasses were also broken.

"The police have absolved Bob of all responsibility for the accident," said Sybil Strachan, Treasure Van publicity manager.

Chess Champs Are Victors In Biggest Tournament Ever

Two Toronto students chalked up an impressive score last Thursday at the largest Tandam Simul Chess Tournament on record.

100 Chess enthusiasts crammed the Great Hall of Hart House to compete with two International Masters.

Frank Anderson, III UC Chess Champion of Canada, and George Berner, II Meds, played for over seven hours to win 79 games, draw 11 and lose 7. Playing alternately and without consultation the Masters devoted an average of 2 minutes and 6 seconds apiece to each game.

The victorious seven percent were: N. Glasberg, B. Evans, V. Chrom, F. Evert, A. Tarvydas, B. Nazarko, and K. Brown.

Kathryn Buchanan, the first woman to draw a game, was given a bouquet of roses and awarded the title of Hart House Chess Queen.

The occasion of the event, which was covered by Warner Pathe News, CBC TV and Canadian Press, was the Diamond Jubilee of organized Chess at the University.

Fall Convocation at U of T

Four Canadian scholars were presented with honorary degrees at the University of Toronto's recent Fall Convocation. Dr. Lachlan Gilchrist, former professor of Geophysics, and Dr. Chester Martin, former history professor, were granted the degrees of Doctor of Science and Doctor of Letters, respectively.

Professor H. G. Thode, Director of Research at McMaster and Principal of Hamilton College, and Professor F. M. Saltz of the English Department at the University of Alberta were also granted honorary degrees.

President Smith described Dr. Gilchrist as "the father of Geophysics in Canada" and a "professor and prospector." He spoke of Dr. Gilchrist's pioneering work in the field of geophysics, and in astronomical research, and referred to his generous donations for scholarships and fellowships.

Dr. Chester Martin, author of the "Foundations of Canadian Nationhood" in 1904 was the first Rhodes scholar from North America. A graduate of the University of New Brunswick, he was the first holder of the chair of History at the University of Manitoba. Since then he has come to the History Department of the University of Toronto.

"A teacher, courteous, considerate yet passionately devoted to his subject; an historian close to his sources; wise in his interpretations, provocative in his expositions, a seer who has made us conscious of our destiny, a great Canadian," said Dr. Smith.

Professor Thode, a teacher, researcher, and administrator, has done much work on the atom, especially at the nuclear research centre at McMaster. He was described by Dr. Smith as an adornment of Canadian scholarship, a worthy representative "of a renowned sister institution which has grown mightily since leaving the confines of Bloor Street—who, as a United Churchman in a Baptist alliance, will ensure that in the McMaster centre of nuclear research there will be no fission on Sunday."

"Professor Saltz," said Dr. Smith, is "above all, scholar and teacher." He said Professor Saltz followed in a great tradition of teachers of English in Canada—men of bold scope, whose words were alive with ideas, with wit, and with imagination. "Like them," said Dr. Smith, "he exemplifies scholarship purged of pedantry."

Dr. Smith presented Professor Saltz to the Chancellor as a "soldier, stylist, scholar, teacher, enemy of the tawdry and plati-tudinous, creative expositor of literature."

A Scholar Honored

At the Fall Convocation of the University of Toronto, held recently in Convocation Hall, Dr. Chester Martin, Professor Emeritus of the History Department, was presented with an honorary Doctor of Letters degree.

that censorship be 'indeterminable within determinable limits' then it would be desirable to do likewise in this day and age."

The second speaker for the Opposition, Winston Hay (II Mech), adamantly stated, "In a democracy there is no room for censorship, since this only perpetuates intellectual immaturity."

Lyn Goodall, President of the POT Debating Society, said that this debate will herald in a heavily-laden schedule of debates next term. She said that "since this an open-debate, a special invitation is forwarded to all Engineers."

RUGGERITES TIE IRISH FOR TITLE

Field In Poor Shape Varsity Scores Early

In the finals of the Toronto Rugger League, played at Eglinton Park on Saturday, the Varsity Blues had to be content with sharing the cup with the Toronto Irish II.

The game was played on a field in the worst possible condition, being partly under water, and with patches of snow elsewhere. The sleet which fell during the game, together with these conditions, took all science out of the game.

The match started with a big surprise for the Irish. The Blues, kicking off, advanced right down the field and John Schindler picked up the loose ball and scored. The try was unconverted.

The Irish came back with a series of dangerous forward rushes, but each time Roger Hirst was there to hold the Blue line. Handling the ball was almost impossible, and the forwards had all the game, kicking and rushing.

The second half was a repetition of the first, only it was the Irish who scored in the opening minutes. The two teams, at times ankle deep in icy water, strove hard to score again, and all were relieved when the final whistle blew, leaving the score tied at 3-3.

The Varsity Rugger side has been much improved this season, coming second in the league, and sharing the cup in the play-offs.

In an exhibition game at St. Andrews College, they were only beaten by 8 points to 5 by the Scottish I, a prominent side in the top Ontario league.

The number of players has also increased, and this year we have always been able to turn out two full teams, and when hard hit by injuries, there have always been replacements.

This year there was an interfaculty match between Trinity and Meds which though viewed with an element of humour, was a very encouraging start to what is hoped will spread throughout the University.

Interfaculty Summary

St. Mike's A's advanced to the final round of the interfaculty lacrosse playoffs Friday afternoon, topping Skule Seconds 11-8.

The Irish were never headed after moving into a 4-1 half-time lead, and will meet defending champions University College in games Monday, Wednesday and Friday to decide the title.

Five goals by Jim McKinnon set the pace for the winning Double Blue, while Tighe, Hume and Wheeler added two apiece, Fisher and Polecrone led the Engineers with three tallies each, while Watson added two.

The Irish have dropped two encounters with UC during the regular schedule by scores of 17-6 and 13-5. Senior Skule were generally considered to be UC's toughest opposition but the Redmen eliminated them 17-16 earlier last week.

Forestry just missed the unofficial campus soccer crown on Friday afternoon after pushing division one titlists University College into two overtime periods after a scoreless draw resulted from regulation time, UC scored in the last minute of the second extra period to tie the game at 2-2 and the two clubs will share the title for the year.

Varsity halfback Chris Jacques, (18), leading Blue scorer over the past season, sets out on a goalward jaunt in Saturday's Toronto Rugger League final at Eglinton Park. Bob Hirst and William Chadwick (10) peed out from the scrum, followed by Mike Davis (#2). Blues drew 3-3 with the Irish II to gain a share of the league title.

Chicks Beat Whites 3-2 Varsity Winless In Five

By JOHN BROOKS

Pickin' Chicken left Varsity Whites further behind in the cellar of the Toronto Hockey League Major Series on Saturday night when they eked out a 3-2 victory over the College men. The game was as close as the score indicates, as the Whites came up with by far their best showing of the season. With Lyndhurst Motors edging Kingsway Lumber 1-0 in the opener at Varsity Arena, the standing of the League is as follows: The Motormen lead with nine points, Kingsway has seven, Pickin' Chicken four, while Varsity has failed to garner a point in five games to rest solidly entrenched in the cellar.

Play was even in the first period with both teams having a tough time getting organized. The Chicks took two of the three penalties handed out, but no damage resulted to either team while shorthanded.

John Hughes opened the scoring in the middle canto at the 7:25 mark, banging a shot past Hugh Curry from close in. McFayden made it 2-0 at 10:51 from Grace and Don Hughes on a play which started when the referees overlooked a glaring offside on the part of the Chicks. Although they were outscored, the Whites carried play in this period and it was only good bookkeeping that Barnstorming Teams Running Into Trouble Swamped!

Rutherford, N.J., Dec 4 (Special) —Stock went way up for the University of Toronto's basketball Blues here last night when they held Fairleigh-Dickinson to a slim 66-61 victory. The exhibition game was the last in a three-game tour of lower New York State by the Varsity senior team.

Blues lost to Iona College of New Rochelle, N.Y., 78-58 Friday night, after being soundly whipped by Seton Hall 93-60 in South Orange, N.J., Thursday night.

Fairleigh-Dickinson managed to hold on to a close four-point half-time lead last night to edge out the barnstorming Blues. Guard Don Margolin was high man on the floor, hooping 18 points, while Leo Madden led the Blues with 17.

Blues were leading Iona 39-37 at half-time Friday night, but a great scoring performance by Joe Bernardi and Leroy Scott for the American club netted Iona victory in the second half.

Bernardi and Scott led Iona with 27 and 24 points respectively while Peter Potter and Al Vachulis were high for Toronto with ten points each. Blues play their first home game of the season this Wednesday night in Hart House when Buffalo State Teachers will be visitors at the winter's first Athletic Night.

Closer!

Colorado Springs, Dec. 4 (Special) — University of Toronto hockey Blues failed in their third test on American College ice this season when they succumbed 7-1 to Colorado College here last night. The Blues lost to Denver University 3-0 Friday night after tying them 1-1 Thursday.

Sandy Morrison fired Varsity's lone goal against Colorado at 6:01 of the third period, after the Americans had already taken a 5-0 lead. Morrison took a pass from winger John MacDonald to prevent the shutout. Colorado scored three times in the first period, and twice in each of the other two to give the Blues their worst beating in two years.

Denver goaltender Dave Broadben was outstanding in Friday's game, turning back 38 shots to preserve his shutout. Barry Sharp and Barry Middleton scored goals in the first period while the Blues were shorthanded and Smith added the third counter in the second frame.

The Blues meet Colorado College again tonight before returning to Toronto to begin defence of their Intercollegiate title against McGill Redmen Friday night in Varsity Arena.

Blue Cagers Play Teachers To Top First Athletic Night

With Varsity's Basketball Blues as its main event, the University of Toronto Athletic Association begins its fifteenth year of Athletic Nights on Wednesday at 7:00 John McManus' crew takes on Buffalo State Teachers College in what promises to be one of the best games of the case season.

The Blues lost a close 62-60 decision to the Teachers last year and McManus has his crew up for this bit scuffle Game Time 7:30 in the main gym. Preceding this battle Dalt White Varsity Second will meet Buffalo's Fireman Squad.

While all this is going on Kik Whipper will have his wrestling grunting and growling upstairs, and down in the pool Varsity's water poloists will be trying to outlast a tough defence when they meet the Hamilton Amateur Club.

Water Poloists Lose

McGill took a close 10-9 victory in the Intercollegiate water polo championship on Saturday in Montreal when they defeated the visiting Varsity side 10-9 in a 65-count. The Red and White are defending champions in the League and they gave Varsity a hard time in the game. The Hamilton Amateur Club was the host for the game and the two teams tied 9-9 in the first of the hockey team to cut the overtime in the 100th minute, necessitating a 100th minute.

And how much do they cost you? Only the $100 cost of the game.

The Montrealers led throughout the game holding a 4-0 lead in the first half. They pulled two of their second half goals on penalty shots as Varsity retreated with 100 in the final count.

Ray Mandel batted home two runs in the 100th minute for Toronto. Bernie Langer, Len Robinson and Neil Appleton each scored runs to send out the

Today is civil rights day. And this Wednesday, a minister of the Crown is coming to Hart House to debate Canada's need for a national bill of rights.

With so much publicity being given to the subject, it might be well to look around us, and see that our own house is in order before we start a crusade elsewhere. Discrimination in Dresden is deplorable, and Quebec's Padlock Law is notorious.

But are we sure that here in this city and on this campus, we ourselves are not part of social forces which seek to stifle and restrict free discussion?

Do we show both tolerance and respect for those whose opinions are less orthodox than our own? Do we really observe the rights of others?

Civil rights, like charity, begin at home.

needed: an understanding

The division of this nation into two cultures poses great problems to the Canadian people, but there is no evidence that these problems will prove insoluble, provided they are approached in a dispassionate and reasonable manner.

But the relationships between people, the problems of religion, and the conflict of identities are not subjects about which it is easy to be dispassionate.

There has arisen in Canada a conflict between the French-Canadian population and the rest of Canada, that has shown itself most clearly in the relationships between Quebec and the federal government. Constant quarrels between these two governments, and other ethnic battles, have greatly harmed the fabric of the Canadian nation, engendered disunity, and set back in national, social and fiscal development.

The English-speaking majority in Canada must bear a great deal of the blame for this cleavage. Certain extremists, some associated with this city, have stirred up resentment and fear among the French Catholic population. And the attitude of others has been scarcely more comforting, as they greet the problems of Quebec with derision or — at best — silence. There is a great lack of understanding in the rest of Canada of the problems and difficulties of Quebec.

But, even after making allowances for this, there still remains the fact that French-Canadians as a body have been too willing to cling with affection to old and obsolete social forms, and to reject any new developments that seem to threaten their traditions and culture.

It is obvious that in many instances they have been misled by extremists and die-hard French-Canadian nationalists. The most notable and most recent of these is the present Premier of Quebec, Monsieur Maurice Duplessis, whose belligerence towards Ottawa and Canada is no doubt associated with his own peculiar methods of winning Quebec votes.

The French-Canadians need to realize more clearly that the rest of the Canadians wish them nothing but well, and that their fears of envelopment by the English majority are not well founded. They need a greater understanding of their own security, and a greater confidence in the ability of their own culture to survive and flourish under changing conditions.

And above all, they need a better appreciation of their basic unity with the rest of Canada — a unity which should transcend the boundaries of culture, religion, and language to bind together the whole people of this nation.

By GEORGE BROWN, II PREMEDS

Christmas comes but once a year — Thank God!

Every year comes the mad scramble to save money, make shopping lists, send greeting cards, and buy presents. We barely have time to stop and figure out what we are doing and why.

For me, obeying these intricate and ridiculous social rites is not Christmas. Nor is it merely celebrating the birth of a god who is no longer worshipped by some, and who is understood by only a few.

Our present myths and rituals are a curious blend—or should I say clash?—of the ancient tradition of the fall and winter festival and the materialistic culture of the modern western world. For in most periods of history there has been a grand festival held in the late fall-early winter season, celebrating the harvesting of crops and anticipating a mild winter and early spring. In modern times, Christmas has replaced Thanksgiving as the festival of bountiful harvests and hopes for the future.

Thus it is unfair to allow Christians to dominate Christmas, because the Christian influence is only part of the festival, and a comparatively recent addition. Granted, their beliefs have contributed immensely to our meaning of Christmas. But now the religious aspect of Christmas has receded and given equal place to the secular and commercial aspects.

Christmas is no longer a single day, but has swelled to a period of two weeks or more, building up to two climaxes. The first, Christmas day, emphasizes the goodwill spirit, family unity, and love—a day of peace and hope. The second, New Year's has more of the pagan tradition—a Dionysian celebration of the New Year, hoping for a happier (and therefore more carefree) life to follow.

As a winter festival, Christmas can be, and for some people is, a truly meaningful holiday; a time when, if we have a chance to stop amid the bustle of preparation, we can meditate on our hopes, plans, and emotions toward our fellow man. With its emphasis on the unity of mankind, Christmas can bring us closer to peace than a hundred Geneva Conferences.

But exploitation by commercial racketeers and distortion by sentimental do-gooders have submerged these purposes, buried them beneath prescribed rituals which are no longer meaningful.

For Christians, Christmas is a rededication to the teachings and aspirations of Jesus, and to the church in general. But as Christmas combines the beliefs of other religions and myths, "putting Christ back into Christmas" is both impossible and meaningless. It is already there.

There is still brotherhood and love, but since we can think only in material concepts, these are achieved through lavish presents. Family love and unity has become more important, because of family separations brought about by modern transportation and our individualistic way of life.

For those who can see through its superficial myths and rites, Christmas has true meaning and value.

For those who merely go through the motions for the sake of conformity, Christmas is a cruel farce.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Sophistication and Abortion

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It was somewhat shocking even to my callous sensibility to read that "oral contraception" is suggested as a means to obviate an abortion. So, might I add, will other "oral" procedures.

An "abortion" apparently does not involve much more than the dangerous extraction of a kind of socially carious tooth. To me, a foetus has as much right to exist as has an old man. To be sure, both may be of very little use to society, but both are part of the human process of existence which can not be disrupted without making of this world a clinical grotesquerie in which one's right to existence depends upon one's sterility, moral, physical, even intellectual.

A man is not an ape, nor an amoeba. He is the unique animal in this, our natural world. He must be able to come to terms with himself, with his passions, his vicissitudes, his wants, his reason. He must have his self-respect, his joy in being a man.

But contraception and abortion strike at the very roots or his belief in himself. Is he alive only because of carelessness? Is he the end product of a romantic spasm, of unclimbed behaviour? Has he any right to himself, as a human who is loved, who has his proper place in a human venture? Or should he have been a test-tube, clean and catching the light of the sun on desert sands, "a pair of ragged claws scuttling across the floors of silent seas?"

Is man only the unhappy result of a supreme orgasm, the scoria of an animal melting?

It seems to me that much of the sexualism of today is pathological, and "love" but a syndrome of panic. We hate the Christ (of our parents?) Who was so often at feasts in order to kiss the relic and very real toes of a Freud. He has given us a sexual grotesquerie, an agony of masturbation, as the standard of human affection.

Without a Christ to thoroughly sanctify the human body, we grope and stumble into the fetid arms of a Nietzsche (from Silenus) who, biting the iron bars of his cage (our paragon!) would have us believe the human foetus but the worst kind of cancer. And, credulous, so we try to forget in the spasm, to quest the sweet pieces of death. We would escape the placenta of our humanity. Far better to be an ape... under such conditions.

Frustrated, unwanted, ignorant, we react, we deny. We deny not the sources of our infancy, but everything. We deny "Good," because it has miserably failed us. Or have we failed it?

Besh! We are sophisticated.

Guest Editorial

Comprenez-Vous?

This article, written by staffers of the University of Montreal's paper, Le Quartier Latin, is an attempt to answer the editorial in last Friday's Varsity on French Canada. The writers, members of the Carabin weekend, express their disagreement with the thesis that Quebec has a neurotic complex.

It is with some surprise that we read your forceful indictment. It may be, however that you are the guilty one. We have always been known to be conscious of our cultural heritage; however, the suggestion that we were thus rendering ourselves guilty of a crime, appears to our eyes as extravagant.

To present the province of Quebec as the black sheep of the great family, the neurotic maniac that simply will not step into the rank and file, strikes us as a bit of an oversimplification. In other words, although some of your assertions may have merit as to the content, they appear to us as having a reprimanding character perhaps unbecoming in the circumstance.

We agree with you that Quebec possesses a differentiated group consciousness and that the "prise de conscience" of its uniqueness does not necessarily warrant the seemingly strange and at times Quixotic appearances of its behaviour as expressed by some of its representatives on the occasion of public political encounters. In other words we tend to share your view that the rise of centralization in most but not all of its fiscal and social welfare manifestations, does not necessarily harm Quebec.

Although you may take this idea to be self-evident, for equally obvious reasons the matter is far from being so simple for us. While English Canadians partake quite naturally in federal schemes for the general benefit of our country Quebec is more inclined to have a negative reaction; that is to say, the emphasis in English provinces is on the efficiency of a given measure, but in Quebec the attention is primarily focussed on the possibility of nefarious cultural influences.

These essentially dissimilar outlooks must be impressed upon our minds once and for all, and must be taken as a legitimate point of departure. The main source of conflict however lies in reciprocal prejudices born out of a long term historical evolution. It cannot be expected that this formidable barrier will be broken down overnight. We must call upon all our resources of insight, of patience and of that sort of composure that seemed to be lacking in your editorial.

TORONTO'S NEW CITY HALL

City Bungles Civic Centre Designs Cloudy, Fuddled

Proposed Stone Slab

We are all agreed that a new city hall is a good idea. In this election referendum these two issues must be kept separated:

1. Should $18 million be approved for a City Hall?
2. Should the City Hall be designed as the artist's rendering has shown it?

This design has not been approved by the City Council, and has only been used as bait to entice the voters into approving the $18 million. To drag this architectural red herring across the path of the issue in question, does nothing to acquaint the public with good civic design.

First, there should have been a programme of requirements drawn up for the Civic Square, outlining the functions the Civic Square should include, and the buildings necessary to satisfy these requirements.

Secondly, a detailed programme should have been prepared analysing the specific requirements of each individual building in the Civic Square.

Third, these programmes would have served as the basis of a national or international architectural competition for the design of the Civic Square in general, and the buildings in particular. The facilities for the rules and judging of such a competition are provided for by the Ontario Association of Architects.

The city, in its usual bungling manner, has failed to adopt a definite course of action. To our knowledge, these are the steps the city has followed to date.

1. In a plebiscite in 1947, the expropriation of land for a civic square was approved by the voters.

2. In June, 1953, the Daily Commercial News reported that 3 firms of architects, Marani & Morris, Mathers & Haldenby, and Shore & Moffat were retained by "the City." The three architectural firms have also assumed the role of designers of the Civic Square. This would seem highly irregular in light of the fact that we now have a City Planning Board that should supervise all civic design.

3. We are now asked to approve the issuing of $18,000,000 in debentures for the construction of a City Hall in the Civic Square.

The manner in which this was achieved was similar to putting several carts before the horse.

- (a) The City Hall was planned.
- (b) Now it is necessary to decide what a city hall should include and what is needed.
- (c) Then a Civic Square will be arranged around the completed City Hall.
- (d) After that, it will be decided what a civic square should include.

Does this not seem a very peculiar procedure, to do a thing first and then think about it? A bold, fresh design, unencumbered by any previously misconceived buildings, is what is needed.

Toronto must learn to act in the grand manner, have the courage of its convictions, and not be misled by specious economic considerations.

A government such as ours, which is supposed to support free enterprise and fair play should have seen the necessity for a competition. If the Massey Report on Arts & Sciences, and the Ontario Association of Architects statement of 1952, on the necessity of competitions for public buildings, had been heeded, we would have stood a chance of acquiring a better design.

If the City Council must accept a design from these 3 firms, then it should ask the Council of the OAA and the City Planning Board to appoint a committee to evaluate and pass on any design submitted.

The whole issue is at best cloudy, and befuddled. To be handicapped in the future by what has been done already, is not the best way to proceed in these matters.

This is a drawing of the proposed new city hall, which is presented for the voters' approval today. The edifice, regarded by U of T architects with undisguised disgust, is to replace the present building, now nearly 70 years old and regarded in much the same way. The building would be constructed on the proposed Civic Square, to the west of the present City Hall.

In My Adobe Hacienda

A luxury resort in Rio de Janeiro illustrates the imaginative use of landscaping in a building project. It shows how massing arrangements, such as those proposed in our City Hall, could be aesthetically carried out.

What's Wrong With

The New Design

Specifically then, what is wrong with this proposed City Hall? Let us take its aspects one by one.

1. It lacks any dignity or true monumentality. Sheer size is not the same as monumentality. Bulk alone is not a substitute for character. At least the old City Hall has character. It could never be confused with just another office building. It looks like a public building.

This new City Hall has been called a "dehumanized pile of stones" and "anonymous." It is more than this. It is dull and uninteresting and indistinguishable from all the other insurance buildings these firms have hacked out.

2. The relation of the masses of the building is poorly conceived. The great slab of the office building is not pleasingly proportioned to either the buildings near it, or to its own lower part. It is sheer size and bulk without meaning.

3. As to bad details, these are almost too numerous to mention. The little services addition tacked on the top of the big slab is ludicrous. It ruins whatever silhouette the slab possesses. The silliest detail is the use of false columns for effect on the lower 4-storey section facing the square.

4. One of the main criticisms of the large slab is the monotonous heaviness of its appearance, due to poor window placement. They have just omitted every other stone and put in a window. If used properly, windows can be a good source of natural light, and can afford a pleasant view for the office dweller.

The placement of windows should also be related to the site and climate. This building has not been oriented from the standpoint of wind direction and climate control. It has just been planted on the site to survive as best it can. It supposedly has the latest air-conditioning systems. This is fine for it will need it. It will be a huge stone oven to cool in summer, and a huge stone cellar to warm in winter.

5. Economically this building for $18 million is a farce. It is much too costly for what it will accomplish. It shows no structural imagination or inventiveness. Nothing new is being tried in any sense. It has no consideration of future needs or requirements.

6. As the interior plans have not been made public, it is not possible to comment on circulation or services. But it is unlikely that the building will be related from the standpoint of interior and exterior space. Almost no interior space could be related to the exterior of this building.

7. As to the important relation of building masses to open spaces, almost no thought has gone into this. It is but a token gesture to put in a few rows of trees and a few stagnant pools of water. Would it not be pleasant to have color and flowers and flowing water, fountains and a sidewalk cafe? Must we create a space only for the vagrants and bums to snooze and booze?

This is the most conspicuous waste of space possible because it says and does nothing.

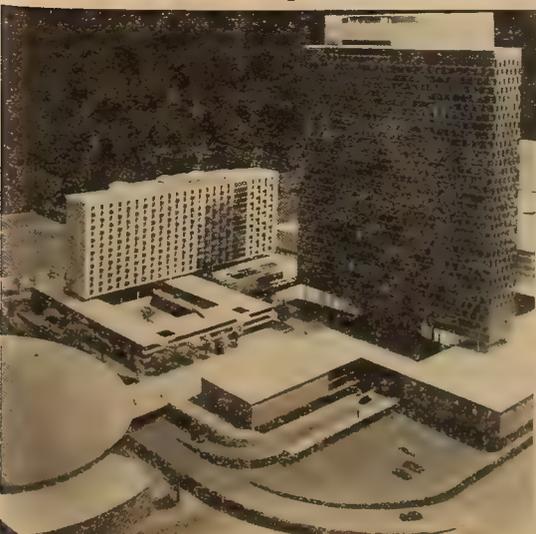

8. On the matter of color and texture there is a stunning monotony and drabness in using stone exclusively. Could not a more pleasant, colorful series of buildings be constructed so that a play of light and shadow could be enjoyed?

The use of colored lights at night could highlight or play down various aspects of the scene.

Toronto will probably agree to spend $18 million on this building and never again shock itself or anyone else. The spirit of Casa Loma is dead. For all the castle's folly, it was at least different and visitors from other cities remember it.

This is more than our proposed city hall will ever accomplish. We will be confronted with this extinct building for at least 75-100 years.

An Airport?

The Boston Back Bay Centre, proposed by the Architects' Collaborative, adequately, it is part of a suggested redevelopment scheme for Boston.

Editor's Note

The design of Toronto's new City Hall has aroused much controversy. On this page The Varsity attempts to present some students' opinions on the topical question.

While a new City Hall, whatever the cost, seems desirable, we must calculate the risk of having the present design foisted upon us. Is the booming city of Toronto to put up with the minute merits of the present design?

The succession of city fathers in Toronto's notoriously inefficient administration has done a sloppy and haphazard job of presenting the new building. Our choice is whether we ought to condone for the sake of expediency or condemn in order to promote greater efficiency in the civic government.

critic in the dark ages

Birth Of An Industry

Those who see Birth of a Nation (at the Astor) with the object of being passively entertained are certain to be disappointed. Since it is a silent film that has at least one grave defect, its appreciation requires some intellectual effort. The film depicts the Civil War and the period immediately following it as seen through the eyes of an aristocratic Southern family. Its greatest asset, of course, is its general massive theme, which gave director D. W. Griffith, who was in his element when working on an epic scale, the first chance to use his talents to their full extent. Its gravest defect is its anti-negro bias, including the glorification of the Klu Klux Klan, but this is not nearly so extreme as some people have made out. In addition, the silent style of acting is strange and sometimes even absurd to modern eyes. Also, the "historical reconstructions" (from various paintings) of such events as Lincoln's assassination and Lee's surrender of the Confederate Army, are boringly over-theatrical. Indeed, the film is at its weakest and worst when it attempts to be historically accurate. The music, which was added many years later, is completely banal.

Despite all this, the film remains a historical landmark. Griffith was the first to make use of techniques (such as the closeup) that are commonplace today. The sections where they are used to their fullest extent, such as the battle scenes and the ride of the Klan, still have a powerful effect.

Even more, perhaps, than a professional orchestra, an amateur group depends on the musical enthusiasm and good-will of its leader, and these qualities will run like wildfire through a group that assembles voluntarily and is determined to get as big a charge as it can out of playing. Mr. Victor Di Bello, director of the Pro Arte Orchestra, which gave its first concert of the season at St. Barnabas (Chester) Anglican Church on Thursday night, has enough enthusiasm to infect his players and his audience too.

Mr. Di Bello combined fairly well-known works with two virtually unknown, all of the late Baroque and classical styles. The orchestra perhaps suffered rather, than gained by the abundance of violins, among whom were several quite experienced players. Mr. Di Bello should play them down in tutti or polyphonic passages to get better balance with the weaker lower strings.

I would suggest, too, that the treatment of Schubert's fifth symphony was rather on the brittle side. Schubert has, for me, a mellow lyricism which was not fully realized here. Haydn's "Oxford" symphony on the other hand, profited by this same crisp approach, and closed the programme on a splendid upswing. The Pro Arte Orchestra will be giving an all-Mozart programme in March, and I shall be very disappointed indeed if pressure of work in that time compels me to forgo it.

The University of Toronto Chorus and Orchestra give their first major concert of the current season this Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Convocation Hall. These organizations include students from nearly every faculty on the campus. The orchestra, under Prof. Robert Rosevear and student conductor Hans Gasteiger, will feature Bizet's L'Arlesienne Suite as one of their three numbers. The chorus is under Prof. Richard Johnston and Betty Labash. See Wednesday's Varsity for further news.

Anna Russell Sings?

"There is absolutely no sex in madrigals, which were sung rather bloodlessly by the sort of people you would now play Canasta with.

"A Cantata has an instrumental introduction ad nauseum; then the words of each soloist are sung inside out, upside down, and back to front—just to make sure you understand them.

"German Leier is about countrified things. Victorian songs are more final—Until, Drop Dead, Unless. If your voice crackles in singing them, it is only because of an excess of emotion—as in 'In Yesherear I'd sit and strum upon my old harmonium'.

"Coloratura sopranos are shattering. The more obscure a folk song, the more authentic it is. It is the natural untrained voice, straight from the horse's mouth, or sung by the oldest inhabitant, usually deaf. A French soufflé song falls flat, unless sung in the right atmosphere. They are songs of love sung by ladies of questionable but interesting occupation.

"In Verdi's opera Hamletto, the actors enter on their asses. In the last act, four are dead, four are dying—so the dying four naturally sing a quartet."

That was satirical song-stylist Anna Russell, international concert-comedienne of part-Canadian parentage. She was soon at ease Saturday night with her Massey Hall audience, talking casually about Hush, La Vieille Canada, and the Toronto English. Each shy glance and meaningful word produced laughter. She wore two gowns, in quick succession and to great advantage, each readily adapting itself to a false bosom or a seductive Spanish figure—this as she pranced around her accompanist clicking castanets.

Random selection from her repertoire made the programme unbalanced and disjointed. Here work is verve and unique, but to use her own words, "If you do anything too much, even if it is nice, it is too much."

Bill of Rights Needed Here? Pickersgill Will Be In Debate

Canada's Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the Hon. John W. Pickersgill will be the Honorary Visitor at the Hart House debate on Wednesday. The debate will be on the motion "A Canadian Bill of Rights is imperative." Ron Price, I Law, who will speak for the motion, said, "We have not come to peddle 18th century folklore. We do not believe that governments can legislate goodness. But as an evocative symbol of continuing faith in liberal ideals, a bill of rights would be invaluable."

Referring to the words of St. Paul, Tom Hammond, IV UC, who will oppose the motion, said, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

Norman Stone, III Law, the other speaker for the ayes, said, "Canadians never will be slaves. They are free to do whatever the government allows them to do."

For the noes, Michael Shoemaker, IV Trinity, said, "Determined political rights are of no value because they can be issued and reissued at the determination of the majority political group in power."

As is customary when a cabinet minister is the Honorary Visitor, women may attend the debate and they will be seated behind a red plush cord.

Woodsworth Society Display To Help Canadian Painters

The Ontario Woodsworth Memorial Foundation is sponsoring an exhibition at Woodsworth House, 565 Jarvis Street, to continue its policy of encouraging young Canadian artists, it was announced Friday.

It is to be a pre-Christmas show and sale of reasonably priced paintings by contemporary Canadian artists.

Many of the exhibitors are arriving young artists trying to establish themselves in the world of art, an official said. Others are new arrivals in Canada who have yet to win recognition here.

Among those whose oils and water colors will be offered to the public are John Hall, Florence Vale Franck, Albert Jacques Frank, William Newcombe, Stanley Moyer, Jack Pepper and Harold Towne.

The exhibition opens Sunday afternoon, from 3-5, and will continue until Christmas.

Judges & Prizes To Be Announced

Dorothy Thompson, Eminent Journalist To Discuss "The Crisis of the West"

Dorothy Thompson, noted American journalist, is to give the Marfleet lectures at Convocation Hall, Dec. 13 and 14. President Sidney Smith has announced.

Miss Thompson began her journalistic career in 1920 when, after meeting some Zionists on ship-board on her way to Europe, she persuaded International News to let her cover the Zionist conference in London.

She went to Ireland and got interviews from the Revolutionists, including the last given by hunger striker Terrance McSweeney, the mayor of Cork. Her assignments included the Polish revolt, and the first Karlist putsch in Vienna, during which she slipped through a double cordon, disguised as a Red Cross nurse, and obtained an exclusive interview with former Emperor Karl and his consort.

Her published books include Listen Hans, I Saw Hitler, Refugees and The New Russia.

Robert M. Hutchins gave, in 1952, the last Pearson Kirkman Marfleet lectures at the University. Other speakers have been Senator J. W. Fulbright, William Howard Taft, and Sir Robert Borden.

Food Chemistry Visits Breweries For Short Talks

The Food Chemistry Club will meet Thursday at 8:00 p.m. at the Laboratories of Canadian Breweries, 307 Fleet Street.

The program is to include short talks by Dr. W. E. Parker and Dr. H. M. Davis and a tour of the research laboratory of Canadian Breweries.

The November meeting of the club featured Dr. Sandford of Toronto Consumers' Research speaking on the Role of the Food Technologist in Industry, and a heated debate on the effect of the Canadian Food Regulations.

RUSSIAN PRIESTS VISIT

Fiddlers' Row

First of two concerts by the 60-piece University of Toronto Symphony orchestra and chorus of 90 will be given in Convocation Hall Thursday night. Concert is free to all University students as chorus and orchestra is sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council. —VSP by Stan Klosevych

Visit Might Improve Russ-Can Relations

Three priests of the Russian Orthodox Church—first Christian emissaries to visit Canada from behind the Iron Curtain since before the war—will briefly visit the University tomorrow and Friday, it was learned last night.

The heavily-bearded Russian patriarchs will be guests of Emmanuel College tomorrow.

On Friday, they will be received by University President Smith in his office at Simcoe Hall. They will also visit Hart House and will tour most of the University.

Visiting Canada as guests of the United Church of Canada, the three Russian prelates arrived in Toronto Monday after a short stay in Montreal.

Led by Archbishop Boris, the party includes also Archbishop Konstantin Ruzhitsky, rector of Moscow Theological Academy, and Anatole Gorbachev, inspector of the Academy.

The Russians, who speak no English, are accompanied by an interpreter. They have already expressed through the interpreter that they are very enthusiastic about Canada in general and Toronto in particular.

The Toronto Telegram reports that they were especially pleased to see their pictures in the paper. "Their excitement knew no bounds," says the Tely, "... when shown the amount of space their visit had received."

H. L. Pottle, speaking for the United Church which is sponsoring the visit, said, "We believe that the visit will lead to better relations not only between the two respective churches, but also between our country and Russia. When people of different nations meet on a common ground, an understanding results whose final effects are often beyond gauging."

President Smith called the visit of the Russians, "a good step for international relations."

"The Russians are here in the capacity of representatives of an organized religion," the President said.

During their visit to Emmanuel College tomorrow, Archbishop Ruzhitsky will speak to United Church divinity students on conditions of theological education in Moscow today. Speaking in Russian, the Archbishop's address will be translated into English by an unidentified Mennonite minister.

On Friday, with Vice President, C. T. Bissell as guide, the prelates will visit President Smith at Simcoe Hall at 10:30 a.m.

Later they will be received at Hart House by Warden Joseph McCulley, preceding a tour of the campus.

Politics Pathetic, Rabble Babbles; Parliament Topic

Student Government is a farce is the resolution that will be debated tomorrow at 4:00 p.m. in UC's newly-renovated JCR.

The debate will take place in the UC Parliament presided over by Tom Hammond.

Harry Malcomson, III UC, said: "Student Government seems to look ridiculous when it comes in contact with the students — i.e., at open meetings. But if a farce exists, look to the governed, not the governors."

But Art Low, III UC, a government speaker, said "Student Government isn't even a good farce: it is not humorous — it's pathetic."

Mary Barnett, IV UC, speaker for the opposition, said "Student Government is our most beneficial institution. It provides the rabble with something to talk about, and others with the delightful illusion of grandeur."

The other speaker for the affirmative is Charlotte Holmes, IV UC.

Conservatives Will Block Coalition Threaten Dissolution Of Parliament

Bob Fenn, president of the Political Economy Club, apparently changed the plane of the Progressive-Conservative Club last night.

His statement followed a report from Ted Rogers, PC president, that the Conservatives, who won the recent elections without a clear-cut majority, intended to establish their own government and ask for dissolution of the House if their bills were not approved.

Model Parliament usually lasts for three days, with the parties agreeing on a change of government, usually a coalition if no one has an absolute majority.

"No-one, including the Governor-General, has the power to dissolve the Model Parliament," said Fenn. "Furthermore, I believe it was agreed last October that if no party had a clear-cut victory, then the four parties would meet in January to discuss a coalition government."

This means that the PC scheme is impossible on two counts, he said. They cannot form their own government, nor dissolve the House.

Rogers, who brought his story to the Varsity office yesterday, said his organization objected to a letter from Fenn this week, which stated that the clubs would meet to decide on the government. "We don't want a coalition," said Rogers. "If the PCs can maintain their government, they will be the first to do so in the history of the Parliament."

Other political groups expressed a different point of view.

Peter Marsh, vice-president of the Liberal Club, said, "I think personally that the Conservatives are taking this thing much too seriously, as if their integrity were at stake."

"If they want to panic, then let them panic."

Don Stevenson, secretary-treasurer of the CCF Club, commented: "The CCF want to see the Parliament go, and not be dissolved before it starts. The PCs have a very wrong attitude."

Last week's election results were as follows: PC, 42 seats; Liberal, 30; CCF, 19; and Labor-Progressive, 7.

Segregation Stops Football

Atlanta, Georgia (Exchange): Because of a segregation ruling, the University of Georgia and Georgia Tech may not be able to play in Sugar Bowl football games this year, or even in League football.

The state Board of Regents, the governing body for both Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia, segregated institutions, ruled that a Georgia team cannot participate in a game at Georgia in which a Negro student plays for the other team.

The ruling will probably mean that after this year the Georgia teams will have to get out of League competition, because the teams could not play just away-from-home games.

The ruling has been interpreted to mean that Georgia cannot play even away-from-home games with mixed teams in states where there are segregation laws.

The issue came to the fore when complaints arose over the scheduling of the Georgia Tech and Pittsburg teams to play in the Sugar Bowl game. Pitt has a Negro fullback who, it was announced, would not only play in the game, but would eat and sleep with the team.

The Governor of Georgia asked the Board of Regents to prevent Tech from playing a Negro in the Sugar Bowl. "We cannot make the slightest concession to the enemy in this dark and lamentable hour of struggle," he said.

The Governor's actions are directly opposed to the Supreme Court order that segregation come to an end in all state-supported schools.

Students Labour In Cellars For Annual Winter Carnival

The cellars of Hart House have been the scene of much activity lately, as students prepare to make this year's Winter Carnival a success.

The Carnival begins Jan. 16 and reaches a climax at Caledon Hills Farm the weekend of Jan. 22, when all Varsity students are invited to frolic in the snow.

Although the Carnival is still in the planning stage, there have been arrangements made for skiing contests and an ice show, to be held at half-time of that week's inter-collegiate hockey game.

Workers for the program are asking for student support. They ask anyone with any sort of gimmick to bring it to a meeting at 5 p.m. today in the Hart House Music Room.

"Strings In The Orchestra" Dean Neel's Lecture Title

Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music, will give a lecture on "Strings in the Orchestra" to members of the Hart House Orchestra Associates Thursday at 5:00 p.m.

The address will be given in the East Common Room of Hart House, and is part of the activities of the Hart House Orchestra Associates, a student group formed to promote music on this campus.

The second concert of the Associates will take place this Sunday evening in Hart House, Henry Best, the Associate's President, announced that tickets for the final four concerts are still available.

Issues

There will be no issue of The Varsity tomorrow, Thursday. A special 12-page Christmas issue will be published Friday morning.

The deadline for Today's, Coming-Ups, and club notices is today, at 5:00 p.m.

Blue Pucksters Winless Colorado College Victors As Varsity Beaten 6-4

Varsity's hockey Blues returned last night from Colorado without a win in four exhibition starts, preparing to launch their defence of the Queen's Cup this Friday night in Varsity Arena.

The Blues dropped the last of four games Monday night in Colorado Springs to Colorado College 6-4, after losing 7-1 to the same club Saturday night.

Colorado took an early 2-0 lead in the first period of Monday's game and were never headed after that. Winger Ross Woods fired two goals for the Blues, while Sandy Morrison and Don Cossar added singletons.

Blues failed to win in two earlier contests against Denver University, tying the Americans 1-1 Thursday night and losing 3-0 Friday night.

Word from Montreal indicates that McGill will have one of the most powerful clubs ever to represent the red and white. Coach Rocky Robillard is reportedly icing at least ten players of Junior 'A' calibre, although all-star netminder Bernie Wong will be missed between the pipes. Henri Lafleur, who was in goal last year when the Blues laced the Redmen 9-1, is currently filling the spot made vacant by Wong's departure.

Clever centre Pete Constable will also be missing from the McGill line-up Friday night. Constable is ineligible due to academic difficulties.

Kennedy will dress the same squad that made the trip to Colorado, although centre Brian Anderson may not start. Defenceman John Tolton, who missed the Colorado trip because of academic pressure, will be back in the line-up for Friday's contest.

St. Mike's Wins Lacrosse Game

St. Mike's pulled the upset of the interfaculty lacrosse season in Monday's opening game of the final series, walloping UC 17-9.

Kevin Wheeler ran wild for the Irish, potting nine goals in the rout, while Jim McKinnon and Ron Tighe added three each, and Terry Wheeler two. Bob Allan scored four for UC as did Baz Mackie, while Tom Riley added a singleton.

The Irish meet UC, defending interfaculty champions, again today at noon in the second game of the best-of-three playoff.

Irish Down UC Meds-Trinity Tie

St. Mike's A hockey team, last year's finalists engaged in a battle with UC I, came up with a close 1-0 victory. The game was hard fought with the Irish collecting all of the games eight penalties. They were caught two men short on two occasions, but UC couldn't crack the Irish defence. With three minutes to go in the game, Bob O'Neal backhanded the puck into the net for the game's only score. Jack Andrews got his first shutout of the season.

For UC, Naylor and Nadin played well while Norm Frenette and John Halligan played well for the winners.

In other intramural action, Forestry A's defeated Architecture 4-1, on goals by McFullen, Iwaski, Kelly and Richards. McInnes scored the lone Architecture tally.

St. Mike's B's fell before SPS III by the score of 5-3. Donn and Demarsico scored twice each to lead the Skule men. Georgas scored the lone tally. P. McKinnon scored twice for the Irish while Kentish added the other tally.

Jr. SPS eked out a close decision over Pre-Meds as they won by the narrow margin of 1-0. Stan Surtel scored for Skule to give them the win.

Meds III and Trin B played to a 1-1 tie. Creighton scored for the Doctors as Lovering scored for Trinity to tie the things up.

SEPTEMBER 28, 1939

"An unsuspecting freshman eagerly handed over his penknife when an overbearing sophomore caught sight of a brilliant tie. The soph made off with the knife which had the frosh's house and car keys attached to it. It has been reported that at ten o'clock last night the newcomer was seen huddled in the doorway of U.C. staring at the moon, just waiting."

B - Ball Blues Play Buffalo

Teachers, basketball variety that is, invade the big gym at Hart House this evening to do battle with John McManus' Blues. The teachers come from Buffalo State Teachers' College and they headline the first athletic night of the season.

This will be the Blues' first home appearance of the season. They played three games in the USA last weekend and though they lost all three, they did much better than last year's crew. Last year they were decisively beaten by Fairleigh-Dickenson by a 80-55 score, while this season they almost upset this squad, losing 66-61. John Dacyszyn, Leo Madden, Pete Potter, Florian Matsalla and Al Vaichulis have been doing the scoring for the Blues and these five will be in action this evening and will be much more dangerous on their home court.

State Teachers are bringing in a relatively inexperienced team with no particular individual star. Back this year is Joe Merlo, last year's high scorer, who averaged 17 points a game and Dick Stolz, a 6'2" centre. Both men are good rebounders and experienced ball players. This year's State team will also have Sam Austin, one of the greatest athletes ever to graduate from Buffalo's Lafayette High School.

The last time these two teams met the Blues lost a close 62-60 decision to the Orange and Black in Buffalo. Because they're playing on their home court and because they seem to be a better team than last year the Blue and White should win.

Short Shots . . . Dalt White's Intermediates open the evening at 7:00 when they go against the Buffalo State Freshmen . . . State were slaughtered in their opener on Thursday by Niagara . . . Blues meet Niagara in January . . . Other Yankee teams to visit Hart House this season include Detroit Tech, Yeshiva, and St. Peters . . . Leo Madden was Varsity's best scorer on their road trip hitting for 17 against Fairleigh-Dickenson and 14 against Seton Hall.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

For all of you whose interest in college athletics doesn't fold up and die with the close of the football season the winter show is about to get under way, and the fun begins tonight when the Basketball Blues, fresh from a barnstorming jaunt to lower New York State, play host to Buffalo State Teachers' College in the feature attraction of the season's first Athletic Night.

Inaugurated by Mac McCutcheon, genial director of Intramural athletics for the University, Athletic Nights have become a fixture during the long cold winters in recent years on this campus. Besides offering a goodly quantity of interesting spectating for the sports-minded undergraduate, a night in Hart House is kind to the pocketbook, generally well-frayed after three months of tripping to far and near after the football team. Even for the lads and lassies who aren't of the sporting type, Athletic Nights hold a certain measure of interest, for you can manage to drop in after an early evening of study, perhaps catch the last few minutes of the basketball game, and then try your hand—or your feet if you like—at a little dancing in the main gymnasium.

All sorts of entertainments will be provided as the winter season officially opens tonight in Hart House. The JV's will test the Buffalo Frosh in a preliminary game starting at 7:00 before the Blues take the court at 8:30. In the upper gym the intramural wrestling championships will be hotting torch for those who seek to the bloody side of life, while in the pool the campus swimmers will be fighting it out for the interfaculty swimming title, followed by the Water Polo Blues and the Hamilton, Ontario, S. 15. From eight until eleven moving pictures of the Western game will be shown in the Fencing Room, and in the Backs. You can win that quarter back from the young lady over a little match of table tennis. And perhaps a little dancing in the evening.

The hockey Blues will begin opening of their Intercollegiate title Friday night in the Arena. Fresh from the American mid-west, where they met a little opposition, the Blues will test McGill Redmen in the league opener. Word has it that McGill coach Rocky Robillard will trot some ten or so players with Junior 'A' experience on to the ice, and the outcome should be interesting.

And while we're on the subject of hockey it appears there's a little confusion about regarding the eligibility of members dropped or about to be dropped off the Varsity Second—the Whites as they have decided to call them. The eligibility rule for Intermediate players was formed several years ago when the Second were members of an Intercollegiate league, but to alleviate the problem presented by the IHL Major Series—the intercollegiate leagues never started until after Christmas—in emergency ruling has been made by officials of the Athletic Association. Firstly, members of the Whites who are dropped from the squad before Christmas will be eligible to play interfaculty hockey, but while they are still with the Intermediates they sit it out intramurally. After Christmas no more players who come down will be eligible. Anybody who leaves the Whites between now and Christmas may enter interfaculty play immediately with no strings attached.

Now that the air is clear let's begin with a little spectating tonight when the cagers play their first home game, and if you

Christmas shopping is hell. Each year we curse the slush underfoot, the crowds overfoot, the rushing, the waiting, and the myriad annoyances we suffer to show our friends and relatives we love them. Not the least of these seasonal irritations is an all-pervading voice, a voice rumbling with false heartiness, a voice such as oafish uncles reserve for children and dogs, and which every child and dog recognizes immediately as the voice of the phony; the voice of Santa Claus.

"Ho Ho Ho" it booms, apropos of nothing, and, having won our attention, it proceeds to the commercial. Pretty soon, it says, it will be jumping into its sleigh, and delivering costly goodies to all GOOD children. And boys and girls had better be GOOD, or they won't get any.

We aren't perturbed about the crass, economic damage this does to parents. Parents are a sentimental crew; buying their kids presents won't break their hearts. We worry about the kids. They down with santa claus are learning the Santa Claus definition of GOODNESS! "GOODNESS is what pays off."

Let's face it, boys and girls. Any correlation between being good and being rewarded is purely coincidental. Conformity pays off, sure, and Santa Claus wants you to think goodness and conformity are the same, the fat old fraud, you down.

He is nothing but an adult device to keep you down. Would it spoil the jollity of this time, or would it lessen the seasonal popularity of goodness, to mention that one man, or many men, practiced virtue and got clobbered for it? It would. Would it be demoralizing to talk about a Father-image who loves both "GOOD" and "BAD" children equally? Probably. But it would be better than jollyng ourselves along.

We sometimes quarrel with the strict Christian viewpoint, but when it comes to celebrating this holiday, Christmas, maybe these people have the right idea. Their approach may not be as hearty and jocular as some, but it is a lot more realistic. —E. S.

lewd, defamatory or monstrous?

It has now snowed three times. The ice has crept into the ground and still the SAC has no signboard.

The latest correspondence from the administration on the subject is as follows: "... If the type of sign as now proposed is to be used, I feel that it should be modified in such a fashion that the unsightly struts or cross braces appearing below the enclosed area of the sign will not be visible, and I presume that this can be done with a form of cross bracing the upper portion of the structure.

The bookstore which adjoins the SAC office is, perhaps, an unfortunate example, but in general we have maintained a high standard of appearance in our University Buildings ..."

The SAC is to be commended for its unusual initiative in seeking out and arranging for the materials for an original and artistic signboard. But what reaction does it meet with from our traditionalist administration?

The first reaction of the administration was to offer the Students' Council one of the regulation bulletin boards.

The SAC are to be congratulated upon sticking to their original design.

The next reaction of the administration has been to seek to modify the considered design offered by the SAC which was made particularly for them by a student of architecture.

One might have hoped that on such a relatively small point as a signboard, the administration could afford to abandon officialism and indulge the Students' Council's architectural whims so long as the proposed sign were not lewd, defamatory or monstrous.

beware

Beware all ye Christmas shoppers. Beware the Christmas packages prepared to trap you. Last year's stock that proved unsaleable has been wrapped in tinsel to be swapped for your wampum.

Beware the special Christmas packages which are made to appear the Christmas giftissime, but which have no value during the rest of the year.

For your special Christmas shopping lack-of-sense a "Treasury of Faith" has been compiled. This wonderful double gift volume comes in a handy, ready for use, leather zipper-bound case. Such a treasure, so faith-provoking, this two in one deal gives you Norman Vincent Peale's, The Power of Positive Thinking on one side and The Bible on the other, a combination which as Peale intimates in the preface, is unbeatable.

So beware, little Red Riding Hood, the big bad wolf of commercialism is out to get you!

Too Respectable

The Varsity,

Dear Sir and Madam:

Your recent forum on abortion was brave, in that it that it took a look at a tabooed subject, but it was not really a forum. A forum implies an honest attempt to consider both sides of a question, and yours, while it gave token recognition to a case for abortion, (preventive obstetrics) was weighed down with reiterated and re-reiterated outcries against it.

I can hardly blame you for being partial to the side of law, respectability, and (apparently) the majority of students, but you might make some attempt to use your forum page for a critical analysis, instead of for a dogmatic, uncritical re-endorsement of our prevalent social beliefs and the status quo. Do be fairer to both sides in future.

On Christmas

By BEVERLEY BARNES

Every year about this time there is a change in activity in our house. Everyone becomes busy with their Christmas shopping; mother begins planning for the annual Christmas dinner, father starts thinking in terms of getting a suitable Christmas tree; the children change from their usual impish, to angelic behaviour in anticipation of the coming of Santa Claus; Grandparents are purchasing or making gifts for the wee 'uns and the list for Christmas cards is checked over by all and the task of licking stamps by the hundred is taken on again.

All this activity is not prompted by custom alone but is born out of the love and generosity within my family. To spend Christmas day at home with all the members of my family and very dear friends, and to see the children happily playing with their new toys makes me realize how very fortunate I am. The bond of love is more apparent than at any other time of the year.

But what is meant by all this? Why the feeling of happiness? Why the search for the right gift for the particular loved ones? What are we preparing for and what is the real meaning of Christmas?

"For behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, that shall be to all the people; for this day is born to you a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord, in the city of David." Luke II. 1-14.

On Christmas Eve, as I kneel at Midnight Mass, I find myself thinking of that first Christmas night, of Mary and Joseph finding no room at the inn and accepting the cold and dirty stable, of the Infant in swaddling clothes, of the visitation by shepherds and Kings and of the joy that the birth of Christ brought to the world, but most of all, of the Love that prompted the greatest gift of all,— when God gave his only Son to the World.

Gynt, with Trolls

There's something nasty about trolls, as Peer discovers in this scene from the Victoria Drama Society's production of Ibsen's "Peer Gynt," to be presented at Hart House Theatre from today till Saturday. Herbert Whittaker directs the new no-trappings production, using Paul Green's present-day adaptation.

Vic's Peer Gynt

A near-new, modernized version of Ibsen's Peer Gynt appears in Hart House Theatre this week, from today until Saturday, when the Victoria Drama Society presents its annual, three-act drama.

Ibsen's sprawling philosophic poem was adapted to modern colloquial prose by Paul Green, Pulitzer Prize playwright, five years ago. Cutting the shipwreck scenes, and most of the topical Scandinavian satire, the Victoria College production further simplifies by reducing scenic accoutrements, even dispensing with most of the familiar Grieg accompaniment. It is hoped that Peer's problem will emerge untrimmed.

The problem? A British critic answers: "The problem is, 'What is self? and how shall a man be himself?' And the poet's answer is 'self is only found by being lost, gained by being given away'; an answer at least as odd as the gospels."

Peer himself? Shaw calls him "the pushing, competitive, success-crawling man who is the hero of the modern world." He is also as brilliant an escapist as Don Quixote or Walter Mitty, trying every solution but the right one: as an animal sensualist in the Kingdom of the Trolls, as an international financier, slave dealer, a prophet, a gold-seeker, even as a murderer. At the last crossroads of his life, he meets death's messenger, the Buttonmoulder, in his last and greatest struggle.

Director Herbert Whittaker, drama critic of the Globe and Mail, has assembled a cast including Terry Shells as Peer Gynt, Jane Griffin as Solveig, Gigi Nyberg as Aase, and John Douglas as the Buttonmoulder. Other leads in this production, are Carol Purvis, Pamela Thayer, Jim Turnbull and Fred Euringer.

'Joan' Gells

Bernard Shaw, who fumed (and spumed) all his life on the subject of theatrical frou-frou, would have liked the Canadian Players' production of his own Saint Joan, playing this week at the Crest. Under Douglas Campbell's direction, the play at long last escapes from under a weight of determined pictorial appeal, and emerges as a clear-cut and sardonic scrutiny of ideologies. Joan, like everything that ever was, is only a symbol.

This modern-dress production is anything but primitive. The fixed dull-white back-cloths, the stools and tables that become thrones and various other eminences, the crucifix or hood that transforms its wearer into archbishop or executioner, are never obstructive, while the audience responds to an appeal for once based on the mind's reaction instead of that of the eyes and heart.

This is Shaw at his best, riding with Joan against sterile-Dogoodery or the thoughtless overbearing pomp of Church or state. Every word is a weapon, and every character a castle for someone or other to storm.

The play more than balances Mr. Campbell's unfortunate choice of Macbeth as the other production for this season. Twelve people cannot paint a world of teeming action; but Monday night, ten people painted to perfection a world of clashing concepts.

The cast itself was well chosen. Frances Hyland's Joan was an appealingly tiny vessel for the Spirit, rising to incredible emotional heights without the trace of a simper. William Hutt's bland Earl of Warwick and George McCowan's querulous Dauphin linger longest of the other 19 parts, but each of the 19 was superbly individualized. Even Shaw might have been amazed, for once.

Dave Dunsmuir

magdaleners sing in hh

Coloured lights in the corridors of Hart House welcomed us on Sunday night. So did the Warden, like Santa Claus—but not the Santa of downtown stores, promising little children things that their mothers could never afford to buy. He was promising something much closer to the true spirit of Christmas.

The St. Mary Magdalene Singers were conducted by Dr. Healey Willan. This is a church choir, which justifies the programme which they presented. Their technical proficiency emerged in Rorate Coeli by Byrd. They were well-controlled, responsive, generally well-balanced and words were well pronounced—the consonants s, t and d—were never detached.

Ave Verum Corpus Natum was sung to music by Byrd. The depth of this Medieval Latin Verse conveys the whole span and purpose of Christ's life with complete simplicity. It was sung so reverently that the audience needed no translation.

The first part of the concert served as a foil for the second. Most of the carols could be classified as English Cathedral

Music and they demand the the careful performance that they received. It is difficult to convey verbally the impact of this music. Dr. Willan's Here we are in Bethlehem communicated an impression of the clear cold night of the first Christmas by its lucid clarity, and a feeling of awe and humility also apparent in the Shepherd's Song by Flening.

Dr. Willan's arrangement of The Twelve Days of Christmas would be unfair to any singers but those of the calibre of the two ladies who sang as one in this musical marathon. The last few bars seem to present some difficulty, but this was almost overcome in the second performance. The gradual entry of the male voices giving the work an increasingly interesting harmonic texture.

The Wassail Song is a magnificent carol, evocative of old-fashioned, warm-blooded Christmas Cheer. The arrangement was by Vaughan Williams. Though a little too restrained, the singing was most pleasing.

Chris Wilson

jazz, too . . .

Today's 1.30 Hart House concert will feature the Varsity Quintet with modern Jazz. John Canham on drums, Bob Price on bass fiddle, Frank Cochran on piano, Clive Cooper on tenor sax and Hagood Hardy on vibes compose the quintet.

A spokesman for the group said they will play Bernie's Tune, Lullaby of Bird- land, and an original composition, Park at the Plaza on the programme. He described the sound of the quintet as one which "at first suggests a combination of Cal Jackson and Jerry Mulligan, but after a little makes one definitely aware of a distinctive style."

UTCO Appear Tonight

In the cramped rehearsal rooms on College St. the U of T Symphony Orchestra and Chorus are now putting the final touches to their music as they move into the 11th and final week of preparation for their concert in Convocation Hall this Thursday.

This year marks the 21st consecutive season that the 50-piece orchestra has appeared under the official auspices of the SAC. The two groups have representatives of nearly every college and faculty on the campus.

Last year assistant student conductors were chosen for both groups, with the practice adopted again this year. Hans Gasteiger, a Faculty of Music graduate now attending OCE, is conducting the orchestra in the opening work, the Overture to Prometheus by Beethoven. Other orchestral works are Bach's Prelude IV from Well Tempered Clavi- chord and Fugue in G minor, and Bizet's L'Arlesienne Suite No. 1.

The 90-voice choir is under assistant conductor Betty Labash for three of its eight numbers. Miss Labash, also at OCE, will conduct Kenins' Christmas Choral, Wilson's Cherry Tree Carol, and MacKinnon's I Hear Along Our Street. The other chorus selections, under Dr. Richard Johnston, are Rachmaninoff's Ave Marie, Redford Neijoff's In the Lord Alway, Tye's I Will Exalt Thee, and Welford Russell's Who is at my Window, Who?

The combined orchestra and chorus, with baritone soloist William Mossfield, will conclude the program with the Fantasia on Christmas Carols by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

In memory of the Hungarian composer Bartok, a programme of his works was given by a distinguished group of performers at the Conservatory Concert Hall on December first. It is only ten years since Bartok died—his music then almost unknown—but in that short time he has come to be regarded as one of the most important composers of our day.

Two different stages of Bartok's development were evident. The Violin Sonata of 1921 is on the whole an introspective work with traces of the influence of impressionism. Contrasts (for violin, clarinet and piano) and the Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion, works of the late thirties, contain a more objective viewpoint, and at the same time, any material unessential to the overall structure is ruthlessly avoided.

The fact that Geza de Kresz was a personal friend of Bartok's undoubtedly influenced his tender interpretation of the Violin Sonata. He approached the work with an intimacy and sometimes a tenderness which naturally was not to be looked for in the other performances. Virtuoso were fused together to produce qualities and rhythmic qualities a work of tremendous energy and strength. Anne Eggleston

What's news at Inco?

Towing highly sensitive instruments from an aeroplane, Inco's air prospectors have been able to locate promising mineral deposits hidden beneath the earth's surface. Then by referring to a continuous strip of photographs taken from the plane, they can point out likely areas to be worked by ground prospectors.

INCO TROLLS FOR MINERALS FROM AN AEROPLANE

Present-day prospectors have new and valuable partners in the air. Equipped with special instruments, an aeroplane can troll for minerals over vast areas in the course of a few hours. A prospector, travelling by canoe or on foot, would have taken months—perhaps years—to cover the same territory.

In the past twenty-five years, science has developed new methods for probing the earth for minerals. The magnetometer, a device which measures local variations in the earth's magnetic field, is useful in many ways. In addition, several other devices in general use are employed by Inco in the search for sulphide ores—the ores which are most likely to contain nickel and copper deposits worth developing.

At Inco, airborne prospectors, assisted by a special research organization, have already covered more than 40,000 square miles in air surveys of Canada's potential ore resources.

Inco's findings have helped maintain Canada's position of leadership in the production of nickel.

Through continuing research and utilization of the latest developments of science, Inco helps bring new wealth to Canada.

Write for your free copy of the 72-page illustrated booklet, "The Romance of Nickel". Bulk copies will be supplied to secondary school teachers on request.

Designers' Mistake

The discussion regarding the handsome design for the Civic Center was excellent.

The problem of the Civic Center is, however, only one instance of an absence of city planning in Toronto.

The Planning Board has permitted the erection of many unsuitable structures in unsuitable locations. I do not know whether the Board did not take action in many cases for political reasons or because the Board lacks a sense of beauty.

Lack of planning is also evident on the Grounds and Buildings of this University. For instance, examine the Convocation Hall. This building, even greater than some surrounding it, has been constructed for purposes of Convocation.

The architects succeeded very cleverly in producing a structure singularly unsuited for any other purpose.

Another instance, is the Mechanical Eulidius. The traffic flow to and from the lecture rooms of this building is evidence of an oversight of the designers.

Skiing Weekend Planned By SAC For January

Students are invited to two days skiing in the Laurentians during the weekend of January 27, 1956. The outing is being held by the SAC, through the auspices of Margesson's Sporting Goods.

On Friday night a special train will leave Union Station, filled with Varsity skiing enthusiasts; and they are slated to arrive at St. Sauveur early Saturday morning. They will run through a two day programme which includes much skiing, meals, card-playing. The train will arrive back at Toronto by 6 a.m. Monday.

Varsity skiers should contact the SAC for further details.

Love is Many - Splendored Need Three In Parlours

That Love Is A Many-splendored Thing was affirmed 34 to 25 in a St. Michael's Oratorical Society debate held in Brennan Hall Tuesday evening.

Jack Callahan, first speaker for the affirmative, maintained that love was a "splendiferous thing," a flight to heaven on a golden cloud. "Nor beasts, nor men escape, nor God in heaven," he continued, as he outlined the various forms of love of God, love of friends and parents, and that "dearest to our little hearts," love of man and woman.

Speaking for the opposition, Joe Valenti said, "Love has but one splendor," and quoted the following rhyme:

"In the parlour, there were three:
She, the parlour lamp, and he.
Two is company, no doubt;
So the little lamp went out."
"We are not alone in our opinion," he said, "Three of the Four Aces are engaged in divorce cases!" Carol Heider, second speaker for the affirmative, declared she had never been in love herself, but in the words of Charles Boyer, "C'est magnifique!" Second speaker for the opposition, Diva Frosell, labelled the resolution "heretical, iniquitous, and 'obscene.'" "Love unifies," she said. "Man and woman become one flesh. God is one, and since God is love, love is one. Love is a single Splendor."

"A Saviour Who Is Christ, The Lord"

—VSP of Creche in Hart House Rotunda by Stan Klosevych

“. . . And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.”

Cold Christmas In Kent County

This story was written by Phillip B. Hughes, Assistant Professor of Mechanical Engineering at this University. Mr. Hughes was awarded the President's Medal of the University of Western Ontario for Canadian Short Stories in 1954, and has had a story published in Maclean's Magazine.

Powdery snow moved in the stubble on the iron hard fields; in the vault of night sky the stars shone, and a sweetness was spread, like a sweet smell, on the cold air, because it was Christmas Eve.

The sweetness was there for Cassie, who was a lonely old woman not too strong in the head to perceive it and know it for a sign of the little party of people that moved somewhere over a road tonight, existing in, and on this night preoccupied, the gigantic memory of God. Cassie believed she knew what they looked like, and her concept was a singular one.

The girl's head was bare and her tight curls were a shadowy halo; she was like Cassie in her own young youth, slim and supple, only that she was heavy with her Burden. Dark ebony her skin was; ah, she was a flower, an hibiscus; she was lovelier than any other girl had ever been, and in this last idea Cassie was at one with the thousands who have painted her. But Cassie was not familiar with these representations and was not influenced by them. The great artists had not seen the sweat on the girl's forehead nor the anguish on her face, nor heard the music of the young Joseph singing as he walked. Or perhaps they had, but they were chained by conventions of which Cassie's insight was free.

Cassie's house was a little outside a town in the county most southerly in Ontario save one, and it stood close to the highway. Her eyes were on this highway, for now, to her, it was the very road along which the Word made Flesh was moving in its first tabernacle on earth, borne at the plodding pace of an ass.

Cassie's was a poor little house, but it was furnished to a peak of cleanliness as all houses should be on Christmas Eve. The stove glowed, and filled the one room with warmth. Even so, Cassie shivered and pulled her shawl around her.

The cold was her enemy. It was the cold killed Sam, years back, when they lived in Saint Antoine Street, just below the station, when Sam had his sleepers on the Vancouver run and the old Lord Shaughnessy called him by name; the cold killed him, breaking him first, for all that Sam was born in Kent County and not West Indies born like Cassie herself. Long ago, it was, before Cassie had come to Sam's folks to look after them till they died, and, as the years went on, became an old woman, a little soft in the head the way old women get sometimes, or all of us, maybe.

Now, in Cassie's sight, Joseph halted and looked about him, worry on his strong, handsome face, hoping the angel might come, perhaps, and lead him on. He stood for a moment with the curious grace of stature of the negro, his hand resting on the negro maiden's, but no angel came.

Desperately, Cassie tried to think of a golden palace to which they might go. She remembered the concourse at Windsor Street Station, which she thought the most magnificent place in the world, but it was far off.

Then she thought of the restaurants in the town only a mile away where she had often looked in the windows and seen the lights and color, smelt the good food, and heard faintly the music of the great crystal box. Eagerly she ran to the door to fling it open and call to Joseph to go to one of these.

But before her hand touched the latch, she remembered they could not be admitted there, neither Joseph nor Mary, the maiden nor the Blessed Babe Himself. And a panic of worry and awe took hold of Cassie, so that she slipped to the floor, sobbing.

Yet, poor, abject Cassie had a measure of greatness in her, for in her extremity, though she had never heard of him, or if she had, had forgotten, she cried out the words the confution spoke in a market place long ago, the Domine non sum dignus that echoes still in the corridor of time. "Lawd, get dem quick away from dis part of Ontario. An' if You can't, You must bring dem to dis house. But, Lawd, de place ain't fittin'!"

Whereupon (ah, you have guessed it!) God said to His angel, "There is an old woman named Cassie—Cassandra, I expect—who has offered Me her house. See to it a place is prepared for her in Mine."

And the trumpets blew, and thus, learned fellows and percipient sophomores, this chronicle ends, a tale for simples if you like, but addressed to you nonetheless, for it is Christmas, and season for tales, and season for wishes, too, of which I have one for us all: in the hour the easy reality falls, may our sight beyond it be as clear as Cassie's for all our wisdom, and the cry of our necessity not less noble than hers.

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN WILSON

Seems a long time ago when one could back in the club, hold the paper and read on for a goodly number of hours the occasion of the intercollegiate sports and activities. But time advances and the days are long. Now, I suppose I am ground in the "to come" column by some of those who say among several things that have been the cause of the sport is declining in popularity. But I have the opposite view. I go one back into the history of the sport and find that it is upon how you look at it—and perhaps draw something concrete from experience—that you come to the conclusion as to its future.

Such things are always difficult, principally because the school year, and with it the publishing year, doesn't end at Christmas. But the intercollegiate picture at which to come to a final grade in the end and prepare for a New Year's assault on things of a more, though social, and even things still to be. A convenient time of year, they say, to pick out "pros" and things in all walks of life that were top in the past, put them upon a pedestal for all the world to see, and then sit back and relax with a strategically placed glass of Midland, confident that one is finished for at least another year.

Since, then, we're speaking of sport, what did happen that we might regard as a momentous event? Not, I suppose, that the intercollegiate sports of the year have been so good, but that we have seen a number of people who were "pros" in the past, but who were "stragglers" in the current athletic year, and we would like to bring all their careers into one or two columns as a single item from time.

It would almost seem, as the year passes in review, that this was a year for the underdog, a year in which the hitherto frustrated desires of many people finally broke through into the limelight. We are thinking principally of course of the Queen's University Golden Gaels, and the Brooklyn Dodgers.

The Dodgers made it a year in which the Yankees didn't win the baseball series title, and took the World Series for the first time in their history. Max Baer was named the best boxer to comment that the Dodgers ran a great show for the little man that a best bet the shot of a lifetime around the world being, hope to every oppressed person on any country that was. Meanwhile in Canada, we had the same guy was being wilder as the Gaels returned last change in the Intercollegiate title with a last minute field and then only a goal to win the big, bad old University of Toronto in a sudden-death final in Kingston.

Elswhere in the football world, the Edmonton Eskimos won "unqualified acquittal of a year-old charge" as Gord Walker put it, proving at last the West's maturity in Canadian professional football. In the realm of hockey we find the New York Rangers and the Chicago Black Hawks, perennial doormats of the National Hockey League, riding the crest with the best of them at mid-season. And again Australia dumped the big, bad old United States for the Davis Cup, a good thing too, we've heard it said.

In the world of track and field we're on the threshold of an Olympic year, and it looks very much as though those hitherto unused lads from behind the iron curtain will make a bit of a stink in Melbourne when next summer rolls around. Perhaps this will be just as well, for perhaps at last we are returning to the days when one anybody's ball game—a fun and square deal if we ever heard of one.

A Merry Christmas . . .

Then, is what we of the sports staff of The Varsity take pleasure in wishing to you, our readers. To the North Toronto Herald, who are our staff, to the Athletic Association who are so generous with passes, to the members, both male and female, of that organization who have assisted us with such good grace in the past, to you people out there who take the time to read the drivel we print on this page, and to all the athletes, who make it a pleasure to cover sports on this campus, whether we win or lose, a very Merry Christmas. We know that 1956 holds bigger and better things in store for all of us, and we trust you all will be able to sit in on the future. There are those of us who won't, for we're very, very tired . . .

Ice Blues Meet McGill Tonight

Varsity's hockey Blues, without a exhibition starts will begin, the first of the intercollegiate title tonight in Varsity Arena when McGill Redmen are visitors on Toronto ice.

With the possible exception of Brian Anderson the Blues will be at full strength for the opening tilt of the winter season. Anderson injured a leg in the Mulock Cup football final two weeks ago, and missed the trip to Colorado. If he plays it is likely he will see only limited action.

Defenceman John Tolton, who also missed the Colorado game due to academic pressure, will be back in the lineup for tonight's encounter with the Redmen, while winger Boss Woods who went to the States in Anderson's place will return to the Intermediates.

Al Fleming will likely get in good although coach Kennedy has found both Fleming and Al Cecchi to be efficient between the pipes. Other than that the same team that absorbed three defeats and managed one tie in American ice last weekend will face the Tribe at 8:00.

McGill, who were threats to upset the Varsity bid for the Queen's Cup until the last three weeks of play last winter will be stronger than ever at every position. Although the Tribe will miss the agile netminding of Bernie Wong, all-star goaltender of last season, Henri Lefleur could make an efficient substitute.

Forwards Rick Adrian and Jack McCullen are back, along with several new faces. McGill Coach Rocky Robillard is reported to

Varsity Began Schedule As "Unknown Quantities" Lost Yates To Queen's

The football Blues began the year with a class of "unknown quantities" tabbed as "unknown quantities" by coach Bob McGill. McGill's victory over the Gaels in the Yates Cup, the intercollegiate title of last year, was a surprise.

Six games later, the triumph of the Blues in the Yates Cup, the intercollegiate title of last year, was a surprise. The Blues began their defence of the Yates Cup by losing to the Gaels in the opening game of the season, but they came to grief at the hands of the Gaels in the first intercollegiate game of the season.

But Ed Skrzypek threw the wide open in the early minutes with a 35-yard touchdown pass to Earl Kellaek and the heat was on. Western could do nothing against a seemingly impregnable defence while the Varsity offence picked up 340 yards and three touchdowns.

Queen's meanwhile had run roughshod over McGill but the Blues met the Gaels the following week and trimmed them 11-6. Things looked even better when, the next Saturday, McGill fell 22-12 before the Varsity onslaught.

But trouble took a hand in Montreal a week later as the Redmen injected a momentary flash of life into McGill's slowly dying football machine and upset the Blues 18-9.

Further indication of what was to come was delivered the next week in Kingston when Jack Thompson netted the upstarts with 23 seconds left to put the Gaels ahead to stay 11-10, and retain Queen's another chance at the title.

The Blues seemed to regain lost confidence in the final league encounter, smothering Western 38-8, but little could be done about the football judgement that was waiting for them in Kingston. It's enough to say the Gaels won the Yates Cup without question, and there's nothing to be ashamed of when beaten by a better club.

Six Intercol Titles Won

White University of Toronto did not win the most coveted intercollegiate athletic championship, the football title, they did come out on top in six other intercollegiate sports and shared the Toronto Rugby League crown with Toronto Irish.

The soccer teams duplicated their previous year's feat of winning three titles, the Eastern and Western Senior Soccer Championships, and the intermediate crown.

Varsity capped the senior track title with 66 points, 20 more than runner-up McGill managed. Toronto's Ken Mowat won the Hee Phillips Trophy for the outstanding individual performance. The intermediates placed third in their five team division.

The senior tennis team didn't fare too well, finishing last in the five team race for the crown, won by University of Montreal. However, their intermediate brethren won the Intermediate Championship, held at London.

In harrier, the senior outfit, led by Bill Vary's first place finish, defeated Western and Queen's for the Senior Harrier title. The intermediates placed third in their title hunt.

The intermediate golf team topped five other colleges to win the Intermediate Championship. Varsity's Hugh Sampson led all participants with an 83 score. The senior contingent ran second to Western.

Varsity's Rugby Blues were defeated 8-6 by McGill in a two game total point series for the Intercollegiate Rugby Championship. The Blues went on to tie Toronto Irish 3-3 and thus share the Toronto Rugby League crown.

That's six intercollegiate titles for Varsity in three months. Let's see Queen's match that!

Irish Take Lacrosse Title Defeat UC In Two Games

St. Mike's dethroned University of California, Berkeley as intercollegiate lacrosse champions on Wednesday afternoon in Hart House with a solid 9-0 victory in the second game of a best-of-three series for the Dr. W. A. Dafeo Cup.

Muntz Receives Copp Trophy

Phil Muntz, co-captain and leading scorer in the Varsity football Blues this season, has been named 1955 winner of the Johnny Copp Memorial Trophy, as the most valuable player on the Toronto team.

Muntz was awarded the honor by a vote of his teammates, and will receive the trophy, first presented in 1933 in memory of Blue star Johnny Copp, at a gathering of the team tonight.

Muntz attended Trinity College School in the Little Big Four and enjoyed two championship seasons of football for coach Bernie Hodgetts before entering Aeronautical Engineering at the University of Toronto.

Phil played for the intermediates in his first year and has been with the Blues ever since, blazing a glory trail across this campus that will not soon be forgotten. The tribute paid him by his teammates is an added flourish to the oft-spoken praises of the press and fans alike, who have watched Phil play his best football for Toronto.

The Irish had swamped UC 17-9 in the opening match on Monday, but were considerably cooled off Wednesday after running wild in the first game. UC had held the championship for three consecutive years and Monday's loss was the first in 30 for the hitherto unbeatable Redmen.

Jim McKinnon paced the Irish with three goals in Wednesday's contest, while Terry Wheeler and Curt Russell added two each. Kevin Wheeler and Ron Tyne scored singletons to contribute to the Irish onslaught.

Bob Allan topped all men on the floor with four goals for UC, and Bruce Lee added a single late in the game for consolation.

Meds Second Year dropped Skule Thirds 15-6, 45-10, 15-11 yesterday afternoon in Hart House to win the final series of the intramural volleyball league and wind up the fall's interfaculty athletic activity.

on the sideline

Incredible as it may seem, Christmas and the New Year season have arrived bringing with them the usual spirit of joy and happiness. However, with them come term tests and exams, and the knowledge that the second term will soon be here—mention no more!

The coming semester promises to be just as active as the past. At this time I think it might be an excellent opportunity to work out one's plans for sports participation in the coming months. The decision is quite important—the reason being that the women of this university are restricted to one sport and the definition of one sport is exactly what it says. If you play intercollegiate basketball, you cannot also play interfaculty hockey. The only way to get around this ruling for you "eager beavers" is to play volleyball. If you play volleyball, you can play both for your own college and for the university.

The intercollegiate volleyball team is off to McMaster this year for the tournament which should be one of the best yet—that is, if Toronto manages to collect a good squad this year. How about turning out to the try-outs for the team girls? Let's prove to the rest of the world that Varsity can dress a volleyball team that is worthy of the Blue and White.

Also, at the intercollegiate level there is basketball. With several of last year's stars having graduated or having been forced to retire because of studies, there are vacancies galore. Please don't get the idea that because the girl next to you at the practice was on last year's six, gives her any better chance of making the squad than you. No such thing. The team is being chosen purely on showing at practice and on attendance record.

Marilyn Bolls, attention! Lifesaving and Red Cross Instructors' courses are being offered for the student body next term. Because of the great demand for these classes it is recommended that you make your way to a telephone immediately and dial Falconer Hall. If you don't, you will probably find yourself left out, thus you will be lacking the qualifications necessary for that job at camp next summer. If you have these standards, why not try for your speed swimming officials standing?

Before you get carried away in all these next term plans don't forget to have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Interfaculty Grid Hectic Mulock Returns To Vic In Up-Down Season

Hectic! That's about the best way to describe this year's Intramural football League. From the hectic pre-season meetings of the Intramural Sports Committee, which completely rearranged the league to Vic's capture of the Mulock Cup, the season sure was hectic.

The year began on a surprising note as University College, relegated to Group Two, hit the winning stride after two years of drought when they nosed out Mads 5-1 on Sid Weinrib's last minute touchdown. On the same day Victoria gave indications that this was their year to return the Mulock Mug to their school after a four year absence as they routed Sr. Skule 22-6.

As the season progressed, Jr. Skule proved that they had a powerhouse as they slaughtered Forestry 30-6. Trinity moved on to the victory path beating Vic 7-0 with John McDonald running 100 yards for the major, and St. Mike's 6-0. With these victories it seemed that the Mulock Cup would rest in the halls of Trinity this season. Then on the first of November the downfall of Trinity began as a winless St. Skule team defeated them 11-0. Trinity fell continued as Vic, St. Mike's and finally Sr. Skule routed the Black Panthers.

Down in Group Two Jr. Engineering and UC met for first place on November the first.

So five teams, St. Mike's, Vic Sr. and Jr. Skule and UC entered the playoffs. The list was reduced to four as Sr. Skule rode to a lopsided 23-7 victory on the backs of Mary Larsen and Ken Selby. Jr. Skule was next to leave when they lost a double overtime game to St. Mike's 7-0. Skule's hope of retaining the championship were extinguished the next day when Vic subdued them 18-11 in the final. Victoria had the most power for St. Michael's and decisively beat the Double Blue 22-7

Football Seconds Titlists

Boasting an explosive ground attack and top display of team spirit, Varsity's Baby Blues regained the Intercollegiate Intermediate football crown they lost to the Western Colts last year. Actually, the Seconds have their name inscribed on the Shaw Trophy for the fourth consecutive time, as previous to the 1954-55 season, they had been champions for three years running. The trophy was not awarded last year when the League was dissolved in mid-season following a serious rule infraction by Western.

A great deal of credit for the success of the team must go to coaches Jack Kennedy and Gerry Sutherland whose untiring efforts were amply rewarded.

The Baby Blues started the season on the right foot up in Kingston when they rolled to a lopsided 35-0 victory. A week later they journeyed to London and came away with their only loss of the year, 7-5 at the hands of the defending champion Colts. The next game was a victory as the Ryerson Rams fell 29-0.

On October 22nd it was up to Guelph and a 11-11 tie with the Aggies. In what was considered "the" game of the year, the Seconds whitewashed Western 21-0 in Varsity Stadium to prove that they would be worthy holders of the championship they eventually won. Ryerson came back for the return game and managed to score one of the few majors they have ever counted in games with the Baby Blues, but it wasn't quite enough. Final score: 38-6. Queen's visited town on November 11th and lost 26-7 as the Shaw Trophy stayed in the Hart House trophy case.

Irish Win Swimming Meet Skule Cops Wrestling Title

St. Mike's and Skule won team victories in extra sporting action provided at Wednesday's initial Athletic Night of the winter season. The Irish copped the intramural swimming championship by four points, while the Engineers took a lopsided win in the interfaculty wrestling championships.

St. Mike's amassed 42 points in the eight-event swimming meet, just four more than second place Trinity who counted 38. Skule came third with 36 points and Architecture, University College, Meds, Pharmacy and Victoria followed in that order.

Five engineers won individual titles in the seven-division wrestling meet, while OCE and UC each claimed a victory.

Mangoff, Dart and Mayer were winners in the 130, 137 and 147 pound classes for Skule, and Bower and Herod won the 167 and 191 pound crowns. Baz Mackie from OCE claimed the heavyweight title, while UC's Bill Craven won individual honors in the 157 pound division.

The intramural championships have nothing to do with the selection of the team that will represent Toronto in the Intercollegiate tournament but after the University championship meet in February, winners in each class may challenge the member of the senior team in their class. Those who have wrestled at the Intercollegiate level were not permitted to take part in Wednesday's meet.

Whites Tie 0-0 With Kingsway

With only eleven men on the field, Varsity Whites held Kingsway 0-0 in a goalless draw on Wednesday night in Varsity Stadium. The game was the opening of the season for the Whites. The opening of the season was wide of their first place margin with a 2-1 win over the third place Pickin' Chicken club. The first game was highlighted by 21 penalties, including a match misconduct to fiery Mac Galand of the Motor-men.

The Whites took six of the seven penalties handed out, much to the dismay of the few College fans in attendance. One of these was a match misconduct to Mike Elk in the third period discussing things a bit too heatedly with the referee.

Hugh Curry practically assisted himself of a steady job in the Varsity nets as he turned back shot after shot from Kingsway sticks. John Tolton was a stand-out on the blue line, along with Ray Savagner and Don Stewart who played their usual hard-hitting game.

Speaking of Sports

By JOHN BROOKS

Probably the most controversial term in the English language as far as the world of sports is concerned is the word "eligibility." It often means the difference between success and failure and it is often the cause of many a controversy between sportsmen. You need it discussed many times in the past, you'll need it discussed many times as long as sport exists and one of these occasions is right now.

We don't have to go very far to find the source of our trouble either. Just a few steps northward to Varsity Arena where, in the past month or so, have occurred two noticeable incidents in regard to eligibility. The first severely questions this University's principles of sportsmanship (which we presume it has) and the second threatens to punch a severe hole in our interfaculty Sports System, acclaimed to be one of the best anywhere.

In recent months one enters the Varsity Awards, the Varsity entry in the Toronto Hockey League, Major Series. Up to this year, the Seconds, as they have been known in previous seasons have been considered as an Intercollegiate level of a college hockey League. However, in the past few years, the rule of the Intercollegiate League has been that a player who has played in a college hockey league in the previous year should not be eligible to play in the college hockey league in the next year. In order to keep this player on the list for this year in intercollegiate competition, the team was withdrawn from the Intercollegiate League and entered in the Major Series. The move was obviously made to keep last year's ineligible players in shape for next year, when if they complete their studies, they will again be eligible for Intercollegiate play. The move has certainly backfired.

Not only is heavy criticism being levelled against the powers that be, but far more important is the fact that the Whites are making a miserable showing in League competition. And as far as we can see, the reason they are so badly entrenched in the cellar is not the fault of the coach, nor the players, but the authorities who entered them in the League in the first place. As was obviously to be expected, the players are all intent on getting their year so as to make themselves eligible again, and the missing practices and games on no reason. Who is to blame them? Any coach has a tough time getting his team organized when he has to shuffle his men around throughout the entire season. The reasonable solution would have been to continue in intercollegiate play and let the men who flunked pay the penalty and sit out the season. We are willing to bet this questionable situation won't arise again.

Incidentally, the Intercollegiate League is not a "college" league. One team and a player who is not a college member can't play in the Whites. The question is whether or not the player who is ineligible is a member of this College who was still officially on the roster of the Whites, the leaving of which would be a violation of the game. It didn't, so no complications arose.

But what did come to light was the weak agreement between the Whites and the Interfaculty O.C.E. which prevents any member of the Intermediates, if he is dropped or quits the team before Christmas, to play Interfaculty hockey. The particular player in question had not officially quit the team as far as the Whites' coach was concerned but went ahead and played Interfaculty anyway. Then arose the situation that the players might go back to the Whites, which is exactly what he did. This moves puts the holders of the agreement in a very fieldish position, which they remedied by ruling that the player could not play Interfaculty hockey again, even if he left the Intermediates.

Under the existing mutual agreement, it is apparent that Varsity until Christmas, any member of the Whites could remain on the team to play the team, play for his faculty and then rejoin the team. When questioned on this point, the authorities seemed a bit vague as to what action would be taken. And this vagueness and uncertainty brings us to the main point of this column. The Interfaculty written rule has been a mess of Interfaculty hockey last year, and seems to be on the verge of happening again. If this University wishes to continue its proud proclamation as owner of the best interfaculty system in the North American Continent, it had better cease to overlook and ignore weaknesses, and prepare to deal with all situations before they arise! Merry Christmas to all, and all a good night.

Buffalo Thumps Blues Stotz Throws In 37

By HOWIE MANDELL

A lanky, balding centre named Dick Stotz spelled defeat for the University of Toronto Basketball Blues Wednesday evening as he poured in 37 points to lead his Buffalo State Teachers College crew to a resounding 88-79 victory. The loss was the Blues fourth in as many games.

Toronto matched State basket for basket through most of the first half, until Stotz found his eye late in the period. He poured in five baskets in a row without a Blue response, to give his charges a 45-33 lead they never relinquished. Up to this point Silas Manspeaker and Joe Merlo were doing all the scoring for State on one hand jump shots from the outside a la Canisius. The Blues chief difficulty throughout the game was their inability to get the ball into centre John Dacyshyn, throwing most of their shots from the outside with little success except for Florian Metello who hit for 12 in the half.

State continued in this manner for most of the second period and moved on to a 76-63 lead with Stotz showing the way. Besides pouring in the points, he blocked a half dozen shots midway and was the best rebounder on the floor.

Then with three minutes to go, sparked by Ruby Richman, the Blues began to close the gap to 85-79 but time ran out on them.

SHORT SHOTS . . . Stotz came within two points of tying the Hart House record . . . Blue's top scorers were Matsalla with 16 Dacyshyn with 15 and Vaichulis with 13 . . . For Buffalo Merlo had 18 and Manspeaker 14 . . . State hit 50% from the field and the Blues threw in 35.9% of their shots.

Water Poloists Lose 15-7

University of Toronto water polo Blues dropped a 15-7 decision to Hamilton Aquatics in the Hart House pool Wednesday in a test match in preparation for their final game against McGill this Saturday.

Park scored six goals for the visitors while McLaughlin and Samel added three each. Tedford, Turill and Alford scored for the Hill and Mandel scored for the Blues who lost their first game

The University of Toronto's Basketball Blues hit the road again this weekend to play at Detroit where they will meet the University of Detroit Redmen.

Blue's will meet McGill Redmen Saturday afternoon at 2:30 in the Hart House pool in the second of a two-game total-point series for the Intercollegiate Cup and the Intercollegiate championship. McGill won last Saturday in Montreal 3-2 and the Blue's managed to edge out for a 2-1 win. McGill are defeating Intercollegiate champions.

Detroit University Tests Cagers

Their chances of breaking through the 5-11 record set by the Redmen in 1954 are being tested at this moment as Detroit have yet to taste defeat this season. The Redmen opened the year last week by defeating the University of Detroit Redmen 4-1. The Redmen had a highly rated Notre Dame squad by 20 points. Last Saturday they defeated the University of Western Ontario Mustangs, perennial Intercollegiate Cage Champions by 21 points. So this game ought to serve as a forecast of the Blues chances this year.

Detroit will field a generally short team but will have lots of height on the court. They beat Hamilton 3-2 last Saturday.

They will meet McGill on Saturday.

Varsity escaped Waterloo 4-1 in a game played at the University of Detroit Redmen. The Redmen's top scorers were John Dacyshyn, Phil R. Merlo, and Peter Romano. Joe Merlo and Peter Potter are on the trip.

Short Shots . . . Western beat Detroit Tech Wednesday evening by 10 points . . . Tech plays here on the first and last days of the holiday. Saturday is the seventh of January . . . John Dacyshyn will have trouble on the trip. Tommy Homans was the Blue's New Year's Day victory hero, charged on 40 points the other evening to park his team from being defeated by the Mustangs. 44-72 victory over Fordham.

merry christmas

This is the Christmas season.

It is the season of kindness and of commercialism, of peace and of bustle, of God and of men.

Originally, Christmas was a simple celebration of the birth of the Saviour: but the meaning of Christmas has changed through the years. Modern customs and habits have not merely overlain Christmas with the gloss of commercialism, they have changed its entire significance. Christmas is now metropolitan, business-like: it is organized: it is sentimentalized.

But is the Christmas of today merely a commercial spectacle, a children's holiday?

This cannot be the case, for Christmas is far more complex than this. A stocking adorned with holly is not the only symbol we have left to us: we still have the lamb, the star, and the Child.

The significance of Christmas today lies in the spirit of moral regeneration which it contains. It lies in its ability — despite grave obstacles — to excite in even the most blasé and cynical the emotions and ideals that have long lain behind this occasion.

For at Christmas, we do become kinder; we do act as though justice and mercy, peace on earth and goodwill towards men are more than idle words devoid of meaning.

The ability of this season to do this for us stands as a remarkable achievement in an age so barren of ideals.

Therefore, we still think it worth saying, and saying sincerely

A Very Merry Christmas to You All.

scrooge and daniel webster

It is not every day that we feel obliged to launch into an unbridled attack upon the academic operations of the University. However, since this is the Christmas season, we wonder what could be more appropriate?

"Appropriate?" the reader may ask in astonishment, quite convinced in his own mind that academic chit chat and Christmas have precisely nothing in common whatsoever. Let us hasten to explain therefore, that while Christmas generally, is looked upon with a kind of universal optimism and spirit of "good will towards men," it is regarded with no such sentiment by that incomparable breed known (somewhat pretentiously perhaps) as professors. This rare family, typified by a somewhat dour outlook on life and a general philosophy of "bad will towards students," can see nothing even remotely cheerful about Christmas.

Furthermore this general attitude is indelibly impressed upon the minds of

A while ago, two young girls came into our office to tell us about plans to celebrate Christmas on the campus. They were, they said "from the 'Christmas Belongs to Christ campaign,' the outgrowth of last year's 'Bring Christ Back to Christmas' campaign."

"Oh, yes, Christmas," we thought. That has been creeping in hasn't it. The Saturday after Thanksgiving there was a line-up on St. George and small things running about crying with cold and excitement. Salesmanship and well-wishing blares on out loud-speakers and even jazz-bands turn to Xmas carols. Tsk, Tsk, such commercialism.

And then there are these campaigns. Part of the program it appears was the erection of a billboard advertising Christmas in front of Wycliffe. And the advertising-style slogan is another notable feature. Tsk, Tsk, such commercialism.

These people have fallen into the same pit as those who would stifle communism with communistic tactics of

THE CAT'S NEW YEAR'S HONOR'S LIST

Christmas is coming and the Geese are getting fat; But we've had damn few contributions for the Champus Cat.

Nevertheless, as usual, however and etc. His Excellency the Right Honourable Champus Cat, Captain of the Horse, now presents his New Year's List of Honours.

their proteges: For what does the booming of the merry organ bring more readily to their minds (inspiring them with diabolical intentions scarcely to be exceeded by the witches in Macbeth) than that incomparable horror of the university, the term test!

Clearly, term tests and Christmas (as the reader no doubt divined at the outset by sheer means of intuition) have nothing in common. But then they are the products of professors' wits, and professors are capable of, and can get away with, anything: They can swear that black is white; they can play Ebenezer Scrooge all year and laugh like the Devil in Daniel Webster. They can wink with one eye while they're wishing you "Merry Christmas" and hasten to remind one in the same breath that there's a test just around the corner in January — thus demonstrating without a reasonable doubt that they don't wish anyone a Merry Christmas...at all! . . .

human and divine suppression and censorship. To prevent commercialism from ruining Christmas they commercialize Christmas, without calculating how this invalidates their cause.

However, maybe we are being too cynical about this Christmas business. Cynicism only indicates an adolescent attitude and probably a fear of admitting we do respond to talk of peace, goodwill and love.

After all, why not commercialism at Christmas — no not about Christmas — that's an unholy mixture. But why not rush around treading on people's toes to get presents; and why not send thousands of cards? The buying may be sordid, but is it not redeemed when we actually shove the gift in someone's face, hoping like mad they'll like it. And is not the whole process purified by something which happened.

If we have a complaint it can only be that we are human and try as we may, we cannot reach the divine, even to celebrate the divine.

To E. A. Macdonald—49 pages of beer ads for The Varsity.

To Peter Martin—his fondest dream — a Varsity editorial praising NFCUS.

To Mayor Phillips—the Athenian Acropolis for a new city hall.

To the Blue and White the back of our hand, and a blizzard for their Christmas Tree.

To the U of T Orchestra and Chorus—the ability to play decent music.

To the Engineering Society—a student riot just to keep things lively.

To Trinity—some crumpets.

To UC—spirit—in bottles.

To Fraternities — prestige, women, and wine—their goals in life.

To the SAC—a ten-hour long meeting, complete with agendas, amendments, sub-amendments, and amendments to sub-amendments.

To The Queen's Gaels an important loan fund.

To The Varsity Blues—better luck next time.

To Gus Braccia—a blotter for his check-book, and seat-covers for his car.

To The Varsity—some big headlines in pink ink, on-charcoal-grey paper.

To Michael Shoemaker — a soapbox, full.

To St. Michael's—black arm-bands and white hoods.

To students—what they deserve—nothing.

Committee Is Specially Appointed Investigate University Settlement

The University Settlement is going to be "investigated" by a special committee of the SAC. This was decided at last Wednesday night's SAC meeting, when the council heard a request from Mr. Hal Jackman of the Settlement that the SAC cooperate with the Settlement House in providing social services to residents of the depressed area to the South of the University.

Mr. Jackman said that the Settlement, located immediately behind the Art Gallery on Grange Street, had previously been closely associated with the University staff and students, but with the coming of Red Feather support this connection had been weakened. The Settlement is a social welfare agency serving children and adults in its neighborhood.

Mr. Jackman asked the SAC to consider initiating student help such as clothing drives, and appealing for volunteer workers. Mr. Jackman told of one house in the Settlement's neighborhood where 19 children use the same toilet — one that won't flush.

The SAC decided to appoint a ment and its operations, and to determine in what ways the SAC special committee to include all members of the Student Service Committee to inspect the Settlement can help the Settlement House

Some members of the council said that they felt that student could be paid to help in order to residents of the area

Two UofT Student Debaters Will Go To Pitt Tournament

Two U of T students are travelling to Pittsburgh today to enter the Cross-Examination Debating Tournament to be held there.

Possibly the largest organized debate in the United States, this year's tournament will discuss the topic of the Guaranteed Annual Wage. Toronto's representatives are John Woods and Jim Savers, both II UC.

An invitation has also been issued to Toronto to debate at the McGill Winter Carnival. Outside of the NECUS debating organization, the McGill Winter Carnival is the next largest debating conference in Canada. Sid Peck, II UC, and Eotimo Warren will represent U of T at the Carnival, scheduled to take place Feb. 17, 18, and 19.

In return McGill will send two debaters to Toronto on or about Jan. 21.

Toronto has been suggested as the site of the NECUS Debating Association Championships. This will be held February 22, 23, 24, according to Ken Cud UofT, president who told the UofU of the proposition Wednesday. The matter will be discussed at the next UTLU meeting.

Also discussed at the meeting were preliminary plans to hold a University Debating Conference in fall.

Literary Issue

The Varsity will be publishing a literary issue sometime next term. All students except those on The Varsity masthead are eligible to compete in the six categories: serious prose, humorous prose, fiction, legal verse, general verse and photography.

The names of the judges are as yet known. The deadline for all entries is January 27th. Entries will be accepted until late in the day at The Varsity office.

Justice To Talk

The Hon. Mr. Justice J. K. Macaulay of the Supreme Court of Canada will speak at the annual Hot House Library Evening, held on the day at 7:30 p.m.

The topic will be "Social Justice and the Law." A spokesman for the Library Committee said that Mr. Justice Macaulay has made Shakespeare's The Taming of the

"The Christian symbol, the cross, was removed wherever the communists found it. During the first nine months of the first Bolshevik rule (1940-41) 41 clergymen suffered death, were reported missing, or were deported to Soviet Russia."

The student also showed the Varsity slatter photographs of atrocities which he said were carried out by the Russians.

Among these were pictures of rows of bodies unearthed from prison courtyards, torture chambers, and people being loaded into boxcars "to exile to Siberia."

The student also had with him a book published by a Latvian refugee committee. This book listed 40,000 pages of closely typed lines—the names of 34,000 Latvian citizens which the student said were killed or exiled by the Russians.

"If you hold this book in your hands, you do not understand what it means; but I went through it; I knew some of these people. It means something to me, 34,000 people murdered, and for what?" the student said.

The student said that he could not understand the reason that prompted the United Church to bring the Russian bishops here.

He said that he did not wish to be vindictive, but that he felt that the other side of the story should be known.

Ex-Warden Bickersteth

Campus Profile

By WENDY MICHENER

Mr. J. B. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House from 1921 to 1947 and Director of Hart House from 1947 to 1955, has now spent over two months in Canada revisiting the places he knew best, and most particularly the University of Toronto.

"The place is coming with life," he said, sitting in his former Hart House quarters, now the "Bickersteth Room." He spoke with admiration of the changes he has witnessed.

"The Hart House Theatre is first rate," he said. The Boyd Neel concerts he found a worthwhile addition to the curriculum, but regretted that the same level was not maintained in other areas. We must try to keep the quality of the music up, but we must be able to get together on alternate Sundays just for the fun of it."

"The plan of the new building was not what I had intended. This is one of the things I don't like. But I mustn't say I, it is we. The picture of the building is very good, but the building is not what I had intended."

"The whole of the Hart House is a very good example of the work of the Hart House Society. It is a very good example of the work of the Hart House Society."

"I appreciate the word Union," he said. "It always has been a part of the Hart House tradition."

"Hart House is a very good example of the work of the Hart House Society."

Hart House is a community where people live together and share their spiritual existence."

When asked if he thought women had a need for such a community, he said most definitely yes, and that he understood that something was planned for the new building. He visited the Vic Union and liked the set up. He considered it as the only attractive social life in the city.

Mr. Bickersteth expressed his disappointment about the fact that boys were wearing Hart House. He would be able to look after them if they had money. "I only found two cases where a boy could not afford to buy a jacket and in both those cases I looked after them myself."

Before returning to Canada where he has been living since 1947, Mr. Bickersteth will visit the Maritime Provinces, spend Christmas with the Governor General and visit the University of Toronto.

President Martin To Discuss SDS

A life insurance plan for students is expected to be the main issue Friday, as students congregate at Falconer Hall to discuss the national Federation of Student N.F.C.U.S. committee and visiting president Peter Martin.

The plan, which is expected to be initiated after Christmas, is designed to give students a life insurance policy while they are at University. The plan will be discussed at the meeting.

All interested students are invited, an official will be on hand to answer questions. This is a free event.

Gowns Again At WUA Last Chance To Vote

Will women students in University College be wearing academic gowns to lectures next year?

This is the question to be settled at a crucial meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association of the college next Tuesday.

At a poorly-attended WUA meeting two weeks ago, a motion was passed 19-11 in favour of the women students wearing gowns. Not so much as news of the motion spread around the college that a "sizeable" petition opposing the motion was circulated.

Explained Mary Barnett, an executive member of the WUA: "We're constitutionally obligated to have a second meeting on the question since the required number of signatures on the petition were secured."

Miss Barnett made no bones about the fact she was "pro gown." She said: "I think they'd add a bit to the college and besides, they're very saving on clothes."

Average cost of the gowns—much would be purchased by the students—would be $12.00. Miss Barnett estimated. She said she hoped that men students at the college would get a movement underway soon so that all students at the college would wear gowns.

The meeting next Tuesday will be held in the Women's Union Theatre at 1:15 p.m.

One WUA executive member summed it up: "This will be absolutely the last chance for a vote on the issue and everyone who has any preference at all as to whether she wishes to be gowned or not is urged to come."

10 Outstanding Men Wanted Lincoln, Churchill Suggested

Who do you think have been the ten outstanding persons in their own field since the 12th century? For instance, who is the outstanding painter of the last eight centuries?

The University Library has received a letter from the American Institute of Management, Wednesday night, beside being strong protest against the Blue and White's Christmas Tree plans. The Student's Administrative Council:

- gave $117 of council funds as Christmas presents to SAC office help, cleaners, and "the woman who buys the SAC coffee";
- grinned when informed that O'Keefe's had provided the beer for the Carabin Weekend;
- were sad when informed that there is no chance of Adlai Stevenson coming here to speak this year;
- were surprised to hear that 630 copies of the Anniversary asking for a survey to be taken on this campus. The task has been turned over to The Varsity, which in turn is asking for the choices of the students.

Here are the fields for you to consider: science, mathematics, music composition, literature, painting, sculpture, architecture, and politics. In the field of politics suggestions are: Lincoln and Churchill; for literature, Dante, Shakespeare, and T. S. Eliot.

The Institute has purposely not defined the term "outstanding," preferring to let each university develop its own standards in making the choices. They add one condition, however, that the people chosen be considered for original work and not for executing the plans of others.

Although the Institute is primarily concerned with the consideration of business enterprises and the advancement of its management, it also includes in its program colleges, non-profit and religious organizations.

This survey considering world leaders in the fields mentioned is being conducted in several universities of the western world.

The holidays might be a good time to think the matter over. When lectures resume in January, your choices can be left at The Varsity office or the SAC office. To facilitate compilation of the results, you are asked to name only one man from each group. The Varsity would especially appreciate the opinions of the staff of the university.

Issue of The Varsity had been sold at 10¢ each.

- table thumped when the Nuts-62 Rep presented a motion of thanks and congratulations to the Blue and White and its chieftain, Tom Thompson, for "achieving success financially, socially, and spiritually";
- noted the absence of SAC President Michael Shoemaker, who was off in Hart House debating with Jack Pickersgill;
- received thanks from The Varsity for a new electric letter;
- heard that the WUS Treasure Van had grossed $5559, an increase over last year;
- were invited to go and hear Peter Martin explain NFCUS policy at a reception this Friday at 3:00 p.m. in Falconer Hall;
- looked around for someone to second a motion that was moved at last month's SAC meeting;
- thumped out their approval to put up a bulletin board in front of the SAC office, even though they had been refused permission from the administration to put up the design they wanted; but later backed down and decided to go and see the President, Dr. Sidney Smith, before doing anything "rash";

- were informed by Dr. Woodside, head of the University Health Service, that 93% of university students are perfectly fit, although free psychiatric services are available to those who aren't;
- were told that the University's Vice-President-In-Charge of Administration was a "nice" "nice" to students when he did not turn down their proposed bulletin-board flat;
- tried without success to have a short meeting so that members could attend the last part of the Hart House Debate;
- were happy to hear that 90% of Torontoensis's have been obedient when told that proposed NFCUS debating funds that may be held here in February will cost the SAC no money;
- heard nothing from some members, a great deal from others.

HAPPY FAMILY?

"THE FAMILY OF MAN"; ed. Edward Steichen. Published for the Museum of Modern Art, New York, by the Maco Magazine Corp. pp. 92. $1.35.

By PETER GRANT

Somewhere, deep in a daisy-spunkled lawn, two people lie love-locked. There may be other people in the world; and one of them may be aiming a loaded Leica at their unsuspecting heads; they neither know nor care. The intensity of their experience is enough for them to think about.

Our flippant friend looks at the picture and says, "Hah! Taken in front of Whitney Hall." And that is precisely the point of this intriguing collection of photographs, now published in book form. The things men and women do, the really important things are so similar in London, in Japan, in Buchanaland, and in front of Whitney Hall, as to be practically interchangeable.

The book makes its point with an original and very effective use of photomontage. Leaping rapidly from continent to continent, from race to race, the pictures blur into a human continuum, the men and women, the rich ones and poor ones, the cultures, the colours, the creeds, blend into a vision of "Man" which is more than a composite photograph. "Man" from being a vague abstraction, even harder to believe in than "God," becomes an organic unity, greater than the sum of his parts. More important, he becomes human.

Man and his family are not idealized. They are photographed as they go about the common business of humanity—loving, sweating, amusing themselves, dying, giving birth, marching each other to concentration camps, starving, hunting, and posing for family portraits. Their faults (our faults, then) and their loveable qualities are given equal exposure, but, having leaped through the book, we find it hard to stay mad at people we have known on such intimate terms. Humanity, we discover, consists of people very much like ourselves. Too bad, in a way, but perhaps, after all, there is something to be said for them.

We unreservedly recommend The Family of Man as a Christmas gift for your human friends, as an excellent collection of sheer photographic art, and as literature. Communications experts fear that writing will soon disappear, to be replaced by picture language, and speech. If The Family of Man is an indication, eloquence and even poetry will not die with the written word.

Christmas

From The Kulugayuk To Saguenay Banks

By DAVE DUNSMUIR

Christmas books for the under-fifteens are usually determinedly informative - The Big Book of Butterflies, say, or Drilling For Oil in the Texas Badlands. Oxford University Press has put out (just in time for the festive flurry) two fairly similar works that will appeal to all age groups, each with the merits of being remarkably readable and of having an absorbing out-of-the-way subject.

Before reading these books, I knew next to nothing of the rigours of Eskimo life, or of the haunting beauty of French-Canadian legend. Now that I've read them, I know a little about both, and have every intention of looking out more.

Ayorama is a remarkable human document, full of observation that shows the author's twelve years among "the People of the Land Beyond" were sympathetically spent. Father de Coccola, a Jesuit Priest, shared all the experiences of his far-flung flock, and describes them with engaging frankness.

The title of the book sums up the Eskimo cosmology. "Oh well, life is like that,"—a patient verbal shrug and mental attitude that helps the speaker face the prospect of starvation or a numbing death at 40 below.

Several threads of plot keep the story together, but it is in the set pieces that its beauty lies, and in the harsh cycle of birth and death and the courageous "AYORAMA"; Raymond de Coccola and Paul King. Oxford University Press, Toronto, pp. 316. $4.00.

"THE TREE OF DREAMS"; Marius Barbeau. Oxford University Press, Toronto, pp. 112. $3.50.

way the cycle is faced. Full of liberating names and Eskimo phrases (glossary supplied), the book is sure to stir any imagination.

Marius Barbeau's latest collection of French-Canadian folklore shows Barbeau to be both a scholar and a story-teller. His tales of devotion of the Devil retain the style as told by the fireside on a Quebec Christmas Day.

French Canada is implicitly shown a region of contrasts, a mixture of ribaldry and aggressive piety, a naive and highly sophisticated world of legend, the Devil at hand, hiding behind the nearest lamp, a pine, ready to spring out as a sly brass serpent or to don the guise of a pomaded stranger and stroll into a hockdown. The brevity of each ensures the reader's rapt attention.

Mingled with the folk-tales, D. Barbeau has included sketches of such hard-believe-in Saguenay characters as Alou the Horse—who gained his pebbled talents partially because his legs were backwards at the knee—and the Yellow Haired Potter, reputed to have sold his soul to that ubiquitous Devil.

The illustrations should have been of the strongest points of both books, each artistic technique is admirably suited to its subject. James H. H. Pen captures the light-and-shadow of Eskimo peoples about an even fifty per cent of the time, occasionally wanders itself on Victorian fuzziness. Arthur Price's two-colour scratchboard illustrations have a murky opulence about them but more than once are wasted on fairly trivial subjects. But the artists' definite assets to two comfortably interesting books, both relaxing without being soporific.

The publishers of the first book on my list are very proud. They think that it will enrich the bibliographies of a host of readers for a lifetime and will come, we believe, to be regarded as an important event not only in classical but in English literature. Perhaps. But I do think that VOICES FROM THE PAST would make an excellent present, either for oneself (and surely Christmas is the time to indulge one-self) or for a friend, especially a special friend.

The Todds have selected their translations from many different periods. Some are modern and never before published, others date back to the time of King Alfred. The authors represented range all the way from Homer to the early Middle Ages. The only criterion for inclusion is that they write in Greek or Latin and have something to tell us today.

Plautus, the Roman dramatist, has part of his play The Spook included. The Greek equivalent of the children's game Ring-a-ring or roses is included, as are other ring games. (One immediately thinks of The Family of Man in this connection.) There is Cicero on bribery and corruption and Plato on the evils of democracy and Lucian's first science-fiction story of a trip to the moon. Hero of Alexander's first jet-engine is also included.

For some reason the other two books I have here are regarded as esoteric by some people with whom I have recently discussed them. The Doukhobors are always in the news and government measures against their strip-tease act never seem to get anywhere.

The answer, compiled by social scientists headed by Hawthorn, an anthropologist, is reasonable and well-argued and is an excellent example of applied anthropology.

Perhaps the other book is a trifle esoteric. Few people around here know anything about Persian poetry and fewer still seem to care. That's a pity because this book could have been a good introduction to the subject. The general lack of interest is partly responsible for the general badness of the translations in terms of poetry. It seems impossible that Persian poems, in the original, could be as spineless as they seem to be in this book.

CALLBOARD

Torontonians will find things fairly quiet in the entertainment world come Christmas and the New Year, but if they can bring themselves to look, they can still find a few worth-while events. And there's always television.

The theatre picture is bright, for the moment at least. You have the chance (for tonight and tomorrow) of seeing Vic's modernized version (via U.S. playwright Paul Green) of Ibsen's PEER GYNT at the Hart House Theatre. At the Crest, the Canadian Players' SAINT JOAN ends this weekend—about two weeks too soon. The Crest's next production will be the seasonal special, CHRISTMAS IN THE MARKET PLACE, start Tuesday. Or you could go and see the D'Oyly Carte do THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE at the Royal Alex—that is, if you already have the tickets.

BALETT

Balletomanes have their day (one will probably be able to afford) next week, when the Sadler's Wells Ballet takes over Maple Leaf Gardens for three performances from Tuesday to Thursday.

MUSIC

The perennial performance of Handel's MESSIAH by the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir, conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan, now in his year of retirement.
Second concert of the HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA Sunday, again conducted by Boyd Neel.
AMAH AND THE NIGHT VISITORS, staged by the Royal Conservatory Opera School at Hart House The next weekend.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC, including Saint-Saens' little-known Christmas Oratorio, presented by the studio of Dr. Enrico Vinci at the Conservatory Music Hall, next Tuesday.
THE TORONTO CHILDREN PLAYERS, directed by Dorothy Goulding, in their "Yuletide Extravaganza"—Twelve Days of Christmas at Eaton Auditorium, next week to Sat.

FILMS

A brand new but generally uninspiring crop of new films are infiltrating the city at present. Best of the bunch is THE TENDER TRAP, a new and fairly amusing twist on old deb-ropes-roue theme.

ART

Now on show at the Hart House art gallery — a watercolor heralding January's big Toronto Art exhibition of BRITISH SCULPTORS, with a lot of new work. We thought, did only ever read about it.

Wandering Wits At College

Max Shulman's new big book takes a close-up of college humour and emerges with a profile as vacillating as the sine curves on a cartoonist's blonde, even if the ups and downs of The Guided Tour of Campus Humour are seldom as uniformly pleasing. A rich sampling of jewels and paste, prospected out of the abundant college scene south of the border are nothing from The Varsity, the book includes some of the best stories, articles, jokes, songs and nonsense from fifty years of fifty college magazines, and also some of the worst.

This chequered quality is a result of an arbitrary classification of the pieces into categories such as History Rewritten (The human pageant as it never happened), Lacerated Languages (Fractured French, Splintered Spanish, Lacerated Latin, etc.), Verse (songs nobody's mother taught him). In order to keep

"MAX SHULMAN'S GUIDED TOUR OF CAMPUS HUMOUR"; ed. guess who. Hanover House, distr. Doubleday, pp. 456. $3.19.

By MARI THALER

these divisions proportionate, the editor has padded the book in places, including items which were flat when they were new, and now are flat and dated. Miscellany is thus easily the best section, full of irreverence, non sequiturs, well-focused parodies, a rib expanding party of mad laughter at a mad world. Satire and Burlesque is also strong, as the college wit seems to take particular pleasure in spoofing established authorities in fields which someday he hopes to notch himself. Titles like "My rod spits death," "I'm hot for you, baby," "How to write an obituary notice," "Suture fancy" are typical and the stories which follow are really funny.

Of the long list of humour mags and rags, the Yale Record and the Harvard Lampoon are the most frequently consulted. The Princeton Tiger, Ski-U-Mah (Shulman's old college), the Columbia Jester, the Cornell Widow, Blue Jay (John Hopkins), The Purple Cow (Williams College), Octopus (Wisconsin), The Sour Owl (Kansas), are some of the other queer animals which provide the fun. There is even a Campus Cat (and a Campus Chat), but no Champus Cat crosses the trail.

The humour quiets down considerably in the "Old Grads" section. Wittily, but serene-ly, people like James Thurber, Stephen Leacock, Evelyn Waugh, H. Allen Smith, Heywood Brown, write as only they can write. It is a good, sensible ending to a book full of good, fantastic nonsense.

GYNT'S PEER PEERLESS

Paul Green's trimmed version of Ibsen's Peer Gynt can still be seen at Hart House tonight and tomorrow evening. Despite the compactness of the version used by the Victoria Drama Society in its current production, the play itself is a difficult one to grasp at first seeing, and a long and intricate telling of pilgrim Peer Gynt's tortured spiritual regression. The Drama Society's presentation, competently directed by Herbert Whittaker, capitalizes on the various settings which Peer finds himself in to make the evening more colorful—here a country wedding party, an eerie scene in a troll den, or a desert island. They all give kick to the one main role in the play.

The laurels must go to Terry Shiels, carrying the role of Peer Gynt with a finesse seldom seen at Hart House, who manages to keep his audience interested in him throughout the play with innumerable gestures, facial expressions, and unexpected leaps and bounds that prevent the kind of heaviness from creeping in that so often lays amateur dramas low. I felt that in the final scene Peer Returns Home, even Shiels could not lightly carry the burden of recriminations and self-examination which was depicted here, and wondered why some of this scene was omitted.

The immediate supporting Looking back on Wednesday's opening night production, one thing that struck me was the lively, bright and poetic first act. This stood splendidly on its own two feet, particularly admirable was the vivid expression which Shiels and Gigi Nyberg put into their voices.

This 'rave' review is no doubt owing to some extent to the fact that it is being written by a Vic grad. This, however, is not the reason why I think more people should go and see Peer Gynt. Like Canino Real and R.U.R., here is an opportunity for students to see some modern yet rarely accessible drama. And certainly no one will ever learn from reading reviews like this just what the plays are all about.

THORNS, a 1945 drawing in pen, chalk, and watercolour by expressionist Graham Sutherland. The drawing is part of a show "British Watercolours" in the Hart House Gallery from now until January third. —VSP by Stan Klosevych

British Watercolours At HH

From a tour that included Germany, Barcelona and Madrid, New Zealand and Israel in the last five years, comes the most significant show to visit at Hart House Gallery in all the time. The major modern British painters, known to most of us chiefly through Penguin reproductions, are all represented. The course of British art in the last 40 years is shown, here in little.

The beginnings of the modern period is ushered in by some fantastic pen sketches in which Walter Sickert demonstrates his passion for the common things of life, and some sensitive sketches of women by Gwen John. Soon we are more energetically modern with cubist studies by Frederick Etchells, and by Wyndham Lewis, founder of the unique British "vorticist" movement. Henry Moore's distinctive style is immediately evident in one of the moving sketches he made in the London subway shelters during the war.

If you manage to find your way into the gallery among the professors and students of art, you will get a good and representative taste of the best art that Britain has to offer. You should realize that but for the agency of the British Arts Council, you probably wouldn't have the pleasure. Consider the value of a Canadian Council which could send touring abroad not pedestrian views of the local cities, nor just the group of seven but a show representative of the best Canadian moderns . . . Pelian, Borduas, Cahen, to name a few. Imagine the effect, for that matter, if such a show even toured only Canada.

Student Conference at Ohio U Topic: Underprivileged World

Fifty U of T students will be among the 2,000 students from 20 states the world who will attend a conference in Ohio State University during the Christmas vacation, announced R. Manuel, U of T Meds. conference delegate.

The object of the Quadrennial Conference will be to investigate and discuss "the revolutionary role of the U.S. in the world" and why, he says, are becoming to find that they do not have to live as they do now, said Manuel. The role of the Christian Church in the revolution will also be discussed.

The conference, which will last five days, will be attended by students from many colleges and universities in both the United States and Canada. Over half of the delegates, said Manuel, will be foreign-born, studying in North America.

Out of the Toronto contingent, fifty to 60 are expected to attend, said Manuel. He said the conference would be a series of workshops, a number of which will be in the form of a panel discussion. A number of speakers will be invited to give the conference a new and interesting twist, said Manuel. "The revolution could benefit the whole world."

The role of the Christian Church in this situation will also be discussed by the conference, said the delegate.

"The church is aware," said Manuel, "that it is sometimes guilty of misunderstanding the revolution. However, the Church is also aware of its potentialities for good, and will be seeking these out at this Quadrennial Conference."

Manuel stated that the attitude of the Church toward missions is changing, "because the church realizes that the position of young churches in Asia and Africa is only quantitatively different from that of the Church in the West; both are minority groups surrounded by a majority of non-Christians."

The program of the Western Church, said Manuel, should be to leave these younger churches to control their own affairs and to send technical personnel and assistance to help them.

POT-Engineering Debate Votes Against Censorship

Censorship on books and movies is not desirable, the Engineering-POT debate decided Monday night.

The therapists defended censorship, stressing that it should not be in the home, not the state, but in the hands of the people. Panelist Luther and Judy Christie, two of the speakers from POT, did not support a concrete censorship board elected by the people, but said it should be trusted and respected.

They stated that people place the judgment of matters affecting the country in the hands of the government, and that it is up to the electorate if a mistake is made.

Jim Vasoff and Winston Hay of Engineering, taking the negative side of the debate, attacked censorship, declaring that "democracy emphasizes freedom in all fields and that censorship perpetuates intellectual immaturity." They said that censorship was a matter of definition. "Who has the power to define?" they asked. "Any censorship should start in the home and not in the state."

"If some books are to be censored, why just start on recent publications. Why not start on the Bible?" asked one speaker from the floor.

About 40 people were present in the POT huts for the debate. The engineers have invited the Therapy girls to debate again with them, some time after Christmas.

School For Deaf Offers Graduates A Year's Tuition

A post-graduate scholarship will be made available to students here interested in teaching deaf children. The scholarship is to be given by the Education for Hearing Handicapped Children Inc., of Montreal.

The scholarship includes a year's fully-paid tuition and board at the Clarke School for the Deaf, Northampton, Mass. The school is a leader in oral teaching and lip-reading methods as opposed to use of sign language.

In a press release, the Education for Hearing Handicapped Children Inc., stressed the current shortage of teachers capable of giving instruction in the oral field.

Anyone with a degree from an accredited university is eligible to apply for the scholarship.

Further information may be obtained from Mrs. R. W. Heward, 9 Redpath Row, Montreal, Que., or Mrs. H. W. de Montmorency, 4616 Hampton Ave., Montreal.

Invitational Dinner

Co-eds Invade HH

Co-eds will be invading the Hart House Great Hall Dec. 15, prior to the annual Christmas Tree, as the first of Hart House invitation dinners is held.

Approximately four of the dinners, sponsored by the HH House Committee, will be held during the academic year.

"Every member of the University will be able to bring along his best girl so they can see how the other half lives," said Colin Graham, Hart House staffer.

Following dinner, the House will be open for inspection and visits will be made to the Library, Collection and Art Gallery. To add a "romantic" atmosphere, piano music will be provided in the First Common Room.

The meals will be served regular cafeteria style; but students who plan to come are asked to pick up an invitation at the Hart House Porter's desk sometime next week, so there will be some indication of how many are attending.

Russian Priests On Campus

The Bishops Skipped School

—VSP by Stan Klosevych

'Workers of God' To Visit Hart House

Two bearded priests and an accompanying inspector—the first Russian churchmen to visit Canada since before the war—spoke at Emmanuel College yesterday.

And Archpriest Ruzhitsky, a member of the Russian delegation, told an assembly of 180 students that they were not supposed to miss lectures, but "I admit that when I was a student I missed quite a few too."

Archbishop Boris, of the official Russian Church, heads the three man delegation from Moscow. Other members are Archpriest Ruzhitsky, father-rector of Moscow Theological Academy, and Anatole Gorbachev, an inspector of the Academy. The party's tour of Canada is sponsored by the United Church.

The two priests addressed the students in Russian, and their words were interpreted into English by Dr. Herman Neufeld, who is a minister of the Menomonie Church.

Heavily bearded Archbishop Boris said, "my heart thanks you for the words you express." He said that, "while the fact that our two countries are a great distance apart makes it likely that we differ in many instances, we are all united in that we are workers of the Lord."

To-day, the priests will visit President Sidney Smith at Simcoe Hall at 10.30 a.m. Afterwards they will visit Hart House, and then tour the campus with Vice-President C. T. Bissel as guide.

Student Raps Reds

The visit of three Russian clergymen to Toronto and this campus came under sharp attack yesterday from a student, a former Latvian refugee.

The student charged that the purpose of the Russian priests' visit was not to improve international relations, but "to put people asleep."

The student said that the Russian Bishops were mere employees of the state. He suggested that there were grounds for believing one of the three church officials, an "inspector of church academies," was in reality a member of the Russian secret police. Some former Ukrainians now resident in this city had recognized the "inspector" as the man who had participated in a purge of Ukrainian churches after the war, he said.

The Bishops are state employees, said the student, and they are always careful to include in their sermons and speeches only what they know the state will approve of.

"They do not preach ordinary Christianity," said the student. "If they were honest in their intentions, they would not have refused to speak to our ministers and to people who have suffered under the Russians. But they knew that they could not answer their questions, so they would not talk to them."

The student said that he suspected that the "cold" that the Russian prelates offered as their excuse for not meeting the delegation of refugees from behind the Iron Curtain was just a pretext to escape from an embarrassing situation.

The student asked that his name be not published because he still had relatives behind in Russian-occupied Latvia, and he feared for their safety. He said that at five years of hiding from the Russians during the war, he and his family had escaped from the country in a small boat to another Baltic nation. A few years later they came to Canada, and the student is now enrolled in the university.

(Latvia, one of three former-independent republics on the Baltic on Russia's borders, was overrun by the Russians in 1940, a few months after the Russians and Nazi Germany had divided up Poland between them.)

The student said that he could not go to Church in Latvia because of the Russian occupation because of Russian threats. He said he himself was accused by the Russians of being a "spy," because he had taken English as one of his High School subjects.

The student showed a Varsity staffer documents to support his charges of Russian brutality. Among these was a special report of a committee of the United States House of Representatives which said in part:

"(After the Russian invasion of Latvia) . . . all churches and church property were nationalized by the Soviets . . . Many churches (Continued on Page 7)

HH Surprise - Pickersgill Supports - Civil Rights, Liberties, Freedoms!

Immigration Minister Pickersgill joined the "noes" at last Wednesday's Hart House debate to help them defeat a vote on a Bill of Rights, a referendum.

"Surely no law is any better than the way in which it is enforced," said Mr. Pickersgill. "A Bill of Rights is not going to be enforced in any better way than our law enforcement. I am not convinced myself that in any measure where the people themselves don't respect freedom, a so-called perfect charter in the world would be respected."

Mr. Pickersgill said, "I challenge anybody to come anywhere in the world where there is a Bill of Rights which has been in force for the past ten years in Canada."

"I don't think the British tradition is weaving a bit thin in this country," he said. "There is one thing which in my judgment is worth all the Bill of Rights that have been written anywhere in the world by anybody . . . There must be a test every five years of opportunity to turn the government out. Mr. Pickersgill said he considered that Canada had inherited British freedoms that provided for Canadian rights.

For the benefit of the free press, Mr. Pickersgill said that he would like to add that he was not against civil rights, civil liberties, and fundamental freedoms. "In fact I am all for them."

Don Price, 1 Law, spoke for the motion and said, "We are at the dawn of the human era. We are in fact we are well into the bureaucratic age. If we are to maintain some concept of the individual we need a Bill of Rights."

"At the very least our fundamental freedoms should fall under federal jurisdiction," he said. "They should be set up as an external authority to which both federal and provincial laws can be brought as a touch tone."

Replying for the noes, Mike

Shoemaker, 4V Trinity, said "There never can be a uniformity of Civil Law in our country. Solutions in a Bill of Rights will only be hindered by the ambiguous contradictions in that law."

"When I find the rebels marching on Ottawa with pitchforks I will want a Bill of Rights," said Shoemaker.

Norman Stoner, 3L Law, the second speaker for the ayes said, "A Bill of Rights would prevent unbridled legislatures from eroding rights from under us. . . . To the extent to which we enjoy life is we get it from public opinion and the practice of the people. In these days public opinion is like a rope of sand."

The second speaker for the noes, Tom Hammond, 4V UC, said: "It is the tradition which is more important than the words. Nothing in law prevents the government from setting up a tyranny, but as long as George Dewey is there they won't get away with it."

"Many of these civil rights are only possible if you tie them in with the individual's responsibility to the group. Until you tie them in, a Bill of Rights would only be so much meaningless paper," said Hammond.

Don Stevenson, 4V Vic, spoke from the floor and said, "The Honorary Visitor represents an attitude of complacency, smugness, and the feeling that the British tradition is a cure all. The purpose of a Bill of Rights is not a Utopian one. The chief purpose is education. I don't feel that the British tradition has really permeated through Canada."

Stan Schiff, 3L Law, said from the floor, "Human rights are not guaranteed by black marks on paper. Human rights are guaranteed by people's feelings on the matter. Gradually words on paper are qualified by political climate."

SAC Attacks B & W Christmas Tree

Blue and White plans for the annual Varsity Christmas Tree came under sharp attack at last Wednesday's SAC meeting.

Tom Thompson, B & W Chairman, announced that the Blue and White had decided to eliminate The Varsity, Torontonensis, and the Blue and White itself from the list of organizations giving and receiving gifts at the Christmas Tree ceremony. In addition some faculties and colleges had been combined together for the purpose of gift-giving.

These actions were taken, said Thompson, in order to save time. "In previous years," he said, "the exchange of gifts has tended to drag on interminably."

The exchange of gifts — usually of a humorous variety — together with accompanying sonnets and citations between the various campus and college organizations was admitted by Thompson to have been a high point of previous Christmas Trees. Objections to the B & W plans were raised by Nursing, whose SAC Rep., Josephine Flaherty, said that Nursing was "disappointed" in having to combine their gift-giving with another faculty — particularly as they had already planned their present. Torontonensis Co-Editor Dave Wood voiced his displeasure at being cut out entirely and Varsity Co-Editor Bob Brown protested the exclusion of Varsity.

"The exchange of gifts among the campus organizations such as The Varsity and Torontonensis has been a high point of previous Christmas Trees," he said.

But perhaps the Wycliffe rep had the most serious objections. Rising to his feet, Tom Robinson declared: "combining Wycliffe with any other faculty or college wouldn't have been so bad, but Trinity — well, after all!"

The Blue and White Christmas Tree will be held on schedule, however.

The "Tree" long an annual event will be held in the Great Hall of Hart House on Thursday, December 15, at 8:15 p.m. Thompson announced. On the evening's program will be the Hart House Glee Club, who, under the direction of Ward McAdam, will sing a medley of Christmas carols. The Glee Club will broadcast coast-to-coast Christmas Eve over the CBC radio network.

Warden McCulley will give a Christmas reading, and President Smith will read the Christmas story from the Bible.

Students planning to attend are advised to come early, said Thompson, and to bring blankets as the floor of the Great Hall is somewhat chilly. All students are welcome to attend, he said.

Varsity Staffers Plot Policy

Here Varsity delegates to the recent Canadian University Press Conference in Quebec meet to decide the paper's policy before they confer with delegates from 22 other Canadian university papers. The Varsity Staffers are: (L to R) Michael Cassidy, Varsity Forum Editor, Wendy Michener and—Bob Brown, Co-Editors, and Carol Hoffman, CUP Editor.

Ranks 17th In Canada No Freedom Of Press Says Silhouette Editor

How free are University student newspapers in Canada? How free is The Varsity?

The whole question of press freedom among Canada's 20-odd university newspapers bubbled up last week at a three-day annual conference in Quebec City of member papers of the Canadian University Press.

Varsity co-editors Wendy Michener and Robert Brown strongly disagreed with a "freedom" list produced at the conference which relegated The Varsity far below average. The Varsity was placed 17th in terms of independence from outside control, out of a total of 23 papers named.

"We don't agree with the ranking given The Varsity," Brown said, "this year we have as much freedom as the Ubysey" (the University of British Columbia university student daily).

Brown said he had been talking informally with Gordon Vichert, editor of the McMaster-Silhouette who drew up the list and that Vichert had disclosed two main reasons for The Varsity's low position:

One was the fact that more student editors had been fired or suspended from The Varsity than had been the case on any other Canadian University newspaper;

Second was a constitution drawn up by the Students' Administrative Council which nominally limits the editorial material with which the paper may work (for example, The Varsity is restricted by constitution from printing information which will lead to strife between faculties).

Vichert told the Canadian Press last week that he arrived at his rankings of the 23 student newspapers on "a basis of personal research—through mailed questionnaires and questioning of some of the 60 delegates to the 18th CUP convention."

Vichert's survey revealed that there were several papers in Canada with heavy censorship.

Three of the 23 CUP members had to submit all news stories before printing to a faculty censor (this is not the case on The Varsity).

One paper, Vichert said was bound by a rule which prohibited the printer from accepting copy which had not been "OK'd" by a faculty member.

The survey showed that all heavily-censored student papers were published at Roman Catholic colleges.

The Canadian Press reported that a priest at Assumption College, Windsor, when asked his opinion on censorship, called it "beneficial." He termed the uncensored Ubysey—the newspaper, which headed the freedom list—an abomination.

Toronto Is Host For CUP In '56

Quebec, (CUP) The next conference of the Canadian University Press will be held in Toronto.

The Varsity was elected host paper for the 1956 convention of the national student newspapers. The conference will be held next December between Christmas and New Year's.

The McMaster Silhouette was elected executive paper for the coming year, succeeding the Manitiquan which held the post in 1955. The CUP has no permanent executive, and the executive functions are exercised each year by one of the member newspapers.

Long Pans Canadian Education School System World's Worst

Canada's educational system is one of the world's worst, says Marcus Long of the department of Philosophy of the University.

Canada's school system is one of the world's worst, said Marcus Long to a Wednesday luncheon of the Electric Club of Toronto. The United States' system is poorer, while Britain's is superior, he said.

We are letting anyone teach who wants to, because of a shortage of teachers, he said. More and more able persons are steering away from the low salaries, poor opportunities, and inadequate standards of teaching, in his opinion.

Industry attracts these people, and in so doing, might eventually stem the flow of graduates it needs to operate, he said.

Gowns Permitted But Not Required For UC Women

University College women will not be compelled to wear gowns in their college, the Women's Undergraduate Association voted last December. In the last meeting of the WUA for the 1955 year, the vote was overwhelmingly in favour of revoking the motion for compulsory gowns.

However, as was pointed out at the meeting, any woman of UC who wants to, can at any time wear a gown in UC. The provision for the wearing of gowns in University College has never been removed from the college constitution.

We are producing fewer trained professional men, he said, and the number may eventually come to zero. Hardly any scientific graduates will teach in secondary schools.

As solution, Professor Long proposed equal opportunities in education and in industry for science graduates. The Federal government should finance completely Canadian Universities. Provincial assistance to primary and secondary schools should be increased, he said.

Staff

All Varsity staff-members are asked to report to The Varsity office today to pick up their regular assignments for this year. Any student interested in working on the student newspaper is also asked to drop into The Varsity office today.

Carscallen And King Cop Rhodes In Scholarship Race With Sixteen

James A. Carscallen, IV Victoria, was one of two Ontario students nominated for Rhodes Scholarships, it was announced last month. Carscallen and Anthony S. King, a Queen's University student from Ottawa, were selected from 16 applicants.

The winners will study at Oxford for two years, with the possibility of a third year being added, if circumstances warrant it.

The scholarships were established by Cecil Rhodes to maintain close ties between English-speaking nations and include students from the Commonwealth countries and the United States. There are 11 scholarships in all awarded in Canada.

Carscallen, 21, the youngest son of R. A. Carscallen, QC, of Wallaceburg, is taking the Modern Languages and Literature course at Victoria. He is specializing in English and French. In the last three years he has topped his course, and received numerous prizes and scholarships.

He is president of the Victoria French Club, and has been active in this group for some time. He is also head of the Wymilwood Concert Committee and a member of the Wymilwood Record Room Committee.

Carscallen was accompanist for the Hart House Glee Club two years ago, and assisted in this capacity last year. He is also chapel pianist at Victoria College and a member of a committee studying ways and means of obtaining an organ for the Victoria chapel.

Outside his academic studies, the Rhodes scholar found time to follow his hobby of bird-watching and has compiled extensive reports for the Detroit Audubon Society in the Sarnia area.

Anthony King is a final year student in history and economics at Queen's. He has taken first class honors in every year of his course. He has been active in student journalism and was editor-in-chief of the Queen's Journal in 1954-55.

Both students will leave for Oxford in September. Carscallen hopes to specialize in 17th century English. Eventually he hopes to teach English in a university in Canada.

Applicants for Rhodes Scholarships first filled in lengthy application forms. Those living in Toronto were interviewed early in December. Four of these were recalled and interviewed with the eight out-of-town applicants.

The selection board, in common with similar boards throughout the English-speaking world, has standards to apply in selecting its nominees. The two Ontario names, which were announced following the last interview on December 10, have been submitted to Rhodes Trust officials for confirmation.

University Of Toronto Athletic Association Amendments To Constitution

The following deletions from the Constitution of the Athletic Association are required because of a change in the administration of the Required Programme of Physical Education for Men which has been effected by a sub-committee of the Committee on Undergraduate Activities composed of members of the academic staff of the University instead of being under the jurisdiction of the Athletic Directorate as has been the case heretofore.

Notice of motion has been given as required by the Constitution and the Athletic Directorate will be asked to approve the changes at the meeting on Tuesday, January 10th, 1956, as follows:-

The supervision and direction of the Required Programme of Physical Education for Men as specified by the Board of Governors of the University is a matter from jurisdiction provided for the School of Physical and Health Education.

Page 3, Article VI, delete par. 2,2 as follows:
By resolution of the Board of Governors of the University the Director will instruct the Director of Athletics, arrange schedules for the carrying out of the Required Programme of Physical Education for the University as a part of the instruction provided for the School of Physical and Health Education, and a committee of the Directorate consisting of the senior members shall pass upon the yearly estimates. C. Clyde Batten, last year's Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity said he was strongly against any censorship imposed upon the press by outside influences.

"Censorship," Batten said, "is contradictory not only to the true nature of journalism but also to that of a university. The expression of what is demonstrably true should never be suppressed for any reason."

Michael Shoemaker, president of the SAC said he was "surprised" to read that The Varsity had been placed so low on the list. However, Shoemaker said he did not agree that The Varsity or any similar university newspaper should be allowed unlimited freedom to publish material. He said however he didn't think there was any paper now publishing with any greater freedom than The Varsity.

Tom Robinson, Chairman of the SAC's Publications said last night that he felt the Students' Council was a "fairly representative body" and that they should therefore have a right to censor The Varsity.

Here is Vichert's list of Canadian University papers, in order of their freedom.

WHITES DUMP LEAGUE LEADERS 2-1

Curry Plays Brilliantly In Goal Mills, Elik Provide The Scoring

By JOHN BROOKS

It took a long time, but grim determination finally paid off for the Varsity Whites. Two ex-junior stars provided the offensive power and an ex-Blue saved the game defensively time and time again as the cellar-dwelling Whites edged high-flying Kingsway Lumber 2-1 in Varsity Arena Wednesday night.

Grant Mills and Mike Elik scored the collegians' goals. Mills opened the scoring in the game when he counted on John Tolton and Dud Kearney. This goal lasted until almost the end of the middle canto when Ed Crust scored for the visitors on a play with Newton and Lee to knot the count.

In the final period, Emerson of the Lumbermen went off for tripping and Varsity coach Jack Wheelrake put on his power play and it paid off. Ted Lotocki fought for possession of the puck in the corner, slid it to Elik, and the ex-St. Michael's Major ace carried the puck past two Kingsway defenders to the front of the net. From there, he lifted a high backhand past Jim Cruickshank to break the deadlock. The Whites held off a determined rally by the visitors for the remaining nine minutes of the period.

Hugh Curry, who has played stellar defensive hockey all season, despite the fact he has a last place club in front of him, was at his peak for the game. And especially in the last minutes of the game, when shots were raining on him from all directions, did he stand out. Blair Graham let fly a shot in the last minute that had the red light on all the way, but Curry calmly met it with the toe of his skate and deflected it out of danger.

St. Hilda's Victors Top Nursing 6-0

By JOAN BOND

In one of the first games of the female hockey schedule, St. Hilda's Es triumphed Nursing, 6-0. In spite of the strong attack of the Nursing forward line led by Sue Beveridge, the Saints monopolized the play throughout the entire game. Tibu Eaton led the scoring parade for John Goodwin's squad with two goals.

The Trinity gals although somewhat confused in their first hockey attempt of the year displayed prominence from the beginning and kept the puck in the Nursing end throughout the entire first period. Marg Gordon and Flo Middleton played well on defense and were a valuable asset to the Blue and Grey team. Jane Dalton and Jamie Williams were responsible for the two tallies that put the Saints ahead 2-0.

In the second period, the Trinity team found the net three times to increase the score in its lead to 5-0. The ladies who found the net this time, were Polly Shaker and Tibu Eaton, with two. The outstanding player in this third of the game and again in the third period was freshe, Pam Hill. Her skating ability and stick handling are far above the average. No doubt we will hear a lot from this young lady before the end of term.

The third period saw only one goal—this notched by Miss Hill, but it also had one of those rare occurrences in girls' hockey, a penalty. Penny Linell sat it out in the box for boarding a nurse.

St. Hilda's outplayed the Nurses in every department and it looks as though this B team is headed for another championship this year in their league. Best of luck, girls!

Sat. Is Athletic Night Cage Blues Head Bill

Varsity's Basketball Blues will tangle with Detroit Tech in the feature event of this Saturday's Athletic Night at Hart House. Activities get under way at 7:00 p.m. when Dalt White's Varsity Intermediates meet West End Seniors.

The senior game, slated for 8:30, shapes up as an interesting match, with Toronto having a good chance to hit the winning side of the scoresheet for the first time this season. Last year the Blues edged out a close victory over Detroit.

Those interested in fisticuffs can watch Tony Canzano's boxers in action in the Upper Gym at 8:15. This promises to be one of the top boxing events of the year as the Intramural Boxing Championships will be held. In addition, some of Varsity's intercollegiate boxers will participate in exhibition bouts.

Swimming fans will be able to see the entire Varsity swimming roster participating in an organized meet. In what is believed to be the first time such an event is taking place, the Toronto Frosh will swim against the remainder of the team. The pool activity starts at 8:00.

Football devotees will be able to watch their favourite sport via the movies. A continuous performance of a Varsity Intercollegiate Football game will be shown in the Fencing Room from 8 to 11.

Men, don't be afraid to take your girl friends to the evening's festivities, there will be dancing in the gym after the basketball game. Pass-out checks to the Arbor Room will also be issued, so that everyone can have something to eat.

Saturday evening then will be jam-packed with variety. Those in attendance will have their choice of four sports and have a dance tossed in extra. All this for just fifty cents. You'll have to go far to obtain so much for so little.

Although Intercollegiate hockey play was temporarily suspended throughout the Christmas holiday, the Varsity Whites continued to play, without any noted success, in the THL Major Series. With several players away on holidays, coach Wheelrake was forced to use several members of the Blues, but the added strength was not noticeable in the standins.

The Blues opened their Intercollegiate season on December 9th, playing host to the McGill Redmen, and sending the rough-and-tumble Frenchmen back home on the short end of a 10-5 count.

Don Cossar and Sandy Morrison paced the Blues' attack with a pair of counters each. Singletons went to Mert Wright, John Akitt, Brian Anderson, John MacDonald, Ken Linesman, and Ted Rogers. Linesman picked up three assists as well as his goal, while ex-Barrie Flyer MacDonald was in on three goals.

The game was highlighted by several fights, with matters coming to the boiling point towards the end of the second period. John MacDonald tangled with big Paul Dingle at centre ice and more than held his own despite his size. Both goal majors plus minor and Dingle was barely back on the ice before he was off again and this time for good. He took exception to some conversational remarks by Ken Linesman and swung his stick at Linesman's head. The Varsity player waded off the blow with his own stick but the move was too obvious to escape the referees' eyes. Handed Dingle a career misconduct for deliberate attempt to injure and the Canada intercollegiate Athletic Union has Dingle a two-week suspension for Christmas.

Dingle will be missing the McGill lineup when the Redmen visit Laval on January 12th and when the Blues travel to Montreal the same weekend to do battle with McGill and the University of Montreal Canadiens in their first road trip of the season.

The Whites meet Lyndhurst in the opener at eight on Saturday night, while the Blues play at Lyndhurst on 20th, who will have the visitors.

Detroit Tech Visitors In Basketball Feature

Still looking for their first win of the season, John McManus' basketball Blues go against Detroit Tech in the feature event of this Saturday's Athletic Night programme. In a preliminary basketball game at 7:00 P.M. the Varsity Intermediates meet West End Y Seniors.

The Teachers led by Nick Sica and Mike Tatsak will be out to revenge a 69-63 loss suffered last season at the hands of the Blues. Tatsak hit for 21 points here last year while Sica got 12. Varsity's Leo Madden scored 26 in the same game, Detroit have eight veterans back this year.

The Blues have lost their previous five games but should hit the winning trail tomorrow. John Dacysbyn, after missing the last ball game, will be back in action and along with Leo Madden, Florian Matsalla, Pete Potter and Ruby Richman, the Blues should give Tech plenty of trouble. Madden has been Varsity's top scorer to date with 50 points in the five games played. Centre Al Vaichulis has the best shooting average, throwing in 40% of his attempted field goals.

In the preliminary game Dalt Whites Intermeds will have their hands full as they tackle West End Y Seniors. The Y men have one of the better ball players in the city in the person of George Stulac and Doug Trotter. Both men play in the International Triple A Basketball League. The Intermeds will be without Joe Stulac who is also a member of the West End squad.

Hugh Curry

Hugh Curry, the goaltender for the Varsity Whites of the Toronto Hockey League Major Series, has been a standout between the pipes all season as well as a great morale booster for the team. Curry's brilliant play was a big factor in the Whites' first season win on Wednesday night over Kingsway Lumber. The Whites are out after their second straight victory on Saturday night when they tangle with the red-hot Lyndhurst Motomen in the double-bill opener at eight, Attention all aquawomen! A new schedule of free swim periods at the Lillian Massey Pool has been announced and here it is: Morning— Tuesday 10:00-11:00 Friday 9:00-10:00 Afternoon— Tuesday 5:30-6:00 Wednesday 5:00-6:00 Thursday 5:30-6:00 We understand that there is some pretty good fun at these free swim meetings and have seriously considered dropping over ourselves for awhile someday. Hope to see you all there, girls, but please not all at one time.

Richman's 18 Not Enough Blues Lose To Detroit U.

Despite Ruby Richman's 18 point performance, the University of Toronto Basketball Blues bowed to the University of Detroit 78-50 in the Blues' final game of the term.

The outcome was never in doubt as Detroit forged ahead to a 43-23 lead at the half. Detroit's top scorer was Frank Ebben with 22 points, 18 of which were scored by half time. Besides Richman's 18 Vic Kudryk added 10 points. John McManus was the leading scorer for the Blues with 12 points.

During the holidays Dalt White's Intermediates lost their second game of the season when they were defeated by Northwood January 7-13. The Intermediates gave the defending Canadian Junior Champions a scare in the first half making them basket for basket. But Nortown pulled away in the second period with a 47 point barrage.

Barry Stroud was Varsity's top man with 15 points while Warren Reynolds was high man for Nortown with 28.

SHORT SHOTS ... During the victories Buffalo State beat McMaster 67-57 while long defeated Queen's 75-56. These scores should indicate what our intercollegiate competitor will be like this year as the Blues lost to Buffalo State 88-79 and to Iona 78-58. ... So there should be some good close ball games this year.

McGill Champs Of Water Polo

McGill University, for the second consecutive year, has emerged as Intercollegiate water polo champions. The Montrealers downed Varsity 12-7 in Toronto on Dec. 10 to take the two game total goal series by a 20-12 count. Toronto had gone down to an 8-5 defeat in the first game, played at McGill.

The Varsity splashers tried hard to make up the three goal first game deficit but the best they could do was to hold McGill to a 4-4 half time draw. In the second session McGill scored eight goals and were answered by Toronto only three times.

Bernie Langer was high scorer for the U of T, tallying three goals. Glumac, with two, and Mandel and Hill, with one each, rounded out the Toronto scoring.

abstention please

The recent Canadian University Press conference, held in Quebec, was rather a contrast to those of former years — especially in its tendency to avoid contentious issues or startling statements of policy. This conciliatory tendency can perhaps be seen reflected in the student newspapers across the country, and in turn may be the result of that old bugbear of universities and student editors — student apathy. Be this as it may, especially in contrast to conferences after the war, the 1955 edition of the CUP conference was a relatively mild and tame one.

The delegates passed a resolution to say nothing whatsoever about NFCUS. They refused to take any stand on the issue of Quebec, defeating a motion which requested Premier Duplessis to reconsider the question of federal aid for Quebec universities. Even on a motion to ignore a subject, there were two recorded abstentions. And on the one subject about which the conference did pass a strong resolution, the freedom of the press, the delegates, after much minute haggling over wording, came to an eight-eight tie vote, the chairman being forced to cast the decisive vote.

This year there were missing the usual flights of idealistic fancy. Resolutions supporting peace organizations or advocating the abolition of capital punishment were not mentioned. Even the annual condemnation of Time Magazine was avoided. The general attitude of conference delegates seemed to be one of conciliation and peaceful acceptance of the existing situation. The delegates seemed especially anxious to avoid taking a strong stand on a controversial issue — as we said before, in great contrast to former years.

However, whether or not the conference concerned itself with ideals and the issuing of strong statements, it certainly had great value. The annual revitalization of editor interest in and knowledge of CUP, the re-organization of the wire service and paper exchange each year, which results in the exchange of news stories across the country — these are essential to the practical working of the organization. Each year — and this year was no exception — when student editors meet together, there is an exchange of ideas, a broadening of outlook, and some awareness of the conditions and difficulties in other parts of the country. These results of the conference are reflected in the student newspapers.

Certainly this year the conference was very well organized — and great credit goes to The Manitoban, the executive paper, and especially to Julius Koteles, the Chairman and President of CUP for 1955. Our thanks, and that of all the conference delegates, go to Le Carabin, of Laval University, the host paper for the '55 conference. The Laval university administration, the city of Quebec, and the three Quebec newspapers all entertained the delegates royally!

Next year the conference will be held in Toronto — we hope we can do as well.

Freedom Of Student Press

A Heavy Responsibility

By B. K. SANDWELL

B. K. Sandwell, Editor of the Toronto Saturday Night and a former professor at McGill, was elected to the honorary presidency of Canadian University Press for 1951 at the Canadian University Press conference held in Ottawa, December, 1950. This article, published as his regular column in Feb. 6, 1951 issue of Saturday Night, expresses some opinions on the problems and privileges of the editors who produce the twenty-three Canadian college papers that make up Canadian University Press.

The author of this column was recently elected honorary president of the Canadian University Press, the association composed of editors of student newspapers all over the Dominion. It need hardly be said that this is an honour which he ranks among the highest that have ever come to him. It was obviously not paid to him in his personal capacity, but in his capacity as editor of Saturday Night during the last 18 years. In that sense he receives it merely as the representative of a large group of colleagues, in the editorial and business departments of this journal who have aided him in making it a national journal of which the forward-looking young journalists of the Canadian universities can approve.

At the same annual conference the CUP passed a resolution on the function of the college newspaper in dealing with controversial issues. It defines that function as being "to stimulate rather than to direct thought among the university students of Canada," and affirms a desire "to promote in the columns of member papers the fullest objective expression of opinion of controversial issues. Any attempt to suppress this full freedom of expression of opinion on the local, national, and international level will be strongly opposed by the CUP through every means at the disposal of the members of the association."

This resolution, which we believe to be thoroughly sound, will impose on the editors who adopted it a very heavy responsibility and call for the exercise of the highest kind of discretion.

There are people — a lot of people — who hold in all honesty the belief that any failure or refusal to publish whatever they want to get published in a periodical is an attempt to suppress the full freedom of expression of opinion. A journal like Saturday Night is to some slight degree protected against their most extreme demands by the fact that it has to live by pleasing its readers — who pay for their copies and will not pay for more of them if they do not like it. The editor can then say that an excessive amount of expression of opinion for or against prohibition, the liquidation of the capitalist class, the use of French in Ontario schools, the semaphore signal system by motor drivers, the suppression of oleomargarine — all of them subjects upon which opinion can legitimately differ — would annoy too many of his readers, or take up too much space at the expense of other things which would be much more pleasing to his readers; and that is that. The university newspaper does not have to please its readers; or rather they cannot express their displeasure by refusing to subscribe, for their subscription is usually collected with their fees.

Yet we can assure these editors over whom we now honorarily preside that they will have demands for space — and excessive demands for space — presented to them by those who advocate the liquidation of the capitalist class, and that they will have to have a good argument for refusing them (in so far as they are excessive) or they will be bulldozed into courses which will be harmful to their papers.

And it was, we fancy, for that reason that the odd but important little adjective "objective" was inserted to qualify and limit that "fullest expression of opinion" of which the CUP is pledged.

In these matters your "objective" is your only peacemaker; much virtue in "objective." Nobody knows exactly what it means, which is a vast help. The opinion which seeks expression cannot, we assume, with some certainty, be objective, for the basic meaning of "objective" is "external to the mind."

One thing about the resolution afforded us the greatest relief. There is no suggestion in it of the grave heresy that anybody, no matter who, expressing any opinion, no matter what, has a "right" to space in the columns of any periodical.

The right of free speech does not mean the right of free publication — in somebody else's periodical. In a society like ours, in which property rights are a part of the basic theory, the right of free speech does mean that anybody who can get the money can hire the services of a printing press and distribute its products to all those whom he can induce to accept them; and generally speaking that right is recognized in Canada, though with certain limitations in the Province of Quebec.

But the right, and the responsibility, of the editor to choose what expressions of opinion he will put before the readers of his paper overrides any possible right of the holder of any possible opinion to get his opinion printed in that paper. This is as true of the editor of a university journal as of the editor of the London Times.

Once appointed, the university editor owes his entire allegiance to the organization which appointed him — not to any section of it, and not even to the officers of it, but to the student body as a whole. His policy, it seems to us, should be determined by the character of the student body.

If it is a diversified body in point of beliefs and opinions it will of necessity be pretty broadly tolerant of differing opinions, and the paper should reflect that tolerance. If it is, by the nature of the institution, confined to a narrow range of beliefs and opinions, its tolerance will be narrower, and we can see no reason why the editor should seek to broaden it. That would be something like an attempt to "direct thought" among the students.

It would cause us no distress to learn that even a reasonable objective expression of Communist opinion is barred from the columns of the student paper of the University de Montreal, for we do not think the student body of that university has any desire for such expression, and we are firmly convinced that no Communist opinion has any right to it in that particular vehicle.

We rather rejoice that in other universities Communist opinion is regarded as something to be examined and discussed along with agnosticism, single tax, polygamy and contraception; but we recognize no right belonging to any of these opinions to use space in the student periodical beyond what the editor in his best judgment considers conducive to the interests of his paper and the stimulation of thought among his readers.

Let the editor do his own editing. This is what he is appointed for. It is he, and not the opinion-expresser, who must decide what expression of opinion is "objective."

OUR READERS WRITE:

For Control

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Our reply to Mr. Cervo's letter is due to our appreciation of the point which he attempted to raise. We do not intend to criticize Mr. Cervo's endeavour, but we found it so lacking in clarity, that we have difficulty in believing that he is a graduate of English.

We are as staunchly opposed to any form of moral laxity as Mr. Cervo, but it is not for us to set down a standard of moral conduct for other people. It is not a question of what we want them to do, but of what they really do.

Since people must find outlets for their sexual urges, these urges, in some places, at least, will tend to a great natural measure which is undesirable from both the economic and the human points of view. In this country where the economic factor is minimized, we have nevertheless to consider the importance of the social implications of the problem. Consider the most tragic plight of an unwanted child, of the thousands in our overcrowded orphanages, of the social stigma attached to the unwed mother! Too often has the dreaming idealist refused to come to grips with the real situation. Contraception is a means of obviating a social evil, whose malignance in this country is steadily increasing.

Precisely, because a man is not an ape or an amoeba, it is necessary, in order that he preserve his self-respect, that he take the responsibility for the control of human increase, rather than to allow the cruel laws of Nature to govern. Contraception is an important factor in promoting social progress.

Discounts?

Looking through the discounts offered by various stores for students I had a certain feeling of disgust. The main motive of these stories is pure advertisement, and not a genuine desire to help the needy student.

The Crest Theatre, however, is offering a real help with its generous offer. Some of the other "benefactors" could well learn a lesson from them.

ECRAZEZ L'INFAMIE

Tamburlaine The Greatest

Uneasy lie about a dozen heads wearing an assortment of crowns in Tamburlaine the Great, the barbaric romp now running rampage at the Royal Alex. With director Tyrone Guthrie's judicious pruning, Marlowe's amorphous mass takes a shape of a sort, and the invincible Scythian shepherd rises to power more quickly and undoubtedly much more spectacularly than he ever did on the Elizabethan stage.

Thanks to English 3k, I'd thought there was more to Tamburlaine than a greedy land-gobbler, but Guthrie must have taken some other course. Anyway, the mammoth cast, mainly made up from the Stratford Shakespearean Festival company, obviously enjoys itself playing cowboys and Indians (eastern style), and the audience obviously enjoyed watching them.

For 94 of the 95 cast-members, it's a losing battle. Anthony Quayle, co-director of the Memorial Theatre at that other Stratford, takes full advantage of one of the greatest one-man vehicles ever written, producing a monolithic Tartar that ranks as the most concentrated character-portrayal I've ever seen. Everything about him speaks of power and insatiable ambition — every loping step carries purpose behind it, and every word is laden with authority.

To a considerable extent, poetry has been sacrificed for pace in the production, but Quayle refuses to be flustered. Pride, sensuality, passion, are all there, in some of the most haunting lines ever written, and the star did as much justice to these lines as any mortal could. In fact, after Tamburlaine's demonstration of soul-searing grief at the death of his consort and after his own deeply moving and turbulent death, both in the play's second half, I felt a little impatient with Dr. Guthrie for spending quite so much time on that vaguely wearisome first-half collection of tottering thrones.

some spectacle!

But these remnants of the over-reacher are few, the production concentrating on lavish spectacle and violent action. Designer Leslie Hurry has done us proud, recapturing all the massy opulence of ancient Asia. Tents and towers, the gleam of crimson, purple and gold cascading over the proscenium onto the specially constructed apron stage, give all the visual appeal of some exotic fruit sundae, smooth to take but ultimately numbing the palate.

Action, spectacle, and "thought" are all more skillfully modulated in the second half, the high point being in the appearance of the conqueror's chariot of wrath, with Tamburlaine up, two captive kings in the traces, and two spare captive kings alongside. Cecil B. De Mille should see this. And the whole show is all aglitter with crowns all shapes and sizes.

Wearing the crowns, but never for very long, are various members of the Festival company. Naming them all would be quite pointless, as most of them appear only to be stung or chopped down, stabbed, lashed or otherwise disposed of. Two of them do stand out from this welter of monarchy. Eric House contributes yet another clear-cut little cameo, this time as the weak-willed Mycetes, while Douglas Rain as Bajazeth, Emperor of the Turks, found even in subjection is the only one who ever comes close to stealing a scene from Quayle.

Tamburlaine's world is a man's world, and the two principal women involved do little to restore the balance. Barbara Chilcott as the royal consort Zenocrate achieves flashes of imperiousness and certainly (to coin a phrase) looks the part. Coral Browne, an import from English theatre, does next to nothing to justify her star billing. As Zazina, wife to Bajazeth, she is given one superb grand-operatic moment, somewhere between the moods of Mimi and the captive Aida, but the way she dragged her chains was more reminiscent of the Ghost of Christmas Past.

AM AHL REVISITED

Among the more seasonal holiday presentations of music during the far-off Christmas week was the Royal Conservatory Opera School production of Gian-Carlo Menotti's one-act opera, Amahl and the Night Visitors. This little piece, written in 1951 for production over television, made a charming afternoon entertainment. It concerns a poor widow and her crippled son, Amahl, who are visited during the night by the Magi on their way to Bethlehem; as Amahl offers his homemade crutch to the Christ child, he is miraculously cured of his lameness, and follows the Wise Men to Bethlehem.

There is, it seems, enough sentiment in this opera to appeal to most of us, without it becoming in any way sentimental. Musically, it is simple and concise. Dramatically it moves enough to keep the attention of its juvenile audience fixed most of the time on the action. In the places where Menotti becomes lyrical, and the music a little advanced, a wave of fidgets surged through the house. However, there is no doubt that most of the youthful auditors were quite entranced, and that fact alone, apart from a successful box-office, should encourage similar ventures in the future.

The performance, directed by Nicholas Goldschmidt and Herman Geiger-Torel, was far from lacking in feeling and sympathy. Miss Joan Maxwell, playing the Mother, was the most positive of the adult players in vocal and dramatic interpretation. The Three Kings, sung by Ernest Adams (Kaspar), Harold Mossfield (Melchior), and James Whicher (Balthazar) were possibly not directed to do more than stand and sing, but I think a little imagination on their own parts could have brought out their characters more as individuals. But it was, on the balance, the uninhibited performance of Manley Stark as Amahl that created a vital and moving thread, conveying the innermost conviction in the music and story.

Michael Oliver.

TAMBU RLAIN E THE GREAT isn't in this picture, but he can be caught up on any night at the Royal Alex until a week Saturday. Marlowe's story of the world-shaking Scythian shepherd then goes on to Broadway, with Anthony Quayle still in the title role. Those involved here are Peter Henderson, Barbara Chilcott, William Hutt, and Donald Davis.

A Call At The Crest

It is a pity that Priestley's An Inspector Calls is produced in such mediocre fashion at the Crest. This is a play well worth reviving, and might be called a philosophical melodrama; yet very little of the philosophy comes over in the present production, while the melodrama seems ludicrous.

The Birling family, members of the solid North Midlands middle class, are celebrating the engagement of Sheila (Diana Vandervlis) to Gerald Croft (Alan Nunn). The celebration is interrupted by a mysterious inspector (William Needles) who proceeds to ask all the members of the family disturbing questions. He gradually implicates each member of the family in the suicide of one of Mr. Birling's former employees.

This is not a play about 'the foibles and pretences of the well-to-do' as the writer of the programme note seems to think, and the cynosure of the anonymous programme-note writer when he notes that the play was first produced in Moscow with what emphasis can only too easily be imagined! is quite out of place.

His lack of understanding of the larger dimensions of the play seems to have permeated all the members of the cast, the director (Brian Maller) and the set designer (Nicolai Soloviev). The play is about all of us and our history since 1912, a fact which should be obvious from the inspector's farewell speech. "One Eva Smith has gone — but there are millions and millions of Eva Smiths and John Smiths still left with us . . . We are members of one body. We are responsible for each other. And I tell you that the time will soon come when, if men will not learn that lesson, then they will be taught it in fire and blood and anguish." Was that about the 'foibles and pretences of the well-to-do'?

The first production took place in Moscow in 1934 with two famous companies, Tairov's Kamerny and the Leningrad Comedy Theatre, presenting the play simultaneously! (I quote from Priestley's preface.) They seemed to understand the play better in Moscow since the air of solidity required was restricted to a massive door and solid furniture. There were no walls, as in the present production. I don't imagine that the Moscow actors played their parts in a variety of accents — adopted two different ways of pronouncing "enquiry," a word used quite frequently during the play.

The Inspector is supposed to create "an impression of massiveness, solidity and purposefulness," an impression not conveyed by William Needles, who was otherwise competent. Only Eric, Mr. Birling's son, played by William Job, seemed to understand the larger dimensions of the play. The rest of the cast were merely competent.

I have been deliberately harsh in my judgements because I think the Crest has managed to maintain a fairly high standard over the past few years. I don't think polite criticism is required when a professional group seem to be doing their best to run an otherwise excellent play. Further, more, despite all I have said, Priestley's play is worth seeing even in its present pallid state.

Arnold Rockman.

guys, dolls gall benny

It is being like Old Home Week for old Benny when I drop down to give a once-over to the documentary film history which the fish from Hollywood are making about the lives and loves of Benny's Boys. This is being based on several rough sketches which Damon the Runyon, who is being our biographer-lariat, makes of the Boys in action, which is being quite a trick as usually nobody but a few unfortunate stiff ever know when my Boys are in action. In act, when I see this flicker not even I know that it is my boys who are being in action as they disguise themselves so well they are being almost incognito.

So that old ladies and little children are not being frightened out of their wits, the considerate boys from my Hollywood territory do not advertise the fact that it is about my laddies that the film is telling and they market it under the pleasant alias of Guys and Dolls.

It is being very difficult to believe that the Nathan Detroit who runs the biggest permanent floating crap game in town and than whom there is being no one more slippery, is rolling his games with such square dice that he does not make more than seven G's a night, which is after all nothing more than chicken feed for such a gamecock as Nathan. Likewise, Sky Masterton, my runner-up for the wagering championship of the world, which extends from one end of Broadway to the other, does not seem the same. The last time I am seeing Sky he is not so romantic and he never sings except maybe the time he is sitting before very bright lights and Lieutenant Brannigan is giving a play in three degrees which causes Sky to sing rather muchly.

Miss Adelaide I remember because she does not change at all but is still engaged to that no-goodnick Nathan, and is proving beyond doubts that she is the world's best heating element when she gives with "Pet me Poppa" and various other classics. Harry the Horse looks just as downy-cheeked and bright-eyed as the day I teach him the fundamentals of mugging and Nicely-Nicely Johnson carries me back to the days when we are in grade school and he carries our ransom notes to the principal.

While there are many very pleasant little ditties and some very fine kick routines (which are fascinating to agents who fit about in their pockets and wallets, it is all being strange to me and as I leave the theatre, I am coming to a conclusion, which is only coming to a conclusion, which gives me a natural once a passing car gives me a shower of .45 calibre slugs, that "times have changed."

THE SUNDAY EVENING HOUR of YONGE STREET UNITED CHURCH
Announces
A SERIES OF SUNDAY EVENING LECTURES on
"Protestantism and Roman Catholicism: Their Similarities and Differences"

By DR. CLARIS E. SILCOX
in
"THE COMMUNITY LIVING ROOM" of YONGE STREET UNITED CHURCH (Yonge at Summerhill Ave.)
Beginning

Sunday, January 8th, 1956 at 7:30 p.m.

WHAT WILL THESE LECTURES CONSIDER?

- I: Do religious differences make any difference?
- II: The importance of "The Church" for the world today.
- III: The birth and nature of Christianity.
- IV: Christianity's effort at Universality, or Catholicity.
- V: The Protestant reformation: Its necessity and consequences.
- VI: Basic differences between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism — in government and worship
- VII: Basic differences between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism — in doctrine and discipline
- VIII: Special problems in intermarriage
- IX: The revival of Protestantism and its importance in the current ideological struggle.
- X: The Catholicity of Protestantism: True Catholicity and true religious liberty.

FOR WHOM ARE THESE LECTURES BY DR. SILCOX INTENDED?

- FOR PROTESTANTS who may be considering marriage with Roman Catholics, or FOR ROMAN CATHOLICS who may be considering marriage with Protestants, both of whom need to have some better understanding of the traditional Faith of the other, before making commitments they may later regret.
- FOR BOTH PROTESTANTS AND ROMAN CATHOLICS who are uneasy before the thought that they may be "religious illiterates."
- FOR ANYBODY AND EVERYBODY who is wondering if and how Christianity, reformed anew, can answer the spiritual needs of our time.

Papers Meet At Quebec

CUP At A Glance Trophy goes Queensward Varsity Ties for Second

Quebec, (CUP) — The plenary session of the 18th annual CUP conference:

- adopted by a small majority, an editorial policy strongly favoring freedom of the student press from student's council or administration control.
- moved that the Silhouette's report on freedom of the student press be included in this year's conference minutes, with the comparative listings of papers and their degree of censorship.
- gave full membership in CUP to the Purple and White of Assumption College in Windsor, bringing CUP membership up to 23.
- elected the Silhouette, of McMaster University, executive paper for 1956-57.
- elected The Varsity host paper for the 1956 conference.
- decided to continue last year's wire service plan, and mandated the Carleton to send a brief on the plan to all papers.
- moved to ignore NFCUS this year.
- became officially strictly bilingual.
- decided that delegates should fly to the CUP conference instead of travelling by train, and therefore raised its travel plan levy from 5.00 to $60 per paper.
- mandated The Varsity to collect information on the mechanics of student newspaper publishing and advertising.
- mandated the Queen's Journal to investigate the possibilities of a CUP handbook.
- started a national conference for a CUP emblem, to be run by the Manitoba, The Varsity, the McGill Daily, and the Dalhousie Gazette.
- defined the Western Gazette's position and admitted it to Jacques Bureau competition for this year.
- raised the CUP treasurer's honorarium from $25 to $30.

Quebec, (CUP) — The Queen's Journal is the 1955 winner of the Southam Trophy, emblematic of general excellence among the larger papers of the CUP. The Varsity, Southam winner in 1954, placed second in the competition for the trophy this year.

Tied for second place with The Varsity were the Silhouette, MacMaster, and the Ubysey, of the University of British Columbia. The Gateway, of the University of Alberta, placed third. The issues selected for judging by the CUP executive were the three issues following November 14th.

The winner of the Le Droit Trophy for this year was Le Carabin, of Laval University, which was judged the best French-language CUP paper.

The Silhouette of MacMaster was awarded the Bracken Trophy for excellence of editorials. The Georgian of Sir George Williams College, Montreal, won the Jacques Bureau Trophy for excellence among the CUP papers that publish weekly or less frequently.

William Thompson, Editor of the Regina Leader-Post, and a judge of the Bureau competition, had some comments to offer on the papers that were submitted to him for the competition.

Mr. Thompson said that while the general quality of the papers was good, the editors of the papers apparently lacked "punch." He said that the papers' coverage was not broad and interesting enough, and needed a greater coherence.

Mr. Thompson suggested that the editors should drive their staff harder, in order to produce better newspapers.

CUP Speeches

Canadien Lauds Canada

Quebec, (CUP) — Canada is more important today, than the Roman Empire was in the time of Augustus, said a French-Canadian editor to the delegates to the 18th annual CUP conference.

Lt. Col. Oscar Gilbert, President of Le Soleil and L'Evenement Journal, told the CUP delegates at their final banquet that he believed that Canada would fulfill Laurier's prediction that the 20th century would be Canada's.

Lt. Col. Gilbert told the university editors that they should not merely try to publish a paper worthy of their university or city, but worthy of the country as a whole.

"Canada is the most popular country in the world," said the French-Canadian publisher who has just returned from New York, where he served as Canada's delegate to the United Nations.

Lt. Col. Gilbert said that he was proud to be a member of the Canadian Press, which was "a great asset in maintaining liberty of information."

'National Paper Needed'

Quebec, (CUP)—Peter Martin, President of the national student federation addressed the plenary session of the Canadian University Press Conference on the topic of communications.

Communication was a primary problem in a country like Canada, he said. Each Canadian university knew too little about the other Canadian universities because of the great distance between them, he said.

The responsibility to overcome this difficulty, he felt, lay in part with the University papers.

Martin proposed as solution to the problem, an all-Canadian university paper to be published by the national student federation. The paper would appear monthly in four-page tabloid form.

The paper would be composed of three elements: information, education, and entertainment, as a "sugar-coating" for the previous two.

The paper, he felt, could provide information about the different universities and NFCUS activities and would promote an all-Canadian feeling.

"Wine, Women, Song —" — A Great Conference

By ROBERT BROWN

Over 60 delegates from 23 member papers of the Canadian University Press attended the annual CUP conference in Quebec from December 28 to 30—and had a marvellous time in between conference sessions inspecting the geographical and social aspects of the French-Canadian capital.

The delegates, who came from as far away as Vancouver and Halifax, represented the 23 papers of the Canadian University Press, ranging from dailies such as The Varsity to semi-monthlies—such as the Purple and White, from Assumption, the newest member of the CUP. The only university paper not represented was The Muse, of the Memorial University of Newfoundland.

The delegate from The Muse wired the conference at the last minute to report that he was snowbound.

The delegates met in the monumental Palais De Justice—or Courthouse—opposite the Chateau Frontenac in the heart of the city. Here the lofty ceiling and marble floors echoed to the speeches of the newspaper delegates.

However, the delegates looked on the lighter side of Quebec life. They enjoyed the generous hospitality of the city of Quebec, the University of Laval, and the three French-language papers of Quebec at a series of cocktail parties and banquets. They were taken on a sight-seeing tour of Quebec—Canada's oldest city. They went tobogganing on the hill immediately below the imposing Citadell that dominates Quebec. They enjoyed a demonstration of native French-Canadian dances.

And—afterwards—they met around tables in their hotel's bar to argue noisily over newspaper policy and the virtues of French Canadian women.

It was a great conference.

measure (admittedly, beautifully euphonious), and the second part a masterpiece.

Yet even if only the all-enveloping spectacle were present in this production—and there's considerably more than that—Tamburlaine would still be a fascinating piece of theatre. As it is, this traveller's tale of incredible conquests shouldn't be missed. On to the Winter Garden!

Some Statements

It's a little odd that this play, hitherto for its Broadway run, as a prime example of Canadian theatre, features the Canadian actors the way the nine-pins are featured in a bowling game. But they all make a goodly show before they go Robert Christie, as a member obviously of the old guard, William Hutt, as the rangy Tschelles who discovers himself to have something of a conscience, and William Shatner as a robustly animal Usamacasane, have the time and the talent to develop during the course of the play, and act manfully as Tamburlaine's three lieutenants. Others have occasional mighty moments, too many to discuss here.

The play is an eye-dazzling but occasionally puzzling mixture. One of the puzzles is Dr. Guthrie's insistence on imposing his theatre-as-ritual theories upon a play that seems to emphasize the panoramic. Another sharp division of the first and second halves, bottled-down version of two separate plays. The first part is a

Carnival Coming: Pray For Snow

Winter Carnival, 1956, complete with chariot races, snow house dwellers, and snow queens, comes to the campus January 19 and is expected to surpass last year's snowy success.

The second annual carnival will run for four days: Thursday and Friday here on campus, Saturday and Sunday at the Caledon Hills farm.

The main events at Caledon will be skiing and snowshoeing competitions, dancing, skating and the snow queens, said Ted Bowen, carnival chairman.

"Things will get off to a fast start at 1 p.m. Thursday, January 19 with the chariot race," said Bowen.

"The race is an old engineering standby which the artsmen are challenging now that it has become part of the Winter Carnival."

Also at one o'clock the snow-house "Eskimos" will take up residence in their "specially constructed bachelor's apartment (i.e., igloo) behind the Students' Administrative Council building.

Thursday evening at 7:30, said Bowen, the competitors for the carnival snow queen crown will begin the contest with the flapjack flipping competition. Both the chariot races and the snow queen contest are open only to interfaculty competition, he added.

At 8:30 p.m., Thursday, Engineering and Arts will contest in a basketball game in the Hart House gym. For this game, three players will be chosen from each of the four Arts colleges. Thursday's events will wind up with a dance at Hart House.

where there will be presentations to the "Eskimos" "in appreciation of the 'hardships' they have endured for the sake of the Winter Carnival," Bowen announced.

Friday night a regular Toronto-Laval game is scheduled — with Carnival extras provided. The extras will include a snow queen program, a show by the Toronto Skating Club, and a hockey match between Skule and St. Hilda's (with the Skule-men suitably handicapped), reported Bowen. There will also be presentations to the winners of the Chariot Races.

On Saturday, the carnival moves to Caledon.

Other Stories on Page 8

"Friday at one o'clock will see the Snow Queens back in action with a grand parade," said Bowen. It will begin at Vic, wind all over the campus, and end up at the snow-house,

Smith OK's Bulletin Board Frame Arrives Wednesday Completion Promised Soon

The controversial SAC bulletin board will be up by the end of this month.

This was the outlook last night following an interview of President Smith by SAC President Michael Shoemaker.

But Architecture's SAC Rep Ted Sievenpiper, who is in charge of the project, termed the whole affair "a great mix-up," and said that if the bulletin board was not up by the end of the month, "then I quit."

According to Sievenpiper, President Smith himself said the opposition of Simcoe Hall officialdom to the SAC's "radical" bulletin board was "a bit stuffy."

However, Sievenpiper said that the steel frames for the triangular six-foot structure are expected this week, and construction should be completed soon. The Board will be constructed immediately in front of the SAC building.

The bulletin board has had a long and contentious history. The red and white board had a budget of only $50, although materials for Sievenpiper's design would cost over $200, said Sievenpiper. However, the Architecture rep managed to obtain the materials for the budgeted price from firms who donated part of the cost to the SAC.

The first difficulties with Simcoe Hall were encountered when the SAC routinely asked permission to erect the structure. The administration demurred. For one thing, said Simcoe Hall officials, the "structure" would have to be approved by the property committee of the Board of Governors, which meets once a month. For another, the officials suggested that the SAC substitute for their board a regulation university bulletin board.

This suggestion was rejected by Sievenpiper, who called the university bulletin boards "fit only for funeral notices."

It was then that the SAC, after almost deciding on a radical course of action, mandated Shoemaker and Sievenpiper to go direct to the President.

"President Smith said that he would see what he could do," said Sievenpiper, "and I think it's OK now."

US Emissary To Be Present At H. H. Debate

That the 49th Parallel is a historical mistake is the resolution of the House at this Wednesday's Hart House debate.

Present as Honorary Visitor to hear his country's northern boundary discussed will be Tyler Thompson newly appointed Minister of the United States embassy in Canada.

Speaking for the Ayes are W. R. Langlois, II Trinity, and H. N. R. Jackman, III Law. Arguing against the resolution are E. Owens, II St. Mike's, and J. Pierce, I St. Mike's.

Tabloid Attacks U of T Frat Members For "Drunken, All-Night Sex Orgies"

The University of Toronto — and especially its fraternities — has received considerable mention in one of the city's tabloids, the Hush "Free Press."

In an article in the December 31 issue, entitled "Fraternity Strip — Booze, Sex, and Studies," the paper mentions "Toronto's wildest and sexiest booze parties" at fraternity houses, adding statements about "Bacchanalian" revelries by students in Toronto hotels.

In its distinctive news style, Hush says: "It is nothing unusual for the doors of these frat houses to belch forth several females at the crack of dawn to lurch into cars or stagger back to their tenderloin haunts. Are these the 'Sweethearts of Sigma Chi' and are these the fraternities which have been elevated in song and story as one of the most sought-after goals of a university student?"

Hush admits, however, that not all University students take part in these "drunken orgies," and exonerates coeds almost completely, pointing out that sorority houses have stringent restrictions and stating that coeds are rarely involved in "a frat house all-night brawl."

Hush leaves a loophole for a further story, however, with the statement that "There are times set at which guests must leave, a deadline at which each girl must be in her sorority house and, no doubt, there is the odd loophole through which one or two may crawl but, all in all, sorority houses are well in order."

Hush comments that students' only requirements at football games are the three B's — a blanket, a bottle, and a blonde. It discusses students who think the three R's mean Rye, Rum, and Revelry.

Hush supports its statements with "facts." The conduct of students, it says, "has become so infamous in Toronto that the managers of large hotels have issued instructions to ban students as guests whenever a football game is scheduled.

"It was not too long ago that the son of a prominent businessman was none-too-gently ejected from a large Toronto hotel for molesting a female guest. The only courtesy he was offered by the hotel management was ten minutes in which to put on his clothes."

Describing another alleged student bacchanal, Hush says: "Three couples occupied the bed, while two others were making good use of the heavily carpeted floor. Articles of feminine apparel hung from doorknobs, the backs of chairs, and even a dainty pair of unmentionables were being utilized to diffuse the harsh glare of a table lamp."

Hush closes with editorial prose: "It doesn't take many bad apples to spoil the whole barrel, and now is the time for those in authority to do a little meticulous sorting."

Several pages over from the fraternity story, Hush presents a full page of advertisements of such things as "hygienic products and prophylactic goods," nude studies of Hollywood models, and books of girls who "stood midway between the sexes."

Carnival Costs In Detail

These are the costs involved for the carnival weekend at Caledon Hills Farm: price of admission is $1.00; bus service is provided to and from Caledon, leaving both Saturday and Sunday, costing $1.80.

Those wishing to enter sports events (Saturday only) must hand in their sports entry in advance, said Ted Bowen, committee chairman. No further charge is required for sports competitors.

People wishing overnight accommodation must hand in accommodation forms in advance, Bowen said. He warned that only limited sleeping space was available. The cost for overnight accommodation is $1.50.

Information can be obtained any time at the graduate office, main floor Hart House, Bowen said.

Student Journalists Can Prove Brilliant

Quebec, (CIP) "Loyal opinions different from other people. applauds the existence of a Canadian University Press," said Monsignor Vandry, vice-rector of Laval University in his speech of welcome to the Canadian University Press Conference.

Dressed in the black soutane and scarlet sash of princes of the church, Monsignor Vandry spoke to the first plenary session in Quebec's "Palais de Justice."

"Some people are scandalised that young people dare to have their own papers," he said, "but we have found that they often have brilliant opinions, and

"It is not sufficient to think what you are taught in the university, you must think for yourself," he said. "Students who listen are not good enough, they must add to the thought of their teachers."

Working on a paper, he said, was "a good apprenticeship in thinking for one's self and in saying what one thought."

The power to express one's thought was very necessary, because "the world will only be saved by men who think and who know how to say what they think."

Cambridge Confidential

This Ole Town

By MICHAEL FRAYN

Exchange, Cambridge, England
What the Tourist needs to know about Cambridge. Neatly set out under eight headings.

- 1. Introduction. Cambridge is a very old city half-way between the fog of London and the Soke of Peterborough. It is very beautiful and historical, and makes television sets.
- 2. Economics. Cambridge imports raw undergraduate which it turns by degrees into raw graduate. This it exports to Dexion Slotted Angle.
- 3. What to See in Cambridge. Note at the end of King's Parade a tall stone building in ecclesiastical style with four pinnacles. This is Cambridge University. Designed by Wren, it was commissioned by Edward the Confessor as a penance for founding Oxford University in the previous year. It is interesting to note that the building is entirely maintained by serving Kingmen three-and-sixpenny dinners at five-and-six a head. King Arthur is buried here.

Note three interesting annexes of the University: Keys (pronounced Cal-us) which was designed by Ruskin as Cambridge railway station, and only turned into a college when the man who was aiming the railway at Cambridge missed by two or three miles, and hit Station Avenue instead; Trinity, popularly supposed to be a continuation school for Eton but actually the summer residence of the ex-Mayor of Blackpool (Queen Elizabeth had insomnia here); and John's, which is so-called because Jonathan Miller lives there.

4. The University. The University is a city in itself. It has an amateur theatre, an amateur newspaper, and a little amateur plumbing. Women were recently admitted into the University, and it has been suggested that gas and running water should be admitted, too.

University life is very free. The broken glass which may be seen along the top of some of the college walls is simply the result of many centuries of riotous undergraduate parties, and college gates are shut at ten just so that the Porters will have something to do, opening and shutting them for the next two hours. Otherwise they might get bored and break bottles, too, which would mean even more broken glass, and more cut hands and torn gowns for night-climbers. The University thinks of these things.

5. Cultural Heritage. Cambridge has no literary figures, but has Robert Brooke instead. Unless you count Shakespeare, who was Marlowe. Shakespeare and Marlowe had a drunken brawl in the Soup Kitchen, as a result of which Shakespeare was buried in Poet's Corner, and Marlowe was interred in a rubbish-heap behind Corpus. The Marlowe Society names no names, but everyone knows it's really Peter Woodthorpe.

6. Local Superstitions. There is no point in working in the first two terms of the year. You can get into the Foreign Office with a third in Modern Languages. Depth of soul is in inverse proportion to width of trousers. You can get a good cheap meal somewhere, CICCUC and Mau-Mau are synonymous.

7. Folklore. The little people still come and go unhindered through the old, low archways of Cambridge. The big people bang their heads.

8. Statistics. If all the coffee drunk by Cambridge students per annum were poured into the Cam, it would poison 758 fish. Or, to put it more clearly still, if all the manual labour spent on manipulating Cambridge espresso machines were spent on pushing a traction-engine along a level road, it could be pushed from Doncaster to a point 482 yards outside Doncaster.

And if all the people who had written humorous guides to Cambridge were suspended by thumbscrews from the ceiling of the Senate House, they could be made to feel very sorry for what they had done.

Former UofT Anthropol Prof Dies After Long Illness

Dr. George Gordon Brown died of a heart attack on Sunday morning, December 18, after a long and intermittent illness. He was 59, and had been for 10 years a professor in the Department of Anthropology here.

During his career, Dr. Brown worked with or studied under many of the outstanding anthropologists of his day. After serving in the First War, he graduated from Victoria College and took graduate work here, in Chicago and at the London School of Economics.

For the next ten years, Dr. Brown studied primitive tribes: the Swahili tribes of Tanganyika, and the natives of American Samoa. He returned to this continent, to Temple University in Philadelphia, near the end of the depression, and also served as director of the Japanese Relocation Project in Arizona before coming to the staff of Toronto in 1946.

Dr. Brown had an international reputation for his work in the field. He was as well one of the excellent teachers here. Students were attracted to him by his quick wit, his ability, and his interest in them. Graduates and undergraduates found their work with this exceptional man unusually stimulating. Many of them remained close friends of Dr. Brown until his death.

His friends remember Dr. Brown for his wide interests, his academic ability, and for his personal qualities: he hated cruelty, felt freedom was necessary to the human spirit, had a strong sense of the absurd, and tried to build his relationships with others on love.

He leaves his wife, Elizabeth Fisher Brown, also an anthropologist, and two sons, Jeremy and George.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

The University of Toronto Blues are still looking for their first win of this young basketball season. For three-quarters of the ball game Saturday evening it looked as if they were headed for their first taste of victory as John McManus' charges played their best basketball of the season, but they wilted badly in the final ten minutes to give Detroit Tech a 101-84 victory.

Tech guard Mike Sica went into the Hart House record book, as the husky guard, displaying an automatic set shot, threw in 43 points. The Blues' zone defence managed to bottle up all the rest of the Tech squad but Sica, who couldn't miss a set all evening. For the Blues, Leo Madden, John Sheppard and Pete Potter netted 16 apiece.

A standing room only crowd of 1200 saw the Blues charge into an early 6-0 lead but it didn't take Sica and company long to erase that lead and on the power of his set shot move out in front 10-6. From this point on both teams, playing exceptionally good basketball, traded scores for most of the half. Varsity in particular appeared very sharp and were scoring most of their attempted field goals. The Blues were also holding their own under the backboard, grabbing more than their share of rebounds. Then, with two minutes to go in the half, the Blues faded badly, allowing Tech to move into a 49-40 lead.

Toronto finally awoke from their doldrums a few minutes after the second period began, just in time to stop Detroit from adding to their lead which had already reached an alarming nine points. Pete Potter set the stage when he sank a beautiful floating lay up. A set shot by Leo Madden and three quick baskets by Ruby Richman without a Tech response tied the score at 60-60. Varsity moved out to a 61-60 lead when

Richman was fouled a few minutes later, and sunk one of his two foul shots. At this point the Blues were playing their best ball of the season.

The ceiling fell in a few minutes later when Sica threw in three fast baskets that took the heart out of Varsity. From here on Tech outplayed Toronto in every department. Detroit hit the century mark after the game was over when Jesse Cokely was fouled on the last play of the game. He sank both foul throws as Detroit walked off the court with Sica on their shoulders and a 101-84 victory tucked under their belts.

Sica has the nicest set shot these eyes have seen in a long time. Like an automaton he couldn't miss sending the ball through the twine all evening. He was also quite adept at defence.

breaking up a number of Toronto plays in the final ten minutes. Another Detroit player who amazed the crowd was Don Owens. The slender Owens jumped four feet off the floor on numerous occasions. Twice he leaped high in the air to stop shots before they could enter the basket. But his action went unrewarded in these cases as the referee on both occasions called automatic baskets. Besides Sica's 43, Bob Locher had 13, Mike Tatsak 11 and Art Fontana 10 for Tech.

For 30 out of the 40 minutes the Blues played good clean basketball, passing sharply and throwing in over 50% of their shots. Their foul shooting was excellent, with Peter Potter hitting eight for eight from the free throw line. Other Blue scorers to hit the double figures were Ruby Richman with 14 and John Dacysyn with ten.

Forestry Winners 41-32 Taylor Stars For Losers

Forestry's Fuzz Taylor pumped home a new high for the infant basketball season, but it still wasn't enough as his Woodchoppers dropped a 41-32 decision to the strongest looking Architecture hoop squad in several seasons. Taylor hit for 20 points which adds up to some pretty hot shooting in the abbreviated intramural league games. Gary Sigel and Bogu Pogorzelski led the Architects with 14 points apiece and their team was never headed. They owned a 29-18 lead at the half and coasted the rest of the way.

In the second basketball game of the day, Victoria IIIs claimed a 34-31 victory from University College II's. Chuck Scidial and Tom Pocklington potted 10 each for the scarlet and gold, while Shoorn, Eastman and Tescher added six points each.

In hockey last week, junior V-2 and Pre-Meds battled to a 2-2 draw. Julian Porter and Johns scored for "le Rouge et Or" while Waite and Taylor clicked for the doctors.

The second hockey game saw Dentistry A defeating Victoria IIIs 2-1. Shaw and Fawcett were the marksmen for Dents while Barry Wansborough netted the lone Victoria counter.

Minor league basketball action on Friday saw I Engineering Physics whip I Chemical A by a 35-17 count.

Shades of October 29th! Any of you who were fortunate enough to see the never-to-be-forgotten Queen's-Varsity game in Kingston New Year's Eve festivities to be able to watch the Rose Bowl game finishes. Up in Gael town there was less than a minute remaining in the game when Jocko Thompson calmly kicked his first field goal of the year to give Frank Tindall's Queensmen an 11-10 victory over the Blues. And, of course, it was that three-pointer that in a playoff position and paved the way for the Gael's stunning 18-0 win over Toronto in the post-season playoffs, and with the victory went the Yates Cup, now resting in Kingston for the first time in a century. Down in Pasadena the story was much the same, but far more dramatic. Michigan State had possession of the ball on the 20 yard line of UCLA with the clock reading seven seconds to play. Since the single point is non-existent in American football, the Spartan quarterback had a tough decision to make. He could call a long pass play or try for the almost impossible (except in Cleveland)—a field goal. 100,000 fans in the Bowl and millions more in front of their TV sets sat tensely on the edge of their seats as Michigan State lined up in field goal formation. End Dick Kaiser hooped the ball from the thirty-one and it split the uprights with five or six yards to spare. For those of you who are unfamiliar with American rules, the goalposts are not on the goal-line but at the extreme end of the ten yard end zone. So Kaiser's kick and it was also his first field goal of the year. Travelled at least forty-one yards. For the Spartans it was a great victory and for the UCLA Bruins, it was a heartbreaking defeat. They have failed to emerge victorious in any of their four visits to the Rose Bowl.

The Tournament of Roses Parade, at the cost of more than $1 million, and the spectacular half-time extravaganza at the Rose Bowl were two examples of the "big-business" scale upon which U.S. college football operates. Certainly a far cry from the Homecoming Parades and half-time band displays of Canadian football. It is obvious that finances would not permit anything here to even come close to the Parade of the Roses, but there is no reason whatsoever why some student organization at this University could not undertake to produce a half-time display along the same line. An effort was made to do this here a few years ago, but it amounted to a season's effort and that was it. All it would take would be a bit of ingenuity and a few hours of preparation. United States citizens watching the magnificent formation of the bands as the National Anthem was played certainly must have been proud, and it set us to thinking that it is possible there it is possible here.

Just as impressive was the "Uclarama" display put on by the Bruin rooters between the halves. If this past season is any indication, students at Canadian universities who attend football games not to watch the game usually engage themselves in the consumption of large quantities of extra-sensory refreshments. Perhaps if they had a piece of cardboard and some instructions to help the problem of drinking at games might be partially solved.

It is with a bit of embarrassment that the sports department of the Varsity makes an admission. Due to a mix-up in assignments last week, we did not have a reporter at the hockey game between the Whites and Lyndhurst Motors on Saturday night. On reporter had an unexpected date, and the Sports Editor, at game time, was standing in rather chilly weather some twenty miles from Toronto on the Queen Elizabeth Way wondering how a 1938 Dodge could possibly freeze up after devouring $12 worth of anti-freeze. However, we are able to bring you some brief reports of the game—the Whites lost 1-0 on a rather flukey goal and a Lyndhurst player was handed a match misconduct after he: (1) incurred a minor penalty (2) incurred a major penalty (3) unsuccessfully shot the puck at the referee (4) threatened to chop off the referee's head with his stick. Sounds like fun. Damn that car anyway!

Looking about . . . Back to the Rose Bowl game for a minute . . . in the Uclarama display, one character depicted was named Wilson and had a striking resemblance to the Sports Editor ex officio of the Varsity . . . a check with John Mackenzie indicated no relationship . . . On Tuesday January 10th we have the first event of the University Track Meets . . . Eligibility forms available in the Intramural Office in Hart House.

Basketball Seconds Beaten West End On Top 80-44

The Stulac brothers, George, Joe, and John and their West End Y Seniors invaded Hart House Saturday night and walked home with a 80-44 lazing of the University of Toronto Intermediates.

From the start it was evident that the Y team had too much class for Dall White's crew. Their shooting was next to spectacular and when they did miss George Stulac was always under the basket to dump in the rebound. Bill Lawson was top man for the Y with 20 points while John Woplen threw in 18, and George Stulac had 13. Stulac didn't shoot often, but when he did he rarely missed.

Footballer Harry Wilson, tossing in some nice hooks, was the Whites' top man with seven points. Barry Stroud also had seven for the Intermediates. Four players, Gerry Taube, Ed Brzina, Daye Parker and Rollt

Due to the fact that some of our reporters have decided to really get down to it this term, the Sports department of the Varsity finds itself with a few openings for interested persons. If we are able to get three applications for this ad, only one night's work a week will be requested. Hockey and basketball reporters are especially badly needed. All present members of the staff are asked to note that there will be a brief meeting today at 1:15 in Varsity office. This includes Howie Mandell, Anne Englands and John Vojten.

Senior Swimmers Edge Frosh McCulloch, Walbank Standouts

A strong Varsity Freshmen Swim team almost pulled off a big upset in last Saturday's Athletic Night swimming meet, when they were just edged out by the Senior team 43-41. The fine frosh performance is an indication that Toronto should be a power in intercollegiate swimming for the next few years.

Points were awarded on a 5-3-1 basis—five points for a first place finish, three for a second, and one for a third. Throughout the meet, the lead changed hands several times before the seniors emerged with their two point margin of victory.

Individual standouts were Senior Doug McCulloch who won two events and placed second in another while Freshman Ron Walbank captured two events. McCulloch placed first in both the 220 and the 440 yard Freestyle events. He copped a second in the 200 yard individual medley behind teammate Paul Richards. Walbank took both the 50 and the 100 yard Freestyle events.

Bob Berlette of the Frosh finished second behind McCulloch in the 220 Freestyle, with Valdo Pousa coming in second in the 440 Freestyle.

Senior Bruce Sonley won the diving competition, with Olen Tucker runner-up. John Ridpath triumphed in the 200 yard Backstroke and Senior Doug Taylor captured the 200 yard Breast Stroke. Teammate John Gossage was right behind him in second position. The Frosh won the 300 yard Medley Relay.

The Junior Intramural Boxing Finals were also held Saturday night. In the night's first bout, J. Fisher of Architecture decisively G. Takahashi of Pre-meds in a 130 lb. clash. In a 140 lb. set-to, Trinity's M. Wade copped the verdict over A. Vachon of Dents. In a battle of engineers, V. Spring took a 145 lb. decision win over W. Taylor. Trinity's M. Ficker edged out Vic's J. Heighton in 150 lb. action.

F. Enlay of SPS was the only fighter on the card who managed to end a brawl before the time limit, winning by a TKO over St. Mike's E. Reidy in a 165 lb. bout.

The last two fights saw Skule's C. Bell decisively J. P. Morgan of Dents in a 175 lb. fixture and St. Mike's M. Callaghan winning by a decision over Trinity's D. Wilbur in an exhibition bout.

on the sideline

By FLO MIDDLETON

After a series of successful practices held last term, Mickey Barnett, the coach of the University of Toronto's women's Intercollegiate basketball team has, after a series of cuts, arrived at the second last cut. By the end of the week, we shall know the twelve outstanding girls who have made the intercollegiate squad. These twelve "b-hall" stars will travel to Kingston at the end of February to capture the Bronze Baby, or at least we hope that they will.

On Saturday morning, the "Grads" played the team that eventually will, after the last cut, be the Blues. The Grads downed the future Blues 51-32; however, this score is hardly any indication of the coming season. Considering the fact that the girls in most cases had never played together before and that they were under considerable tension, the team played quite well. Toronto's chances of capturing the Bronze Baby are excellent.

The girls that are still playing for the Blues are: Marilyn Charters, Sylvia Kerr, Joy Taylor, Judy Wicks, Pru Smith, Chris Graham, Jill Segond, Barbara Campbell, Lillian Bobson, Pam Miles, Meredith Robinson, Lou Martin, Pat Davis, Audrey Lamb, Sylvia Brydon, Gwen Thom and Edith Penhorwood.

The practices held last term were excellent. The attendance every Thursday and Tuesday evening averaged forty, which is higher than it has been for several years. Because of the large attendance, the competition has been much keener.

Archers — do not forget that practices are being held every day this week between 1 and 2 at the Drill Hall. These practices are for all girls of the student body who are at all interested in inter-collegiate or intercollegiate competition.

let's lay our own

Two suggestions for a national Canadian student newspaper have recently been made.

The first comes from the National President of NFCUS. In a speech to a conference of student editors this Christmas, he said that he thought a NFCUS-published, four-page monthly tabloid would fulfill a need for communication between Canadian Universities.

The president's proposed paper would contain "information, entertainment and education" to be gathered, he imagined, from the different campuses. This plan indicates only small understanding of the nature of a NEWSpaper.

A national student newspaper is perhaps a remote possibility, and a monthly NFCUS publication is a horrible reality, but a NFCUS-published monthly tabloid is an inconceivable bastardization.

What "information" could be used in such a "newspaper." Any actual news would be weeks old and would have appeared previously in individual campus newspapers. Other information might be in the nature of magazine features — timeless stories about aspects of different universities. These stories are interesting, but can also be looked after by individual campus papers and hardly are sufficient for the meat of a newspaper.

The "entertainment" was planned as a sugar-coating for the "education" to be included. This kind of humorous writing is the most difficult, and requires an extremely deft touch.

It is rather unlikely that such a publication — a side-line activity of the federation — would have such a writer of its own as most campus papers cannot find enough of their own.

The last category, "education," we are greatly afraid would degenerate into a convenient means for NFCUS to disseminate its own propaganda. The complaints from Ottawa about an unfavorable press for NFCUS might lead us to believe that our national federation would like to have a "party press."

Even if this education did not become propaganda, there is the difficulty of finding representative "all-Canadian" student opinion, or someone competent to expound "Canadianism."

The second suggestion came up at the Canadian University Press conference. The proposal was that the student editors during the conference should put out a combined-effort paper to be distributed to all students across Canada. This proposal seems to us the only feasible way of having an all-Canadian paper at present.

It would avoid the danger of a single and biased viewpoint because of the contributions of a representative numbers of editors from the whole country, and would find sufficient material in the conference itself and discussions of current controversies.

Unfortunately this suggestion was accepted only in principle at the conference, due largely it seems to inertia. Nevertheless, the time is right, and if we of the press are not prepared to lay our own eggs, we may find that someone else has left an egg in our nest.

It's Economics That Determines

Our Present Society

"Economics determines the way in which we live." This is the bald proposition of the writer of this article, a student in the fourth year of an economics course at this University. He maintains that politics, ethics, religion, and culture are just a sociological superstructure of our society, of which economic forces form the base.

Karl Marx, the founding saint of international Communism, was perhaps the first notable theoretician to firmly adopt "Economic Determinism." Most of Marx's theories have since been relegated to the scrap-heap by logically-minded Western intellectuals, but Marx's theory of Economic Determinism still retains enough of its validity to be frightening to most people.

Few college students, or anyone else, for that matter, would not be surprised if they were told that they lived in a world whose institutions, laws, ethics, religions, and customs were shaped for the most part by economic forces; and yet this is obviously the case.

The society we live in has been shaped to a greater degree by profit, rather than perception; by machines, rather than men; by self-love rather than saints. The relations between men in the everyday economic world are those which determine their character, views, and emotions. The society of today is founded on a base of economic materialism, and it is this base that determines the superstructure of politics, sociology, religion, culture and philosophy.

RELIGION

The influence of economic forces on religion cannot be doubted. To take what is perhaps the most notable example, the Protestant Reformation was greatly influenced by the rising "Commercialism" which had just begun in Europe.

At the time of the Reformation, Catholicism was still living in an earlier medieval age. Its precepts were directed in the main towards the next life, not the present; it was opposed, to usury, an essential in any developing economy; and it was dedicated to the idea of a "just" price and a "fair" return, instead of leaving these matters to the businessmen of the day.

But there were rising new forces in Europe to which these Catholic ideas were distasteful. New methods of commerce and of industry were being invented; the industrial revolution was being pressed by the earlier "Commercial" revolution. An expanding commerce and a developing industry could not stand the restraints of Catholicism and therefore the "Protestant ethic" was developed which was more favourable to these developments.

Even today, the remains of this revolt can be seen in the fact that the Protestant countries of the world are — on the whole — distinctly more prosperous than the Catholic countries.

POLITICS

The influence of economics on politics can hardly be overstated. Today, the world is divided into two great camps, whose differences lie in the different styles of economic organization that they have adopted. In Canada, the existence of one party — the CCF — depends upon one economic strata of society and its efforts to impose its will upon others. The other political parties may be viewed as the political arms of the remaining strata, attempting to perpetuate economic relationships as they presently exist.

And the rise of Russia and the United States to the pre-eminent positions that they occupy in the world has not come about because of the skills of their diplomats, or the force of their ideas — it has been caused by their economic strength.

CULTURE

Again, culture is another example of the all-pervading economic forces of today's society. The modern trend towards the abstract is caused by the economic developments that have reduced man to a minute cog in a vast and complex mechanism. Artists now express their own bewilderment, fears, and psychoses; before, they attempted to communicate definite impressions of the world around them, and in which they had a deep interest.

In Canada, the development in Kitimat and in Ungava certainly had a far greater effect on the success of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival than Tom Patterson. Men with ideals have always been present in Canada; but it was not until the country had achieved a certain degree of economic prosperity and security that these ideals could be realized.

SOCIOLOGY

The way people feel about events and things, the way they react to certain stimuli are determined by the economic position they occupy, and by the economic relationships which exist between them and the rest of society.

The millionaire has one concept of society; the storekeeper another, and the worker another. These concepts are shaped by their own economic environment. They feel the way they do about tax laws, socialism, markets, and art because of their position. They are pawns in the conflict of predominantly economic forces.

EDUCATION

In the eighteenth and nineteenth century, when the wealth and influence of society was concentrated in a few hands, the universities of the day were mainly concerned with the "playthings" of the leisure, wealthy classes, such as philosophy, languages (especially dead ones), religion, and economics. But the wealth and influence of these leisure classes has now passed into the hands of more practically-minded businessmen, and the masses of people in general.

As a result, the universities are coming to concern themselves with such subjects as engineering, business administration, journalism, agriculture, forestry, etc. The humanities are on the decline, because their sponsoring class in society has also declined. The passing of power into the hands of the masses from the elite is responsible also for the lowering of standards at these institutions.

TO SUM UP

Many more examples could be found in every field of human endeavour to illustrate the truth that economics is the prime determining factor in today's society, and the desire to "get ahead" — economically — the prime motivating force of the human race.

The realization of this fact — which is distasteful to most people — would greatly aid in the understanding of the problem and complexities of today's world. Without this realization, the task of comprehending the world in which we live becomes hopeless.

What Price A Pearl?

The Editor, The Varsity:

In your Christmas edition you criticized the Christmas Belongs to Christ campaign for trying to fight the commercialism which has surrounded Christmas with commercial techniques and thus commercializing the real significance of Christmas. To fight commercialism was not, I think, the raison d'être of the campaign. It was rather to remind professing Christians that lost within the glittering wrappings and ribbons of Christmas tradition was a precious gift of a "pearl of great price." The gift which has either to be gratefully and responsibly accepted or else honestly rejected as a worthless bauble and the trimmings of the "cool Yule" kept as the highlight of the occasion.

What is this detested commercialism anyway? It seems the use, to increase sales, of the mass media to subtly pressure the individual to conform to many trivial mores of society. A good example—the clever ad, "Every well-dressed man wears a hat." If the campaign only forced individuals to fulfill one more, to them meaningless, social convention, to "Go to Church on Christmas," your criticism is justified. One more irrelevance was added to the observance of Christ's birth.

But is this really the reason why the campaign was rejected? Or has the mention of Christ, Christianity and religion become so odious and embarrassing to us that the mass media must not mention them?

Have we all, surrounded by the gaudy and torn wrappings of our life, lost understanding of and desire for the "pearl of great price"?

Bianca And The Board

"KISS ME KATE," this year's UC musical, is now well under way in rehearsal, after its last auditions. Auditioning here is Annette Oelbaum, now given the role of Lois Lane (i.e., Bianca). The selection committee (l. to r.) consists of director Leon Major, music director Ross Kilpatrick, and producer Walter Gonet, with Glenys Rees at the piano. The musical goes on at Hart House Theatre from February 13 to 18.

[art, music and drama] the ballet's back

The time has come at last when Canada can fill the Royal Alexandra four weeks running with its own theatrical achievements. Stratford's Tamburlaine the Great is now in its second week, and next week the National Ballet of Canada opens its third touring season.

Not only are we at last competing with American imports on the Canadian market, but we are also competing on the American market with both these products, Tamburlaine the Great, as everybody knows is going to Broadway's Winter Garden, and the National Ballet Company on Feb. 17 and 18 is booked into the New York Brooklyn Academy on the other side of the river.

Of interest are the three new works in the repertoire of the company, two of which have been seen before in Toronto. They are Dark Elegies, an Anthony Tudor ballet which Miss Franca learned when associated with the Sadler's Wells Ballet Company. The Lady From the Sea with choreography by a Montreal dance teacher, Elizabeth Leese, and the full-length, four-act version of The Nutcracker. Other works to be performed are: Gala Performance, Offenbach in the Underworld, Les Sylphides, Copelia, Swan Lake, Lilac Garden, Giselle pas de deux.

surveying minds

The Unseen City, the CBC's second Exploring Minds programme of the new year, was original and interesting, especially to Torontonians. Jacqueline Tyrwhitt of the Harvard Graduate School of Design, in cooperation with the U of T Communications group presented the results of a survey given students at the Ryerson Institute of Technology in an attempt to discover how much of their surroundings they absorbed.

The findings were accompanied by excellent TV shots of the Bond Street area, shots drawing the audience's attention to the many architectural interests in a district that the students were prepared to dismiss as a slum section.

The survey results also indicate that students (and who should be more perceptive?) do not take note of street furniture mailboxes, telephone booths hydrants — and are surprisingly oblivious to billboard and neon advertising. But the most discouraging result, from a town planner's point of view, is that the students believe the district around Ryerson to be a down-and-out one, and consequently that is what they saw.

This viewer got the impression that Miss Tyrwhitt's lively interest in town planning would survive such a discouraging indication of attitude, and became quite interested in her own planner's lingo. For instance, what, pray, is "urban crystallization"?

Premiere For UC Guild?

The UC Players' Guild this week enters a particularly little-known part of the misty world of Tennessee Williams — in fact, as far as the director can discover, nobody except the playwright has ever been there before. Curt Reis's production of Purification, to be presented at the Women's Union Theatre this Wednesday, is believed to be the first staging of the play, amateur or professional.

Described as a play of "emotional symbolism," Purification is not a typical Williams product. Williams is exploring a (to him) familiar theme — love, hate, fratricide — but the treatment is by no means familiar. Like that of Camino Real, Hart House Theatre's highly successful autumn production, the setting is localized, yet universal in its implications. The ranchers of the play, faced with a devastating drought, inhabit a universal world of fantasy and truth.

The staging of the play is in the hands of UC's versatile director, Curt Reis, who at Ottawa last year scooped the pool of the Inter-Varsity Drama League with his This Earth Is Ours, capturing the possible maximum of four trophies.

Music has been specially composed for the production, by another familiar campus figure, Milton Barnes, composer of interpretive scores for such successes as Miss Julie and King Lear, will try to capture the strange and lyric undertones of the Williams play.

Players' Guild members, as usual, are admitted free to the production — others are welcome, on payment of a small admission charge — for a supposed world premiere, purely nominal.

The production goes on to the University of Toronto Drama Committee Festival this Saturday at Hart House Theatre. A series of one-act plays will be presented Friday and Saturday evenings by the college drama groups. David Greene, former British actor and now a director of the CBC, will adjudicate.

mozart, sir ernest, and artur rubinstein

The question which has consistently plagued my mind during many seasons of attending Toronto Symphony orchestra concerts is strangely not a musical one at all, but one peculiarly psychological: is it possible for a towering, ponderous individual to conduct Mozart in full view of an audience? It is true, surely, that the power of suggestion is enormously potent to the human imagination: the boudoir door, blown open in the fierceness of a storm, suggests the possibility of an intruder; the elephant frolicking among the elephants suggests chaos. Why then should it not be reasonable to think that an individual whose very essence suggests imposing solidity ought to be (from the point of view of the audience) psychologically black-listed from mounting the podium in defence of Mozart? . . . for Elgar, yes, for Wagner and Beethoven at their gloriously bombastic best, yes; for the Bachian and Handelian choruses, yes; but for Mozart, no; the sight is too much at variance with the musical mood.

At any rate, I was led to these "wandering" contemplations while listening last week to Sir Ernest McMillan's directing of the G Minor Symphony of Mozart. With Artur Rubinstein as guest soloist performing two piano works in splendid fashion, the evening might have been one of those once-in-a-lifetime performances. Mr. Rubinstein did his part eminently. But unhappily, every conductor has his limitations and Sir Ernest's is Mozart.

I had the feeling during the Andante and throughout the minuet and trio of the Mozart, that Sir Ernest could not find enough to do; that his arms were circulating in a series of meaningless half-felt gyrations in time to the pleasant music while the orchestra played sublimely on, the players scarcely concerned at all that he was in front of them. In the livelier first and final movements, where a greater degree of rhythmic force is apparent, both orchestra and conductor seemed to do better.

From the tips of Artur Rubinstein's glistening patent leather shoes to the uppermost wisps of fuzzy white hair, he is a showman — last week, a magnificent showman. His playing of the first movement of the A Major Piano Concerto by Mozart might have been epochal had the orchestra done as well. It was executed with flawless precision, flawless phrasing. But the weakness of an orchestra in due need of a thorough overhaul so far as its woodwind and brass sections are concerned relegated the performance to something less than great. One cannot feel musically at ease when, at any moment, a flute may fail to come through with its melodic line, or a brass may screech out some heathen sound. It seemed that the orchestra had not been properly rehearsed. The second movement of the concerto was handled with utmost delicacy by Mr. Rubinstein; while the third was, if anything, played too vigorously. He had what was to me, an unpleasant manner of rushing the main theme and then of relaxing into the original tempo.

After the intermission, Mr. Rubinstein returned to the stage to play the fabulously technical Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini by Rachmaninoff perhaps a sorry choice after a beginning which promised to be all Mozart. Nevertheless, Mr. Rubinstein's incomparable technique, combined with a detached wizardry at concert audience made the work, in part, a rare treat.

There are those, I know, who will not agree that gymnastics have any place in musical performance, but I am not this opinion; if the sort of pyrotechnics Mr. Rubinstein displayed in the Rachmaninoff the other evening are done as well as Mr. Rubinstein did them, I say give us such a treat a little more often, if only for the sake of rousing Toronto audiences to excitement about music. It is rare at a TSO concert to see a guest artist called back six or seven times. Something must have been done for music, however banal our musical puritans may think the means.

west coast artists at hart house

Well placed in a dominant position at the end of the Hart House Gallery is a painting by the West Coast artist Orville Norman Fisher. Blacks, purples, pale yellows and a clear boldly marked style emphasize a good composition of grim totem faces. The picture is one of the current exhibit (from January 6 to 13) in the Hart House Art Gallery called "Contemporary West Coast Art."

In a variety of media and a great variety of styles, totems, birds, forests and the B.C. landscape have been painted many times. Fred Amess has a realistic watercolour of totem poles (he is obviously in debt to Emily Carr for the background trees) while beside it hangs a very decorative collection of seeds and pods with marked totem characteristics by J. L. Shadbolt. Franciose Andre uses the bird in a rough tempera on wrinkled paper, with a sphinx-like being to produce a legendary, metaphysical quality. Charles Stegeman has in the exhibit transformed what must be a familiar West Coast sight — a wrecked dinghy into a fairy tale in Lost City, while Andre has a fantastic forest, mysteriously realistic.

Other artists have also used the landscapes or legends of the West Coast. In Bruce Boyd's Beach at Evening the result is not atmospheric as in Stegeman and Andre, but the still recognizable stumps have become a very pleasing composition of twisting forms in pastel colours. A story that Molly Bobak's picture Gulf Island West-Coaster, also looking at the exhibit, as "What 'looked just it."

Some artists in the exhibition did not use these West Coast motifs, however. W. Herbert Gurey's Mediterranean City, garish but pleasing, is the most obvious example. There are two still lifes by R. A. Kelly composed of dark massy forms. (His July looks more like February.)

Hilda MacLeod had a feminine but pleasing still life, and Joan Billant shows a portrait, Seated Figure in Red Sweater — a very complete affair.

The pictures are hung, as usual in the Hart House Gallery, so that the pictures of each artist are scattered throughout the show. This may be confusing in some exhibits, but here it enables the viewer to see that the dominant characteristic of the show is this fact that most of the artists have drawn subjects or incentive from West Coast matter.

These artists are not closely banded as were the "Group of Seven," but like them they are "Canadian" artists. There will never be a national school of art in Canada because the country includes too many types of landscape and too many incipient cultures. What Canada will develop, I think, are groups of artists, who, like these West Coast artists, draw their inspiration from their part of the country to express themselves through modern painting techniques and movements.

IN THE PRINT ROOM

A collection of prints by Frederick B. Taylor R.C.A. Most of the prints are produced by a number of methods, and show the artist as merely a photographer with an excellent sense of composition, a mania for detail, and the draughtsmanship to produce this detail. However, when colour is used it is pleasing — mainly reds, and probably a reaction against the black and white of most of his prints. In a few cases where Mr. Taylor has tried to convey some message: simplicity in Boy's Head; social criticism in Harvest of Mummy; or drama in Welder; the result seemed to me to be more successful.

Federal Bursaries Sought By NFCUS Present Brief Next Parliament Session

A plan for federal bursaries to Canadian students will be introduced during the next session of Parliament, the executive of the National Federation announced following their holiday conference.

A. H. Hollingworth, Liberal member of the Commons for Toronto York Centre, has agreed to sponsor the bill at the next session, opening Jan. 10, the news release said. The private bill would call for $5,500,000 to be distributed through 500 bursaries of varying amounts to first-year students.

The introduction of the bursaries bill follows work of the NFCUS Scholarship campaign, headed by Harry Arthur of the University of Toronto.

Other business arising from the executive conference was as follows:

The executive decided that Canadian Campus, the federation's national student magazine, would be published again this year. It asked for contributions from any Canadian students in such fields as: short stories, articles (on sports, student government), humour, poetry and verse, individual photographs, cartoons. Payment upon publication will range from $5 to $50 depending on type and calibre of material. Deadline is Jan. 31.

Ten Canadians were appointed as overseas commissioners for the federation. They will represent Canada at student conferences in Europe this winter.

Next year's national NFCUS conference will be held at Sir George Williams' College in Montreal.

UofT Professor at Institute Talks on Evolution of Cells

Dr. Kenneth C. Fisher, president of the Royal Canadian Institute, and associate professor of Animal Physiology at Toronto, presented his views on "Why Animals Behave" in a speech to the RCI at Convocation Hall Saturday night.

The differences between the enormous number of organisms on the earth are actually due to the different characteristics of the cells which compose them, he said.

But these differences cannot be seen under a microscope, he emphasized, for they are essentially chemical and confined to the protein art of the living stuff.

Dr. Fisher discussed some of the processes of evolution: "As the first living creatures began to grow larger through evolution by being composed of a number of cells rather than consisting of only a single cell, it became necessary for the cells in a single being to differentiate; that is, for some to become especially sensitive to light, other adept at catching and digesting food, other proficient at producing motion, and so on."

He concluded by saying that by studying animal behavior one can find out something about the operation of the nervous system.

Wolfville, Nova Scotia: The annual penny parade of Acadia University this year should supply a new, super quality record player for the Students' Union, the Athenaeum announces. Other years the parade has supplied a dining room record player, tables for formals, and band uniforms.

Although once very popular, the Penny Parade, in the last few years, has been subject to considerable criticism, the Athenaeum comments.

Guelph: Students at the Ontario Agricultural College may have to do a little walking on Sundays if Guelph's present plans keep up. The Guelph Transportation Commission had decided to discontinue Sunday bus service after 4:00 p.m. Because of the limited number of taxis, OAC students feel their 9 o'clocks, a Sunday evening program, may be threatened.

Halifax: "The biggest budget ever" has been presented and accepted by the Student Council of Dalhousie University. The budget, of $27,500, is $3,000 bigger than last year's and allows for a surplus of $600.

Sackville, Nova Scotia: Unless the Student Discount Service comes into practise, Mount Allison should withdraw from NFCUS. This was the suggestion of the Editors of the Argosy, student newspaper at Mount Allison university. They say that NFCUS has had good plans before, but they have come to nothing concrete.

They also say that in Peter Martin, NFCUS has a good man — but that he can't do the job alone. Other NFCUS national leaders do not command our respect, neither in their personalities, nor in their intelligence, the Editorial states.

Montreal: Professors not only at American universities, but also at Canadian ones, are charged with contempt of the United States Senate.

Dr. Leon Kamin, formerly a professor at McGill, and now in the department of psychology at Queen's, is on trial in Boston, Massachusetts after refusing to answer a question of the Senate Investigating Committee.

Dr. Kamin received his doctorate at Harvard, in Cambridge Massachusetts.

Montreal: A professional director will be hired for the McGill Red and White Revue this year. An experienced Director is a necessity, the McGill student council decided but turned down the suggestion of a professional script writer.

Ardmore, Pennsylvania: Bryn Mawr College was the host of the regional WUS conference held in October in the eastern states. Highlight of the conference was a speech attempting to define the role of the university community in world affairs.

Kingston: Night or day, dark or light, the Queen's Journal goes to press! Despite no lights because of a burnt out cable recently the Journal staff put out their paper. Candles and touch typists saved the day.

Keen-nosed Sleuths Seek, Sniff Out Straying Trophy

By BILL SMYTH

The aura of mystery surrounding the Varsity's late, lamented Southam Trophy was swept away last night with the release of the following information by staffer Ianatus Gweek:

The CUP trophy disappeared last March under sinister circumstances, following a Varsity party at a Huron street fraternity.

In the middle of last term, staffers realized the trophy was missing, and sent Gweek, staff sleuth, to investigate.

Gweek cleverly discovered the frat was no longer there. He asked a present resident of the house if he had seen the trophy.

"Was it about this big?" the fellow replied, spreading his hands.

"Yes," said Gweek keenly.

"Haven't seen it."

He directed our boy sleuth to the new Harbord St. address of the fraternity, but the trophy was not to be found.

"Isn't it a bugger," said Gweek.

Gweek marched forth again, this time with SAC secretary-treasurer E. A. MacDonald, to the Huron St. address.

"Are you sure you haven't seen the trophy?" Gweek sceptically asked the fellow who answered his knock.

"Nope. Did it have four columns?"

"Yes, yes," said Gweek overjoyed.

"Haven't seen it."

Gweek and Mr. MacDonald shrewdly perceived that he was lying, and finally managed to extract the information that the trophy had been there, but wasn't anymore.

They then trundled their weary selves back to the Harbord St. address.

Here they demonstrated their Sherlockian tendencies: they noticed some Christmas cards on the floor, and took down the names on them.

The case was solved. Congratulating themselves on their Intelligence Quotients, the pair returned to the SAC office, showed up the Christmas card addresses, and contacted a fellow who knew a fellow who had the trophy.

In fact, he had it at home on his mantel piece. It was soon returned.

Now that the story is done, what of our detectives? Unrewarded, they both had a sad let-down. Gweek was heard to remark: "Isn't it a bugger."

Lord Beaverbrook Elected CUP's Hon. President

Lord - Beaverbrook, Canadian newsboy grown to British press lord, has been elected to the honorary presidency of the Canadian University Press.

The colorful Lord Beaverbrook, long famed for his championship of the British Empire, was suggested for the CUP post by the editors of The Brunswickian, student newspaper at the University of New Brunswick, at the last CUP conference in Quebec city.

Lord Beaverbrook was born in New Brunswick some time before the turn of the century. After a struggling start in Canada, he emigrated to England, where he has since risen to fame and fortune. His gifts to his home province and the University of New Brunswick have been lavish. Only this fall, he gave UNB a plush new skating rink. A half-dozen other buildings on the campus also stand as models to his generosity.

Lord Beaverbrook is now the honorary editor of The Brunswickian, and of the Atlantic conference of the CUP.

Winter Carnival Comes To Campus

Hockey, Hoedown, Hikes Skates, Skis, and Skirts For Carnival Weekend

From campus to Caledon goes the Carnival and so will most of the U of T, predicted the Carnival Committee yesterday.

Last year more than three hundred students were at the farm house on Saturday. More are expected this year, for the weekend of the 21st and 22nd, said Ted Bowen, chairman of the Carnival committee.

"Saturday events are for the sports-minded," said Bowen. "Competitions begin at 10:30 in the morning, with down-hill skiing, and continue to 1:30 with snowshoe and wood-chopping races."

At two in the afternoon the cross-country skiers and the orienteering groups go out, he said. The cross-country ski competition consists of about two miles of fairly difficult terrain, and the orienteering contest, on foot, of about twice that much, announced the chairman.

Orienteers, he explained, are taken out by car, blindfolded, to a distant point in the country, and left (unblindfolded) with a map and compass. The object of the contest, said Bowen, is to get back to the farmhouse before your girl goes to the barn dance that night with someone else.

At three o'clock that afternoon Forestry will play the Therapists in a hockey game. An old-time Barn Dance (in the barn), with skating and a marshmallow roast afterwards, make up the evening's entertainment.

A cafeteria will be open from

Igloo Inhabitants Currently Sought Free Bed, Meals

Varsity's Winter Carnival officially opens 1:00 p.m., Thursday, Jan. 19, when two volunteer undergrads begin to inhabit a giant igloo to be erected south of Hart House.

Two impetuous students will thus be provided with free room and board for 24 consecutive hours, for they must remain within, or in the vicinity of, the igloo until 1:00 p.m., Friday. On emerging they will be greeted by the Snow Queen contestants, who will also be at the igloo at 1:00 p.m., the time scheduled for the conclusion of the Snow Queen parade.

These eskimos will also take part in the snow queen contest preliminaries, scheduled for Thursday night at the igloo.

All those interested in becoming igloo inhabitants must apply at the SAC office.

No female students need apply.

10 a.m. until 11 p.m. Saturday night, and from 11 a.m. until 4 p.m. in the afternoon, Bowen announced. However, those who stay overnight at the farmhouse will be served Sunday breakfast, he said.

Sunday begins with a church service at the pond. There will be skiing, skating, and tobogganing all day, but the main events will be the finals of the Snow Queen contest. "The girls will have to demonstrate such practical abilities as snowshoeing as well as their athletic qualifications," the Chairman said. At three thirty the Carnival Queen will be crowned to the accompaniment, of the Hart House Glee Club.

The fox pelt award to the faculty that gains the greatest number of points in the Saturday sports events will be presented to wind up the weekend's festivities.

PC's, Liberals Fight On Mock Parliament

Summer Is a Cumin in ...

A young Varsity co-ed goes out wading in suitable costume on the now flooded back campus. Due to the recent rain and warm weather, and this year's unusually heavy snow-fall most of the campus is covered in pools of water. This co-ed finds wading boots and shorts only slightly too cool for the weather.

—VSP by Paul Kyselka

Liberals, CCF Try For Majority Tories Contest Right To Govern

Charges and counter-charges filled the air last night in a three party-dispute and general mix-up over the first Mock-Parliament Government.

First, Bob Fenn, President of the Political Economy Club (the parliament's sponsors), said that the parliament's governor-general, SAC Secretary E. A. Macdonald, had appointed a liberal government.

But this was soon denied, both by the Conservative party and by Mr. Macdonald himself.

Fenn had said that the Liberals had formed a working agreement with the CCF, and would therefore control 49 out of the 98 seats in the parliament, which begins January 24.

Macdonald had said Monday afternoon, Fenn later explained, that unless the Tories could show the same number of seats as the Liberals or more, the Liberals would have the government. "I know nothing about Fenn's statement," said Mr. Macdonald last night. He said that he had yet to announce the government, but had been informed of the agreement between the Liberals and the CCF.

"Mr. Macdonald has branded as a complete fabrication the statement issued by Bob Fenn," said Ted Rogers, president of the Conservative Club.

Rogers said that the Liberals and the CCF had not discussed fully their agreement with the Tories. "We are amazed and sincerely sorry that the youth of this once great Liberal party should sink to the level of deliberate falsehoods and left wing expediencies," he said.

We believe that the Conservative party has the right given to it by the largest plurality ever accorded a campus political party to form the first government," he continued. "We believe that we have the right to present our platform to Parliament, the platform which won such a large vote of confidence from the students. The Governor-General, Mr. Macdonald, in accordance with parliamentary procedure last December asked the Conservative party, as the largest single party to form the government. This it will do."

"We . . . are not forming a coalition," explained Al Millard and Larry Levenstein, presidents of the CCF and Liberal Clubs. They said that the two parties had agreed on a limited legislative programme to ensure "a modicum of stability and reality during the life of the Parliament." Mr. Rogers' statement of a few weeks ago that "The Mock Parliament should be as realistic as possible."

In his statement, Fenn congratulated the Liberals and the CCF on their political maturity. Reasonable compromise is the essence of democratic government and these parties have shown their ability to understand political realities, said Fenn.

At present, no government has been formed for the Mock Parliament. Party standing in the house is:

CCF: 19; Libs.: 30; LPP: 7; PC: 42.

Final word should be released later this week as to which party will form the government.

Weekend Events Count In Award

Only the five sports events of Saturday which will be held at the Caledon Hills Farm will count for the Winter Carnival fox-pelt award this year, said Dave Story who is in charge of the Caledon sports.

Events get underway at 10:30 Saturday morning as soon as the buses arrive from Toronto. These begin with a downhill ski-race and continue on to a snowshoe race immediately after. There will also be a snowshoe race for the snow queens but this unusual event will be staged Sunday. Wood chopping follows and the Forestry Faculty are expected to arrive en masse in hopes of copping the award for this event.

The afternoon boasts a cross-country ski-race, and orienteering. In the latter, the victims, armed only with a compass and a map, must find their way back to the farmhouse from some remote and lonely spot. For the more leisurely inclined, there will be a hockey game to watch between Forestry and POT.

At night there will be a gala barn dance with a "genoowine" caller and fiddler. Later there will be skating on the pond and a marshmallow roast.

UC Lectures On Cultures

A series of lectures on Italian and Spanish culture will be given for the next six weeks by University College. The lectures, dealing with the Philosophy, Literature and Art of these countries will be given by specialists in the field.

They will commence Mon. January 16th for those on Italy and Wed. the 18th for the ones on Spain and will be held at 4:00 p.m., room 6, UC, Staff, students and the general public are invited to attend.

McGill Council Gives $5,000 To Compensate Streetcar Riot

Montreal (CUP) — McGill University students will pay $5,000 to the Montreal Transportation Commission for their share in the streetcar riot, December 9. The McGill Student Executive Council, after a heated debate, passed a motion affirming this at their last meeting in December '55.

The money is offered voluntarily by the students; no demand for payment was made by the Commission.

The motion, which was passed by only a slim majority, also called for letters of apology to the MTC and the Montreal Police, and the necessity for all future students' parades to be authorized by the SEC.

Some members of the council felt that as the parade was not held under council authorization, there was no necessity for council action. Others said that McGill students were not in fault, and that the payment of money would be admitting a guilt which did not exist.

The Students' Society President, speaking for the majority of the Council, stated that "The public and the University are disappointed in and almost ashamed of McGill students. The Students' Executive Council, although not involved in the organizing of the demonstration, must answer for and discipline the members of the Students' Society when necessary. This resolution is an attempt to make amends, and an expression of the feeling that we must be mature enough to accept our responsibility."

An editorial in the McGill Daily supported the action of the Students' Council. It recommended that the punishment of any individual should be a supplement to, rather than a substitution for, such action.

Each student's share of the sum to be paid will amount to approximately one dollar, and the amount of $5,000 was chosen for this reason, reported The Daily.

The riot began as a demonstration against a rise in transportation fares, a rise of about two and a half cents, led by students of McGill University, the University of Montreal, and Sir George Williams College. Damage was estimated up to one half a million dollars; several street cars were overturned, and thousands of windows smashed. Of the 80 or more people arrested, less than half a dozen were university students.

US Minister Visits Canada To Investigate 49th Parallel

"The 49th parallel is an historical mistake" is the resolution for tonight's Hart House debate. His Excellency, Tyler Thompson, Minister of the United States embassy in Canada will be present as Honorary Visitor to speak on the undefended border.

"I will bring down an important declaration of policy when the House meets," said Hal Jackman, III Law, last night. "It is a policy at the first debate of the New Year for the first speaker for the government to deliver the speech from the throne according to the best principles of English constitutional and parliamentary practise as interpreted by generations of HH debate."

"The 49th parallel was the result of two of the greatest mistakes in the history of mankind," said one of the speakers. The first mistake was the American Revolution, and the second, considering the American Revolution as an accomplished reality was that Canada did not join it. Canada and the United States ought to unite, remote from Britain."

The other speaker for the ayes will be Bob Langlois, II Trinity, and the speakers for the noes will be Edward Owens, II St. Mikes and John Pierce, I St. Mikes.

India Discussed Here Thursday

The Indian High Commissioner to Canada, Dr. K. Raugh, will address students tomorrow on Indian Foreign Policy.

The address, sponsored by the Friends of India Society, will be held in the East Common Room of Hart House Thursday at 8:00 p.m.

BADMINTON MEN

There will be a meeting of the Badminton Club, on Thursday, January 11th at 5 p.m. in the North Committee Room, Hart House, to discuss plans for the forthcoming Inter-collegiate Tournament. Anyone interested in trying out for the team, please be present.

Fan Mail From An Old Druid ...

The Editor,
The Varsity:
Please forward, Bishop Sheen, Toronto Star.

Your Lordship: Christians are on the broad road. We, Druids, are on the narrow path.

Nikita Khrushchev, Russian, ex-coal miner, pudgy, clever, humorous, guzzler (6 ounces of vodka is, to Nikita, only a toddy), calls religion — "a withering mind blight." He often shouts — "Workers of all Socialist nations! Behold the Tree of Knowledge (Educational System — based on Dialectical Materialism)! Eat freely of its Fruits (Sciences) and you will become 80 percent wiser than Capitalism's Gods — The Vatican's 18 of the 71, and its counterpart, the 240Ms of the Knight Templars 72!"

When Nikita guzzles about 8 ounces of vodka, he sings Sullivan's melodious song, The Red Flag. And when he guzzles another 6 ounces of the intoxicant distilled from rye (vodka) he sings —

Clergymen! Cry aloud! Hang your pulpits with black;
In great sorrow bow down your head;

Your dear friend, who bore you along on his back;

Your great friend, the Devil, is dead.

A Canadian, Pat Sullivan, is the author of the above song — The Devil Is Dead. And I believe Canada's Pat Sullivan is the reincarnated spirit of the Irish Sullivan who wrote The Red Flag. . . . You know, I presume, that the British (English) believe Royalty are descendants, like the O'Sullivan Tribe, of the King of Munster. The English trace their Royalty from Hiverius' Queen Teifi to Ireland's King Fergus the Great, and Ireland's King Kenneth, who conquered Scotland, 787 A.D. and established his Royal Palace in Scone. In 1296 A.D., Edward I, conquered Scotland (an integral part of Ireland), and seized the Irish Royalty's Crown Jewels, including the Irish Druids Keystone, Lin Fail, now known as The Stone of Scone — the Keystone of Britain's Coronation Chair.

Jehovah's Witlesses (Witnesses) form a "spiritual" nambly-pamby gang that give me healthy stomach laughs. I class them "Spiritual Know-nothingites!"

During World War I, I often asked German officers (prisoners of war): "How are Belus (Nimrod) and Pely — Architect of the Tower of Babel (8 x 4 equals 32)?" That question shocked them. My Brigadier General, Praire (A Roman Catholic) often asked me — "Where did you get all your information about German masonry?" My reply — "While in the sleeping state, I pulled back the dark curtains which hide secrets from your perceptions, but not from mine — after I pull back said curtains." "Teach me how to do it, sergeant." My reply — "First, you must be a strict vegetarian for 7 years (Cannibalism or flesh eating kills psychic sight.) Then base your philosophy of life on — "My country is the world; my religion — to love all mankind." Second, before going to sleep, quiet your front or conscious mind. Then when you go to sleep, your back or subconscious mind (cerebellum) will reflect anything you wish to know.

Why did Hitler kill 6,000,000 Jews? Because it was the Jews, Shimites, also called Semites, who put the descendants of Nimrod (Belus) to death. Nimrod (Belus) was known in Ancient Egypt as Osiris — the RA "Masons" God. Hitler was (Vatican Knight). When he reached the pinnacle of power he became the Supreme Grant Master of Germany's Tower of Babel "Masons" (Majors and Minors). He then adored two Gods — Jesus (7) and Belus (8). To verify this statement, write (or phone) to Hitler — Address:

78 Lyola-Belus St., Apartments 7-8, Spookville. Phone — SV 7878.

Irony aside. The Germans invaded Russia (a fatal mistake) to get raw materials. . . .

Behold the newspapers (news-papers)! Pictures of athletes, and pictures of half-draped young females. I had been an all-round athlete in my palmy days. Athletes were then called — "big-boned morons." It is true — a great physical strength is frequently combined with ignorance. . . .

Now that we are threatened with M-H-A bombs, the clergy try to give us the Rev. Billy Graham's religious epidemic — the characteristic symptom of superstitious, nervous, cowardly people — who are afraid to die. . . .

When I reach power (not while I reside in my present old body) I will compel all Homo Sapiens to dispense with animal food. . . . Shaw told me " . . . If you could compel Man to dispense with animal food, you could establish a moral improvement more lasting than might follow a second appearance on Earth of the famous Jewish Communist, Jesus. . . ."

Colleen Katie O'Sullivan, 19 years old, was around when intelligence was being distributed. She believes mysticism has been rendered null and void by the ideas of men like Shaw.

Men get a second puberty when they reach 89. When I reach that age (I know I will), I will get a wife (through marriage, by Cardinal McGuigan), and then enjoy love in its most solidified form. . . .

If Argentina's Peron was killed with bombs a few minutes after the Pope excommunicated him, hid death would be, to the superstitious, miraculous. . . .

Charming young Katie, with you I agree:

The Spider's nets will never catch me.

Blues Prep For Hard Weekend Facing Redmen Again, Carabins

Varsity's hockey Blues renew their defence of the Intercollegiate championship this weekend when they travel to old Quebec for a doubleheader with McGill and the University of Montreal.

Without any game action since the 10-5 rout of the Redmen before the Christmas holidays it will be hard to assess the Blues' chances in their 1956 opener, especially since the league this year appears to be much more finely balanced than last season.

The Carabins are expected to offer strong opposition, as they always do on home ice, and have already posted a 5-3 victory over McGill. With veterans Claude Dagenais and Bernie Quesnel still operating up front, they can be considered a positive threat to the Blues' possession of the Queen's Cup. Added to this are the several transfers from other universities in Quebec and a number of Junior players. However the graduation of Claude Hotte, who centred the famous Carabin "Punch Line," with Quesnel and Dagenais on the wings, has left some doubt as to the team's potential.

McGill will be a good deal tougher on home ice, especially after missing the championship by such a close margin last winter. If the Blues can play the brand of hockey they threw at McGill in the first period of the league opener in Toronto they will be assured of victory Friday night.

Coach Jack Kennedy will take the same club to Montreal that whipped the Tribe 10-5, leaving Thursday night by train. While a lack of actual play may have some effect upon the Blues' scoring power, a number of the seniors saw service during the holidays with the Whites in the THL Major Series, and cannot be considered entirely out of practice.

Laval currently leads the Intercollegiate loop with two wins and no losses, while the Blues are tied for second place with the University of Montreal. McGill occupies the cellar without a win in two starts. The Tribe will play Laval Thursday night in Quebec City, which may leave them somewhat better game for the Blues Friday night. The Seniors return for their first home game of the 1956 season next week against the Red and Gold of Laval.

Jr. UC Pucksters Win Bob Allan Nets Four

The intramural hockey league got under way this past week with most of the teams starting their last ditch stands before the playoffs come spring. Jr. UC, after the vacation, came back to haunt Pre-Meds by walloping them 9-3 in a game that was played yesterday at the Arena. UC's Bob Allan was the game's individual star as he netted four tallies in leading his team to victory. Hubbard and McKittrick added two goals each in the near riot. Gerry Manale scored a singleton to complete the UC scoring.

Plagued with the lack of sustained offence, the Pre-Med team was unable to match the UC team in power. However, Cutler scored twice for the Young Doctors while R. Graham netted the other Meds goal.

Other stars in the game for UC were Nadawski and Libanowich. Hart played well for the Pre-Med team.

Sr. UC started the new term out by adding two victims to their list. They defeated Sr. Skule by the score of 3-1 as Scott scored twice and Logue added the other goal. Kaostinen scored for SPS to break the goose-egg. They also defeated Sr. Vic, routing them 6-1. Norm Dysart paved the way for the UC victory with three goals. K. Green and R. Nadin added singletons, Newman scored the lone tally for Vic.

St. Mike's A team and Sr. Meds battled to a 1-1 tie, a contest which was closely played all the way. Horvat scored for the Irish while Day scored for Meds.

George Germaine picked up a shut-out as his Jr. SPS team defeated Trin A's 4-0. Wilson, Bielawski, Patterson and Grey were the Skule scorers. Jr. Vic and Pre-Meds played to a 2-2 tie as Porter and Johns scored for Vic while White and Taylor netted the Meds goals. Dent A's squeaked by Vic-3 by the score of 2-1. Shaw and Fawcett paced the winners as Wansborough scored the lone Dent goal.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

With the Intercollegiate Hockey Schedule swinging into full action this weekend, perhaps now is a good time to sit back and take a brief look at the personnel of the 1955-56 edition of the Varsity Blues.

Al Ceutti (goal) — One of five "men from the north" on the roster of the Blues, Al played last year with the Intermediates, and forms one half of a formidable goaltending pair under Coach Jack Kennedy's care.

Al Fleming (goal) — Al, one of the lightest men on the team at 145 lbs., played an important role in the Blues 10-5 win over McGill in the season opener. He was on the roster of the Intermediates last year, as was Ceutti.

Colin Ashton (defence) — The "lakehead" representative on the Blues, Sam is the hard-rock of the defence corps. In his third year at Trinity, he formerly played with Fort Arthur Flyers in Junior "A" competition as well as the Blues.

Dave Jackson (defence) — At the ripe old age of 22, Dave has already a long hockey career behind him. He started off with the North Toronto Lions and then moved up to the Weston Dukes (both Junior "B"). Before coming to the Blues three years ago, he spent a season with Toronto Marlboros.

Barry Smith (defence) — Barry, who hails from Toronto, played with the Intermediates before joining the Blues this year. His play in the McGill game indicates he will be a valuable asset to the team.

Dave Stephen (defence) — Captain of the Blues again this year, Dave stood 10th in Intercollegiate scoring last season. He began his hockey with the now defunct Toronto Young Rangers, moved to Oshawa, and then overseas to play in the Scottish League. He joined the Blues in 1952 and has been with them ever since.

John Tolton (defence) — John played with Marlboros before joining the Blues. An example of the fact that Varsity players are more interested in goals than penalties, John spent but 18 minutes in the sin-bin last year, and was the most penalized player on the team. He has joined the ranks of the Whites for several games this year, and has been a tower of strength on defence.

Brian Anderson (centre) — Now in his third year at the University, Brian was a major cog in the St. Michael's Majors machine last season, finishing well up in the scoring race. Previous to coming to Toronto, he played with Kirkland Lake Seniors.

Greg Bourassa (centre) — After spending some time on the roster of the University of Montreal Carabins, Greg saw the light and enrolled in Dentistry at Varsity. The oldest member of the team, he originally hails from Sturgeon Falls.

Don Cossar (centre) — A valuable member of the Blues last season, Don finished fourth in Intercollegiate scoring with 18 points. Now in fourth year Engineering, he is an important man on the squad.

Meredith Wright (centre) — Meredith played last season with the Intermediates, and showed by his play in the McGill game that he intends to stay with the Blues this year. In third year, he still has another to go at the University.

John Akitt (left wing) — Another holdover from last year, John has confined his major hockey experience to Varsity teams. He was number 12 in Intercollegiate scoring last season, rolling along at a point-a-game clip.

Sandy Morrison (left wing) — Coming from the Montreal Royals, Sandy had a lot of hard-hitting hockey under his belt before joining the Blues. Sandy hails from Winnipeg.

Ted Rogers (left wing) — Joining the Blues from the Intermediates of last year, Ted also came up with a great effort against the Redmen. The lightest man on the team at 141, he puts his weight to good advantage with his speed.

Ken Linesman (right wing) — Probably the most valuable new addition to the Blues this season, Ken played along with Anderson for St. Michael's Majors last year. He played with St. Mike's Buzzers before joining the Majors, and is one of the men upon whom Coach Kennedy is really depending to produce great hockey.

John Macdonald (right wing) — Mac played last season with Barrie Flyers in Junior "A" competition. Hailed from Brampton, where he made a name for himself in baseball and lacrosse as well as hockey, Mac is a scrappy little player, as shown by his play against McGill.

George Whyte (right wing) — The "baby" of the team at 18, George was a top man with the University of Toronto Schools last season. A strong skater, George has indicated in games and practices to date that he intends to keep the position he now holds.

Blue View . . . Another big Athletic Night coming up on Friday, with the opening game of the Intercollegiate Basketball schedule as Kearney and Larry Stacey joined the hockey Whites roster after the feature attraction . . . Windsor Assumption are visitors . . . Dud Christmas . . . Their presence has made a difference to the team's play and Jack Wheidrake is glad to have them in uniform.

Junior SPS Downs Jr. Vic

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Junior SPS established themselves as the team to beat in interfaculty basketball when they cakewalked to an easy 54-31 win over Junior Vic in a Group 2 game yesterday afternoon. The win moved Skule into a first place tie with the Dents A squad.

Last year the Junior Engineer crew lost out in the interfac finals. This year, the SPS seconds seem strong enough to go all the way.

Hank Galka, an ex-Bloor all-star, Ed Rigby, one of the top men on the Andy's Athletic Club aggregation that plays in the International League, Jerry Wojden of the West end Y Seniors, and Dick Jaworski, a high scorer in the tough Sunday league, form the nucleus of this year's team. Bill Karpinski, a member of last year's Canadian Junior Basketball Champions, the Nortown 88's, is at present out with an injury. His return should further strengthen the Engineers.

In the game itself, the Junior Engineers led all the way. They piled up a first period 14-5 score, increased it to 26-18 at the end of the second stanza, and outscored Vic 28-13 in the final period, to make the final score read 54-31. Galka used a fine jump shot to amass 14 points, tops in the game. The remainder of the Skule scoring was spread out, as the entire roster saw action. John Lawrence was high for the junior Victorians with seven points.

In a Group I game, Sr. Skule doubled the score on Meds, winning 50-25. Roy Webb hooped 12 points to lead the way for SPS in the sloppily played game. Bill West and Pete Polecraone hit for eight each for the winners. Engineer Ed Skrzypek tossed in seven while Skip Kelly scored six in a losing cause for Meds.

UC Victors 1-0 Godsoe Tallies

"What's the matter with old U.C.?" This time nothing is wrong at all! In a thrill-packed girls' hockey game at 4:00 P.M. on Monday, U.C.'s first team shut out the St. Mike's girls by a 1-0 score. The lone goal of the game was scored by the first string centre, Val Godsoe, with Ellen Currie getting the assist.

U.C.'s goalie, Elaine Sossin, with her first game of the year a shut-out, is expected to do great things in front of the net; she played a sensational game and was kept busy between the pipes. Eileen Dillon, the St. Mike's goalie, turned in an excellent performance also. It was a rough and fast game as girls' hockey goes and the spectators were really given something to cheer about at this, the first UC girls' hockey game of the year.

The Sportswoman

By JOAN BOND

The nets are now going up (and none too soon) in anticipation of a successful volleyball season. February 3rd and 4th are the dates for the annual intercollegiate round-robin tournament to be held at McMaster. Teams from Western, OAC, Queens, McGill and MacMaster will be on hand to challenge Toronto's squad.

We have a brand new and enthusiastic addition to the Women's Athletic staff in the person of Miss Van der Walt who will coach our representatives. Lillian Massey gym from 5 to 6 on Tuesday and OEC gym from 7:30 to 8:30 on Thursday will be the scenes of action for practices.

Now we have a coach, opposition and locale — but something is lacking — we need GIRLS!

A good number of the stars of last year's team have graduated, so vacancies are plentiful. With such a short season for practice — the tournament is less than a month away—anyone, even with a rushed schedule will have time for a few invigorating hours of fun at volleyball practice. So let's see you there and we mean you—if you at all consider yourself in the ranks of the "set-uppers" or "spikers." Come out to support the '56 model of the Intercollegiate Championship team.

However, if you prefer a less specialized group, one with that localized spirit, join your own volleyball team now. Look up the schedule in Friday's Varsity for the time of your weekly practice at Lillian Massey.

A sixteen team league including this year for the first time, squads from the Faculties of Music and Dentistry should make for keen competition in the interfaculty ranks. Your college team will play one game a week at Lillian Massey in the regular schedule—so be sure and note the time and set "set-up" girls for action

Buffalo Bulls Wallop Basketball Blues

The University of Toronto Blues wilted badly in the second half to give the University of Buffalo Bulls a 78-48 victory.

The Blues amazed the crowd in the first half as they outplayed Buffalo in every department including the score sheet. Paced by John Darcyshyn's six points in the half the Blues held a 30-29 lead.

It didn't take the Bulls long to erase that lead as they pumped in five fast baskets in the opening moments of the second period without a Toronto response. That was the beginning of the rout that followed which saw Buffalo outscore Toronto in the final period 49-18.

Kurt Lang was game's top scorer as the U.B. flash poured in 14 points. Leo Madden again led the Varsity scoring parade with ten points to his credit. John Darcyshyn and John Sheppard got eight each.

Earlier in the evening Varsity's of Buffalo Frosh 83-49. Mike Syron and Garry Vipond each shared Toronto's scoring limelight with seven apiece.

Interfaculty Summary

In Monday's lone major league basketball game, SPS Fourth's defeated Senior Vic by the narrow margin of 31-30. Burns led the way for the Engineers with 12 points while Morgan chimed in with seven. However, Radomski was high scorer with 13 points.

The highlight in minor league activity was the 102-11 win posted by II Engineering Physics over Vic North House II. Pozhke and Cass topped the winners with 29 and 24.

U.C. Neodicks lost to St. Mike's House II 45-19. Joe Horvat and Mike Romeo split 26 for the winners while Arnie Englander's ten, and Howie Mandell's game, five topped the losers. Steve Fedchak fired 23 points to pace I Electrical A to a 77-19 win over Pre-Med I A. Med IV A downed IV Civil 55-50. Dalglish topped the winners with 15 while Casswell pumped in 11 for the losers. Med III A dropped a 54-50 decision to III Electrical. McMinn hooped 26 for the Engineers. I Mechanical downed Eng-Physics C 42-28 as Mair led the winners with 12.

In Tuesday's top major league game, Wawrychuck scored 11 to lead SPS II to a 36-26 win over Pre-Dents. SPS V edged Med III 56-35 in the other major game.

freedom found strange

The recent Canadian University Press conference has raised once again on campuses across Canada the problem of the freedom of the student press.

Gordon Vichert, of the MacMaster Silhouette, presented a well-documented survey on the freedom of the student press in Canada, in which he reported that several university administrations exercise active pre-publication censorship of student papers. Vichert also reported that, while some papers operate under varying degrees of control by their students' councils and administrations, others were free both in practice and theory to print whatever they pleased.

The Varsity most heartily endorses the stand taken by the conference itself on this question — that of opposition to censorship of contents of a student newspaper by either an administration or by a students' council. It is rather disturbing to note that eight papers out of the twenty-two attending the conference were opposed to this stand, evidently feeling that some form of censorship was desirable or inevitable.

The truth is that the censorship of a university student newspaper by either a student council or an administration is neither necessary or desirable.

Students' Councils must, of course, exercise some degree of regulation over papers in such matters as finances. But the student paper owes its chief loyalty not to the student council, but to the student body itself; and the student council, having once appointed an editor should repose its confidence in him, and remove him under only the most extreme circumstances.

The student paper is dedicated to the interests of students, not of the student council, and their freedom from strict council control is necessary if they are to fulfill their function.

Several university papers have operated for years without censorship from either student bodies or administrations, and have in every way distinguished themselves. They have shown that university papers can handle their responsibilities well; and that they can decide for themselves what is or is not fit to be printed.

Indeed, those papers which operate under the greatest freedom are generally the best papers. They possess an intellectual curiosity, an independence, and a vigor which should be the soul of both a newspaper and a university. They do not limit themselves to printing what is approved, or official; they inquire freely into all phases of the student's activities and interests, and help invigorate the universities which nourish them.

Freedom of direct and stultifying control means that the paper concerned will try for itself to fulfill the purpose of a university — to seek the truth.

Of course, such papers may, occasionally overstep the boundaries of good taste or decency; they may occasionally indulge in unwarranted criticism and censure. But university students are presumably sophisticated enough to be able to stand a little bad taste; and criticism, if really unjustified, will usually fall flat.

It seems most strange that at a university, the home of intellectual liberty, there should be so many voices raised to hamper the free discussion of issues, and the expression of opinions.

a relief

We would like to congratulate President Smith on his prompt action on the SAC's request for a new bulletin board.

The President, by agreeing to the students' "radical" design for their bulletin board, has acted to remove a grievance between the administration and the students which had assumed far greater proportions than that of a mere dispute over a few feet of tubular steel.

His prompt action has alleviated student dissatisfaction over the bureaucracy that they felt was hindering student-administration relations, and which had caused much ill-will on this campus.

No Shackles Here:

"Distorted Report"

Your issue of January 6 has just reached us, with its distorted and overly-sensationalized report of the controversial "freedom list" marring an otherwise excellent coverage of the CUP conference.

The fault is not all yours, of course, because the Canadian Press first twisted the report on freedom of the university press to provide more eye-catching news, but as representatives of an organization which I like to think is more thoughtful and idealistic than the CP, yours was the responsibility to correct their distortion rather than wander even further from the truth.

Nowhere in your story is there any justification for the arrant sensationalism of your banner headline. The mere fact that The Varsity was ranked 17th cannot possibly be construed to imply that it is "in shackles," or that there is "no freedom of the press" at the University of Toronto. As you pointed out, needlessly, the opposite is the case.

If you had taken the trouble to consult the report on freedom itself, instead of the appendix which contained the famous list, you would have discovered that all members of CUP, with three exceptions, were commended for the degree of freedom they enjoyed and admonished to use this freedom wisely.

The Varsity was not one of the three exceptions.

Stated more plainly, this means that the gulf between the last three papers on the list and the other twenty is very wide, and that the differences among the first twenty are relatively minor. This means, for instance, that The Varsity is much closer in the degree of freedom allowed it to The Ubyesque than to The Purple and White (Assumption College, Windsor). Certainly it is untrue to say that The Varsity is "far below average."

In Canada there are twenty free university papers, all varying slightly in their relationships with their administrations and students councils, and there are three censored papers. The Varsity is in the first group, as a reading of the report would have shown.

The Varsity is number seventeen among the twenty for several reasons, all of which, both in practice and in theory,

Editors' Note

We are sorry to learn that The Varsity's story was thought sensationalized or inaccurate by Mr. Vichert. If Mr. Vichert will check carefully the story referred to in the January 6 issue of The Varsity, he will find that nowhere in the story is it said or implied that his report had said that The Varsity had no freedom of editorial expression. Nowhere did the story state that Vichert had said that The Varsity was "in shackles," or that there was no freedom of the press at the University of Toronto.

The story merely said Vichert's report had placed The Varsity "below average"—and the fact that he placed The Varsity 17th in a list of 23 indicated this clearly enough.

Mr. Vichert may have a legitimate grievance with the headline.

But college newspapers, as Mr. Vichert knows, are given to exuberance in their headlines.

The headlines in Mr. Vichert's own Silhouette, or in many other Canadian university newspapers, often display a similar exuberance, often in the desire to interest student opinion.

We ourselves have reviewed the facts again, and reach the same conclusion: We think that Mr. Vichert's excellent report still rated The Varsity too low on his "freedom list," if he meant that list to be an accurate representation of degree of freedom now held by each paper.

make it slightly less free than the papers which head the list. On these points The Varsity differs from the papers with the most liberty: its budget is controlled by the SAC, all advertising is controlled by the SAC (thus additional ad revenue does not necessarily mean more issues), the Editor is appointed by the SAC (on occasion, complete outsiders have been appointed), twenty-four hours notice or less is required by the SAC to suspend the Editor or the paper. These controls, while they do not necessarily hamper the free expression of opinion in The Varsity, represent collectively a greater restriction than most university editors experience. One should also remember that The Varsity has a history of trouble with the SAC and with the administration, leading to the following comment in the anniversary issue:

"Today's Varsity members enjoy freedom of the press, with reservations. The reservations include good taste, accuracy and the libel laws, but they also include vague loyalty clauses which can be, and have been, interpreted to force The Varsity into the role of uncritical yes-men to the Caput and the SAC."

Never did I say that The Varsity is operating under police-state restrictions, but I did say that it is subject to more controls than sixteen other university papers. After re-examining the facts I possess, I have once again reached the same conclusion.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Vichert,
Editor, The Silhouette,
MacMaster University.

OUR READERS WRITE:

For The Varsity And SAC: A Suggestion

The Editor,
The Varsity

Everybody knows the situation in the world as it is today. The freedoms in the world contract. More and more nations are coming under the sway of totalitarianism.

Who but the students, and professors: the University (Administration be damned!) who but they, the searchers for truth, believers in the individual freedom, who but they should be in the vanguard of the struggle for their own very existence and for freedoms of the World Nation.

You might say, but is it up to the University, the students and the scholars to bother with politics? Let the politicians bother and defend us. The plain fact is that our system presupposes every man to be a political animal. The purpose of the University itself demands active participation in the struggle for freedom to think for the world.

Today we find the SAC planning to approach the Administration to obtain permission to put up a bulletin board in front of the SAC building. We also find the women of the UC having a hectic two-day debate on wearing of Gowns "Girls of the Whitney Hall," writes The Varsity. "Thought the idea was 'cool and comfy,' and that the gowns were 'real dream-boaty'."

I wonder what those girls would think of gowns "with black and white trim" while digging ditches, being of bourgeois or worse background, should we miss our chance?

On the professorial side, the only time they seem to speak up is when they feel that the carpenters are getting more money than they. I am all on the side of the carpenters for those, at least, are doing their duty, while the intellectuals, with few exceptions, stole away from their duties, lost the initiative and do not care to regain it.

They deserve to starve.

What we want is a community of undergraduates, graduates and instructors joined in the common purpose, who could state and act that they "have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility to any kind of tyranny over the mind of Man", and also create positive social values.

Dealing in cold facts as we must today, and I would think the SAC or The Varsity capable of initiating the changes, could do the following:

1. The SAC must collect their own money, independent of the Administration. The SAC should strive to become an association with an idealistic attitude. Independent grants by charitable organizations should be sought.

At this point it would be advisable to enlarge the concept of the SAC to amalgamate the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Unions with the Faculty. (Continued on Page 7)

FERUTING OUT FIGURES

Ferut, the University electronic brain exemplifies the machines which may in the future emancipate man economically. Misapplied, they can enslave us.

Power For Positive Thinking

By FRED KAHAN

There's one pound of brain for fifty pounds of brawn in the human body. However, the University has a mechanical brain which could challenge human efficiency, in terms of tons of sweating human mathematicians replaced by tons of electronic gadgetry.

The Ferranti-built University of Toronto electronic computer—FERUT for short—has for the past four years been unemploying abacus and slide rule operators by turning out routine calculations at almost instantaneous speeds. This machine was built for a quarter of a million dollars at Manchester, England and is at present set up on the second floor of the Physics Building.

Mechanical Nerves

Ferut, like our own thought centres, represents a gigantic memory process. Each one of us possesses ten billion nerve cells in his thinking centres; Ferut has, on a much larger scale, about fifty cabinets of modified tape recorders and television tubes to act as its memory. The machine does not really "think"; it can only perform operations involving simple addition, subtraction and multiplication in any fashion in which its teacher instructs it.

At the core of the machine's operating philosophy is its simple and delightfully adapted method of counting — the Binary Notation. We count by tens, so that the number 179 represents 1 times 10 squared plus 7 times 10 plus 9 times 10 to the zero power. (By some involved sophistry all numbers to the zero power equal one.) We thus require 10 separate digits to express all numbers. The computer, however, avoids this multiplicity of digits for it counts, as did Noah his animals in archaic times, two by two. Thus only the digits 1 and 0 are used. For example our number 7 is to it 11, i.e. 2 squared 4, plus 2 to the first power — 2, plus 2 to the zero power — 1.

The machine can handle numbers up to 40 digits long by binary notation, (the largest number being 2 to the fortieth power minus one — approximately one trillion. Adding, multiplying and subtracting are very simple; the prime rule being the 1 plus 1 equals 10 — shades of Orwell — this is the same as "carrying one" when we find that a sum exceeds 10. The reader might amuse himself by converting numbers into binary notation and working out sums, but it's unlikely that at any stage of proficiency he'll rival the machine.

Quick Thinking

Ferut can add any two figures up to a sum of 1,000,000,000,000 in the vanishing time of one thousandth of a second and multiply these same numbers in two thousandths of a second. Even this is a snail's pace compared to more modern machines capable of 100 times this speed. In fact the limitation of the modern calculator today is not in its calculating speed but rather that in the bevy of ticker tapes, card punches and typewriters which try to record its accomplishments — the machine inevitably dictates too rapidly.

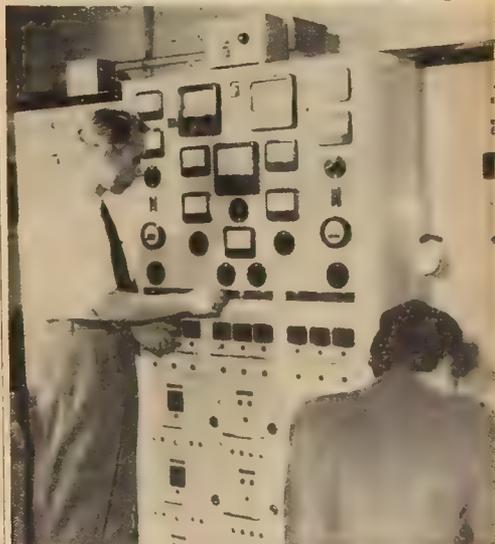

The binary counting system is ideally suited to recording, to the machine's memory, since it either gives a signal for 1 or remains silent for 0. When the machine is given instructions, these are also in binary notations, so that like a proper logical philosopher, Ferut says either yes or no (1 or 0) but never maybe.

The Memory System

Ferut has two memory systems, one a fast and one a slow. The slow one is the long term memory and is recorded on a long nickel plated drum which is equivalent to a tape recorder with 256 separate recording tracks on the drum. The tracks are analogous to "books." To look at the pages of each book, modified television tubes are used which record the binary 1 as a spot of light and 0 as darkness. It is actually on these tubes that the lightning fast calculations are transacted and recorded.

With these tubes, also, the human computer can keep constant watch over his protege, for the mechanical brain like its natural counterpart is temperamental and occasionally has fits of insanity. To check on its state of mind, Big Brother computer slyly interjects stock questions for which he knows the answer and sees on his television screen whether Ferut is having the right sort of thoughts.

Ferut has proven itself invaluable wherever basically simple

Here Paul Moody performs a minor adjustment on the power plant of the "brain." The director of the Physics Department and of this apparatus is Dr. W. H. Watson, Chief computer is Dr. C. C. Gottlieb. —VSP by Ed Staworzynski & Mart Gerland

Ticker Tape Thinker

Shown here is the separate control desk and its operator, Bluma Sachs. The 6 television tubes give insight into the brain's innermost thoughts. At the control desk information is fed into the machine by the tape reader which is at the operator's right-hand. Results of calculations are either printed out or recorded on punched tape. In this second form they can be kept and put into the machine for further calculations to be done. In operation the "brain" requires little attention. In 54 hours it achieved results which would have occupied mathematicians using ordinary table machines from four to five years. —VSP by Ed Staworzynski fields — notably psychology and sociology. Cybernetics, the study of communication and mechanisms of logical processes, has caught the imagination (and on rare occasions, even the understanding) of the non-mathematician. It has provided a useful model for the physiologist studying the nervous system — has added a respect-demanding war to the socialists' linguistic feedback. The sociologist has come to recognize the importance of the back flow of communication from the audience to the transmitter in society.

Vest-pocket Model

Yet the wholesale application of the principles underlying the mechanical brain to Mother Nature's Vade-Mecum-Universal Encyclopedia (vest-pocket) model has its pitfalls. Six thousand cubic feet of electronic Ferut can receive 75,000 bits of information per second, one cubic inch of human eye with two cubic inches of brain receives 6,500,000 bits of information per second and perceives form, depth, movement and colour; and then contributes to planning and to movement. The following important difference between mechanical switching and biological nervous integration may be suggested. The organism's circuits are arranged to control definite functions; each nerve has its particular effective stimulus. Light, heat, etc. and produces in turn a response inherent in the organ which it informs.

Alas, poor Ferut, knows only 1 and 0. But attach it to a telegraph circuit to a generator or a factory or a guided missile and then it shall at least give some semblance of versatility. The mechanical brain shows well that complex results are the predictable results of simple mechanisms.

Rampaging Robots

But, having seen R.U.R. recently, are you worried lest the "brain" of the future should think and conquer? Theoretically this is quite possible — in fact it has been shown that only fourteen different parts would be necessary to produce a machine that could make and repair its own kind if not think.

If the rampaging robots of the future employ brains the like of the University's Ferut, with all its sprawling 6,000 cubic feet, we have one consolation. We can run faster.

Lugging Out The Guts

Here is an insight into the electrical and mechanical design of the computer and the accessibility of the components. Components are mounted on chassis fixed to hinged doors which are swung out for maintenance purposes while the machine is in operation. All parts are thus easily accessible.

—VSP by Ed Staworzynski & Mart Gerland calculations are to be repeated ad infinitum in the same way to solve a problem (and to the mathematician all problems take on an aura of Q.E.D. simplicity). However, it takes considerable time and ingenuity to teach the machine to handle each different task, so that unless the problem is highly repetitive, it is faster to work it out longhand. Ferut has been used to design electric motors, nuclear reactors and bridges, to calculate inventories, plan schedules, predict market trends — and even to describe soap bubbles and play checkers.

Electronic Linguists

An exciting advance in computation this year has been the development of a machine in U.S.A. which can translate Russian, whether technical or literary, into English. This machine has a complex set of rules of grammar which it systematically applies — in fact it has been trained to omit from translation words used for ornament or emphasis.

The science of computation has contributed much to many other

Adjudicating Producer

David Greene, UTDC adjudicator this weekend, came to Canada "unintentionally" in 1952. He made the Atlantic journey with Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh to play on Broadway in the Shaw and Shakespeare "Cleopatra" plays in 1951. When the season was over he remained in New York to act in television dramas. But his permit to remain in the United States expired, and Greene caught a train for a ship due to sail from Quebec City: He didn't board the ship. Toronto "happened to be" between New York and Quebec City. A two day visit to our city lengthened into a one-year contract as producer-director at CBC Television, then just about to commence. Now, over three years later, David Greene appears to be a fixture at the CBC. He no longer has the ticket to England in his pocket. He began his career as a newspaperman. Before the war his "beat" was the seamy side of London life, police courts, police stations, and anywhere where crime stories could be gathered for London evening newspapers. He never planned to become an actor, far less a producer. He stepped into the theatre as a Press representative for a London management, studied acting half-seriously and began to act (three-quarters seriously) at a little Everyman Theatre in Hampstead, London, where Noel Coward had his first "first night" (The Vortex). After several years in repertory (Oxford & Windsor) he graduated back to the West End stage. He saw a great deal of the world without having to pay his fare, when he toured the Far East with John Gielgud in Hamlet and later made films in Germany, France, and Italy. Some of his films are old enough now to become TV Late Night Movies, and they still show up around midnight in scratchy copies. Among them, The Golden Madonna with Michael Rennie, The Wooden Horse with Anthony Steel, Hideout with Howard Keel, The Dark Light starring Greene's wife, Katharine Blake. At the Old Vic, under Tyrone Guthrie, David Greene played in "Tamburlaine" — the Stratford Festival company's offering to New York this season.

In his three years as drama producer at the CBC he has produced, among other things, Othello, School For Scandal, Flight Into Egypt, The Picture of Dorian Gray, Hamlet, and Macbeth.

"Television is only exciting when it isn't scaled down movies or canned theatre" he says. "When television is allowed to be itself its impact is startling. But too often it has to be an inadequate version of something else, like movies or theatre. As a matter of fact I don't believe television has been discovered yet by the people working in it. It's largely unexplored territory."

UTDC Playfest This Weekend

Half Of Children Not In School States UNESCO

The University of Toronto Drama Committee presents its annual One-Act Play Festival at Hart House Theatre this Friday and Saturday nights.

Six plays in all will be presented: FRIDAY NIGHT, Woyzeck, by George Buchner; Riders To The Sea, by J. M. Synge; and Aria Da Capo, by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

SATURDAY NIGHT, Purification, by Tennessee Williams; Dark Brown, by Phillip Jonson; and White Queen, Red Queen, by T. B. Morris.

David Greene, well-known CBC television producer, will give an adjudication following the performances on each evening from the stage of the theatre. As the Festival adjudicator, Mr. Greene joins the ranks of other distinguished theatrical personalities who have performed this function in previous years, including Peterborough playwright Robertson Davies, and Frances Hyland, Canadian star of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival.

Woyzeck, presented by Victoria College, is a psychological study of passion, degeneration and death. Directed by William Bennett, it is the first time this play will have been presented in North America in the present translation by Theodore Hoffman. Trinity College's production of Riders To The Sea, a tragedy concerning Irish peasant life, will be directed by Marilyn Bevis. Aria Da Capo, St. Michael's entry (directed by Thurston Smith), is a fantasy dealing with human relationships.

Purification, the UC production, directed by Curt Reis, is another excursion into the misty Williams world of earthy symbolism. Dark Brown, directed by Neil MacLean with a fast year Trinity cast, has been described as "a Victorian melodrama—but with a surprise ending." White Queen, Red Queen, a drama set in the stormier days of Henry VIII, is this year's School of Nursing entry. The director is Ann Mierzwa.

Still Going Strong

The University of Toronto Drama Committee first became active on the campus about twenty years ago. Since Hart House "theatre", as we know it, did not exist in those days, the Committee acted as a co-ordinating body which sponsored the annual production of a three-act play from each of the member colleges.

At the beginning of the last war, its policy changed when the "five o'clocks" were instituted. Under this system, a one-act play was presented in Hart House Theatre every two weeks by one of the colleges at five o'clock in the afternoon.

Following the war, the annual Drama Festival was begun, in which one-act plays were presented in competition for the Dr. Samuel Cody award. By 1947 the presentation of an award was discontinued, but the Festival, on a non-competitive basis, has continued, and is now an established tradition on the campus.

Alene Kamins and Jack Shorriff in a scene from the UC Players' Guild production of Tennessee Williams' "PURIFICATION," an earthy fantasy that goes on the stage of the Women's Union Theatre at 8:30 tonight. Curt Reis is director of the play, which uses a score specially composed by Milton Barnes. The play will also be the UC entry in the UTDC One-Act Play Festival, to be held this Friday and Saturday. Festival adjudicator will be David Greene, CBC producer, for whom see page six.

One-half of all the world's school age children are not attending school, a recent U.N. publication states.

The World Survey of Education, printed under the auspices of UNESCO, contains figures showing that of every ten school age children in the world, five are not attending school, four are in primary (public) schools, and one is receiving post-primary education.

According to the Survey, the United States leads the world in enrolment in institutions of higher learning. Enrolment per 100,000 population in the United States is 1,783, while Switzerland follows with 899.

Carnival Sculpture

Entries for the snow sculpture contest must be ready by Wednesday, January 18. Although the carnival does not open until Thursday, this will enable the contest to be postponed till Friday if the weather should be bad. Any faculty, club, or fraternity can enter.

Mayor Phillips has been asked to judge the snow sculpture contest, reported Ted Bowen.

For The Varsity-

Then a university movement of the free world could immensely advance the cause of freedom in the world, at the same time advancing university interests.

2. The Varsity, either initiating the movement, or supporting it, could prove an inestimable service by propagating the idea of common interests of the scholar community, by providing leadership for such University movement.

In practice, the change could be started as follows:

1. The Varsity is to get in contact with the public-spirited professors of this University, as well as people outside willing to work, free of charge.

2. The Varsity is to get in contact directly with the university students and faculties of universities in the free world, being sold, at, say, 5c to these people.

3. To ensure sale, The Varsity should be dealing with matters concerning the entire scholar community, the scholarships, the human rights, the world affairs etc. Campus news could be had on a 2-page insert.

Now, if nothing at all should happen, at least I hope that the SAC will not discuss the putting up of a bulletin board, and the professors would speak up in relation to current burning issues and not their lower-than-cent-penney pay.

SEX, ESSAYS WORRY STUDENTS

One Third Studying Finds Varsity Poll

Studies and the opposite sex are a major source of concern to U of T students, according to a poll conducted by The Varsity last night. Students were asked to answer three questions: "What are you most concerned with at the present moment? What gives you the greatest happiness? and What do you consider to be the burning questions of the hour?"

In answer to the first question the main concern of students ranged from men to milkshakes. One-third of those polled said tests and essays were uppermost in their minds. Others were worried about religious beliefs, the state of The Varsity, and getting a job. One even answered, "My legs feel like noodles," while a budding lawyer said "contracts tending to pervert the administration of justice."

The greatest happiness is derived, to quote one student, "from being with other people." This appears to include dancing, movies, wild parties, beer, skiing, touring Europe, and music or philosophical discussions. Two found most pleasure in studying, one in chocolate cake, and a third in receiving compliments. A Trinity co-ed is most happy when reading The Varsity.

And what is the burning question of the hour?

"Will the individual survive?" "Will Ike run again in '56?" "Will Grace Kelly marry Prince Rainier?" "Will Princess Margaret marry Liberace?" "When does res ipsa loquitur apply?" Will the fraternities answer the Hush article?" and "What time can I go to bed?" These are questions of vital interest on the campus.

One third of those questioned gave serious answers such as "Are we producing a race of automotons?" and "Will there be another war?" Others treated the matter lightly with such replies as "Are the Kitchener-Waterloos strong enough to beat the Russians?" "Where will I find a father for my baby?"

And one student is still wondering "Who killed Cock Robin?"

Hitting The Books!

Varsity students are suffering from a post-Xmas pre-exam fright, Jean Mirka and Sophy Korol, I UC hit the books in an attempt to catch up on all those essays, tests, and term reports that are due. In a recent Varsity poll, one-third of students polled were most worried about their studies. This trend is to be noted every year and usually lasts about a month. —VSP by Stan Klosevych

Money & Signboard For SAC Gab-Fest

The first SAC meeting of the New Year will be held tonight in Falconer Hall at 7:00 p.m.

An important item on the agenda is the discussion of this year's budget on the basis of a report complete until the end of December. At this time of the year, the estimated expenses and the actual expenses are compared to see if there is enough money to last till the end of the year.

It is expected that the case of the Council's Bulletin Board will again come up for discussion.

The Publications Commission report will include a report of the recent Canadian University Press conference and a request for prizes for The Varsity's literary issue.

The External Affairs Commission will present a report of the recent WUS Seminar held at Caledon Farms to discuss the Press, Radio and Propaganda.

It is expected that there will be a further report from the U.T.D.U. Chairman, Bill West, and a progress report from the Blue and White Society.

Fight Against Polio Goes On Defries Oversees Research

The fight against polio goes on in the Connaught Research Laboratories of the University of Toronto. A search is now underway for a cell which can be used to grow polio virus and thus eliminate the present need for the importation of costly monkeys from India.

Dr. Defries, former director and now consultant to the laboratories will supervise the research. The studies of vaccine production methods will be continued under a grant of $33,092 from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

A cell is required which will grow and multiply indefinitely in the laboratory and may be harvested repeatedly for vaccine production. Polio virus for the vaccine must be grown on living cells because it will not reproduce in inanimate material.

The Toronto scientists will also study various methods for inactivating polio virus for use in vaccine, including the use of ultra-violet radiation in newly developed equipment. They further plan to investigate advanced techniques in growing large

Middle Course On Communism Urged; Make Reds Legal - Queen's Speaker

Kingston (CUP) — Legal recognition of American Communists was proposed here Monday by Dr. S. E. Morison, a retired history professor from Harvard University. He said that a new Community party should be allowed to be formed, provided that it renounce force and violence in politics.

This would be a middle course between the United States' method of dealing with communists, "so dangerous to civil liberties," and the British method of "pretending that no danger exists," he said. He was addressing 1,500 Queen's students in the first of three Dunning Trust Lectures on Freedom in the Modern World.

Dr. Morison said that local Communist parties should be allowed to join the new party, "if they can show evidence of not following the Cominform line, and of expelling members who insist on following it." He emphasized, in his proposal the quantities of virus in cells suspended in liquid.

Dr. Defries and his associates played a crucial role in the manufacture of the Salk vaccine in developing methods for growing the tremendous quantities of virus necessary for the vaccine used during the field trials of 1954. The Connaught Laboratories also produced nearly all the virus necessary for blood testing procedures carried out in 27 research laboratories during the trials.

right of this new party to agitate for reform, so long as it confined itself to democratic methods.

He said that every case of a suspected Communist should be judged on its own merits, although they should not be given positions in government or defense plants, nor commissions in the armed forces.

"While the passion for freedom may not die, it grows very cool at times, and our times are one of these," he said.

"Why destroy our liberties in defending them against communism?"

SCHOFIELD KNOCKS NFCUS

U of T Co-Chairman Wants Big Changes

NFCUS was under fire again at Wednesday night's SAC meeting — but this time by one of its co-chairmen on campus, Ed Schofield. He spent ten minutes at the meeting criticising NFCUS policy.

"NFCUS has been sidetracked and gone afield," he said in his speech. Its original emphasis was inter-university student contact, through meetings and debates, he said.

Now, he continued, "gimmicks," such as SDS, life insurance, student travel, and the cultural contests, are uppermost.

Schofield and Bill Smyth, the other NFCUS co-chairman, plan to present their grievances to the regional conference in Hamilton next weekend. They will propose that NFCUS cut administrative costs in its $30,000 budget, Schofield said, and spend more money on inter-university student seminars and meetings.

He suggested that Canadian Campus, the promotional publication started last year by the executive office in Ottawa, cease, and that the money be used on these seminars. He also suggested that national executive salaries could be cut and the money used to a better purpose. If their proposals are passed, they will go to Ottawa and will be discussed at the next NFCUS annual conference, he said.

"We will try and bring a trend away from an over all concentration on the promotions NFCUS has sponsored and get back to its original idea."

"The National office should reflect the opinions of the Campus Committees," said Murray Morgan, Finance commissioner for the SAC. Instead of working through the red tape of a regional conference, Schofield and Smyth should tell the national office directly what they think," he said. "We want expediency in action."

Meds Rep. Mary Robinson, felt that Schofield's was not a sufficiently positive program. She agreed with his proposals, but thought that "gimmicks" such as the scholarships campaign in Ottawa should continue.

The NFCUS-sponsored scholarship exchange plan should be revived, she said. Schofield also thought that some of the better NFCUS plans, such as the art and short story contests and the scholarship campaign, should continue, as long as they were of secondary importance.

"NFCUS is in the 'unfortunate position' of working on a cash and carry basis right now. NFCUS shouldn't be selling itself," said Mike Shoemaker, SAC President. The local committee's is "probably the right conclusion," he said, and illustrated this with problems he found at the National Conference: French-Canadian solidarity and nationalism, lack of communications between the colleges, and the inefficiency of inter-university contact, especially in NFCUS.

If at any time you are getting away from a materialistic foundation (Continued on Page 8)

Who Will Reign? Dozen Will Strain For Snow Fame

Who will be the University of Toronto Snow Queen in 1956?

Ted Bowen, in charge of organizing this year's carnival activities, said yesterday he expected over a dozen campus cuties to take part in the affair.

The Snow Queen contest is part of a week-long Winter Carnival beginning Monday.

Only one Snow Queen contestant has been nominated so far. She is Doris Kerr, a second-year medical student chosen to represent the Medical faculty in the race for charm supremacy.

"We hope to have about thirteen faculties represented in the contest by as many contestants," Bowen said last night.

Catholic Priest Calls Ubysey -Vilest Rag, Urges Censorship

Vancouver (CUP) "The vilest rag imaginable" was the epithet applied to The Ubysey, the student newspaper of the University of British Columbia, by Rev. E. C. Pappert, of Assumption College, Windsor. The Assumption professor said that the Ubysey was "the best argument for censorship that could be produced."

Father Pappert, faculty supervisor of the Assumption student newspaper, made these statements after a "freedom list" of college papers was presented at the recent Canadian University Press conference. This list, prepared by Gordon Vichert of McMaster University, placed the Ubysey first on the list of papers free from censorship, and put the Purple and White, of Assumption college, nineteenth in the list of twenty-one papers.

"Thank God we're at the bottom," said Rev. Pappert. "We don't go along with this student's notion of censorship," he said.

Dean Andrew of the University of British Columbia said that while the Ubysey "sometimes can be a bit of a rag, vile or otherwise," the paper has been "excellent" this year. "The paper's excesses of freedom have never amounted to excuses for censorship," he stated.

"A university is a controversial place and students themselves are neither completely vile nor completely lily white," said Ubysey Editor, Stanley Beck. "The Ubysey, to an extent, reflects student life and character. A paper that is rigorously censored can certainly never claim to be a representative university newspaper."

In an editorial of the same issue he said that "if everyone liked this paper and agreed with all it said it wouldn't be worth the paper it is printed on."

"We don't know what Assumption College is like. We have never studied there," he continued. "But if it is deserving of the title university we can't believe that its censored paper deserves to be called a university student's newspaper. It may be more fairly called an innocuous censored publication but not a student newspaper."

$400 Scholarship For Student

A $400 scholarship for some needy student has been raised by Assumption College's 600 students.

The money, collected by the Windsor, Ontario, college's NFCUS committee, will be used to enable some student to continue at the university who otherwise would not have been able to do so. Said Gary Keyes, NFCUS Ontario Regional president.

Keyes commented that the students' efforts to help themselves should show local politicians that the students themselves realize there is a definite need for scholarships.

Keyes also said that the nationwide NFCUS campaign for student scholarships had been only "sporadic," and that more effort and perseverance were needed.

Featherless Head Suits US Envoy But Debaters Reject 49th Parallel

"There is no point in the United States exchanging allegiance from a bird without feathers on its head to an animal without feathers on its tail."

Thus did His Excellency Tyler Thompson, Minister of the United States Embassy in Canada, guest speaker at Wednesday night's Hart House debate refute a prior speaker's claim that U.S. citizens would be only too glad to exchange allegiance from "Uncle Sam's rapacious eagle" to the friendly beaver.

Mr. Thompson spoke in opposition to the question for debate "That in the opinion of this House, the 49th parallel is an historical mistake."

The motion was upheld 20-15. Earlier speakers had quoted sources ranging from the Oxford Book of Nursery Rhymes to the 5th Grade History Textbook in speeches declaiming and affirming the motion.

Pointing out that Canada has an importance in world affairs far beyond the proportion of her population, Mr. Thompson cited the part Canada has played in NATO, Korea, on the Vietnam Truce Commission, and in mediation of the Israeli-Arab disputes in the Middle East.

"This," said Mr. Thompson, "has given Canada world-wide respect. She has a knowledge of, and ties with, Europe and the United Kingdom that the U.S. does not have, nor indeed, any other nation in the world . . . this permits of wise judgments in the international field."

Referring to arguments that a union of Canada and the United States would be wise, Mr. Thompson suggested that such a union could bring the North American continent to an isolationism far more disastrous than that of the U.S. after the first World War.

Complaints that the 49th parallel offended the otherwise symmetrical north-south balance of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard, the Rockies and the Mississippi basin, were registered by W. R. Langlois (II Trin.) who made the motion.

Opposing the motion, E. Owens (II St. Mikes), was of the opinion that Canadians spend so much of their time proving to the British that they are not Americans, and to the Americans that they are not British, that they have no time to be Canadians.

With quotes from a fifth grade textbook, H. N. R. Jackman (III Law) said the biggest mistake ever made by the Americans was to secede from Canada.

A second big mistake was made by Canada in not joining in the American Revolution. "If Canada should be joined with the U.S.," he complained, "Canadian diplomats would have to take a stand on important events, instead of just being go-betweens."

Speaking fourth, J. Pierce (I St. Mikes) opposed the motion on the grounds that eliminating the frontier would destroy the essential difference which exists between the U.S. and Canada.

"Ice Salesmen" Want Igloo Stay

"As Feller's . . . ice salesmen, we feel this to be an excellent chance to study the more important side of our product."

So stated one application received recently by Varsity Winter Carnival officials from two students who want to spend next Thursday night in an igloo on the front campus.

The snow house will be built in connection with the week-long Winter Carnival beginning Monday.

The delight of spending all night in the igloo will be shared by the two students who give the best explanation of why they want to spend 24 hours in an igloo. Applications are now due at the SAC office.

Another application said: "We are poor. We cannot afford beer. I think I would find it warm for one night (especially with Ice Queens) . . ."

SAC Reorganizes Blood Drive

Twelve percent of the Red Cross blood collected in Toronto last year came from the University Blood campaign, Josephine Flaherty, nursing rep, told the SAC Wednesday night. She outlined plans for this year's campaign, to be held the week of February 13.

A new system for competition will be started. Last year's quota system was unfair, she said, because faculties choosing a low outlined plans for this year's quota had an unjustified advantage over the rest of the campus.

This year, first prize in the campaign will go to the faculty or school with the highest percentage of its students over 18 contributing blood to the campaign.

More news on the Blood Drive will be released later this month, she said.

Hockey Blues Face Quebec Jinx Take On McGill Redmen Friday Battle Fiery Carabins Saturday

The Blues have their first chance of the young Intercollegiate hockey season to disprove the evidence of history this weekend when they lock horns with the McGill Redmen and the University of Montreal Carabins.

In past seasons the double-header trips into old Quebec have often proved disastrous to Varsity hockey teams. In general they've been able to win by a comfortable margin in the Friday night struggle, but have run into trouble in the Saturday fixture. Last year, it was just such a weekend as this that marred an otherwise perfect season for the Intercollegiate champions. After walloping Laval in Quebec City, it was all they could do to tie the Carabins 1-1 in Verdun on the Saturday night.

Like all top hockey clubs, the Frenchmen put up a good fight on their own ice, and Verdun has been the scene of the downfall of many Varsity invaders. Two years ago the Carabins instigated a minor brawl that brought all ten Blues off the bench to do battle, and resulted in one of the wildest mix-ups the Intercollegiate Union has ever seen.

Brilliant at individual play, the Frenchmen are at their best when playing three men to three, and will invariably accept penalties at a similar cost to the opposition to afford themselves the opportunity of adding four or five quick goals to their total. That is what happened in 1953 when the riot occurred. It was 3-3 when the fight broke out, and 14-3 when it subsided in the third period.

Thus the Blues can cap past performances with a double win this weekend, as well as boost themselves into sole possession of first place in the race for the Queen's Cup. At full strength after the holiday layoff, there's a good chance they will do just this. Such an achievement this weekend will establish them as definite favorites when the Red and Gold from Laval, current league leaders, invade Blue ice next Friday night as the feature attraction of the Winter Carnival.

Interfaculty Basketball

Junior Victoria, looking much better than they did against Jr. Skule, defeated Junior University College 37-24 in a Group 2 basketball game played yesterday afternoon. The win evened off Vic's record at 1-1 and left U.C. with an 0-2 slate.

Bob Stone led the way for the winners, potting 12 points, while Morris Winer's six points topped the losers.

In another major league game, Steve Fedchak scored 17 points to pace SPS X to 53-38 win over U.C. V. Ostapchak helped out the winners with 13 while Bill Naylor hooped seven for U.C.

PHE Gals Win

Marg Haines, PHE goalie, got her first shut-out of the season as Dr. Harry Ebb's ladies downed the blue and grey squad from Trinity, 3-0. Carol Smith in a break-away in the first minute of play opened the scoring when Nancy Banks, all alone in the Trinity end, was unable to stop the hard shot. In the first period the Saints were unable to get organized and were completely out-classed by the PHE girls.

Nancy Doubt made it 2-0 on another outstanding break-away and later in the third period Ada Macpherson increased the score to 3-0. In the third period, St. Hilda's defence greatly tightened up and stopped the PHE attack consistently.

Carol Smith was outstanding for the athletes and Nancy Banks in the goal for Trinity played well.

Cage Blues Meet Raiders

Seven losses in seven games is the basketball Blues' record to date, but fortunately these losses count as nothing but experience. Tonight the wins and defeats begin to have meaning as the Purple Raiders of Windsor's Assumption College begin the Canadian Intercollegiate Basketball schedule when they meet this school's Blues at Hart House. The game is the feature event of the third Athletic Night of the season.

The Raiders are led by 6'5" Matt Borowiec, high scoring George Joseph, veteran guards Larry Conorton and Hugh Coyle and a trio from Niagara Falls Collegiate, Howie Triano, Dick McKenzie and Bill Burleigh. These three were the big men on Niagara's squad when they were the hottest high school basketball team in Ontario, Assumption is coached by Hank Biasatti, a graduate of the Windsor school, who played professional basketball with the old Toronto Huskies and professional baseball with the Philadelphia Athletics. They already hold a victory over Detroit Tech who beat the Blues here last Saturday 101-84.

The Blues have played a better brand of basketball every time out this season and hope to reach the winning side of the ledger tonight. The big surprise to date has been the improved play of John Shepperd who has developed into quite a scoring threat this year. Leo Madden still continues to lead the Blue scoring parade. Madden has potted 76 points in seven games.

Dalt White's Intermediates, still looking for their first win of the year, take on Osgoode Hall in the opener at 7:00 P.M. To date the Intermediates have shown marked improvement every time out. Their best performers to date have been Barry Stroud, Joe Stulac, Jerry Taube and Garry Vipond

Top Athletic Night On Tap Two Cage Games Feature

Varsity athletes will be in action on all fronts tonight when the Athletic Association presents a top-notch evening of sports at Hart House. Fans will be able to choose from a real potpourri of athletics — basketball, boxing, wrestling, fencing and swimming.

Activities get underway at 7:00 p.m. when the Varsity Intermediate basketball squad meets Osgoode Hall. At 8:30, Assumption College will trade baskets with the Varsity Blues in the opening game of the intercollegiate regular schedule.

Tony Canzano's boxers will be out in full force against McGill as a tuneup for the intercollegiate championships to be held at Queen's in February. Five bouts are slated against the Redmen in addition to three exhibitions by Varsity boxers. McGill's Eric Lindsay, holder of the 135 lb. college title, will meet former champion Russ Raitly of Toronto in what shapes up as a top-flight match. Other McGill title holders in action are 145 lb. John Fawcett and 155 lb. Pierre Raymond who fights Bill "Snooks" Sidney, a Canadian representative at the last Macca-bean Games held in Israel.

Varsity's strong wrestling team will have their first real taste of competition tonight when they band biceps with the McGill grapplers. The Blue team will feature three champions from last year's team in Wally Kamitakahara at 130 lb., Paul Hickey at 157, and all-star footballer Bob Waugh at 177. Bolstering the team are intermediate 123 lb. champion Freeman Roth and Ben Hooyer, winner of the intermediate 157 lb. class. In all, nine bouts are scheduled as the visiting Redmen try to take revenge for the 27-16 loss they suffered at Varsity's hands last year.

The Toronto fencers will be up against some stiff competition when they parry blades with a group from Royal Military College. Fencing fans can see the action in the Hart House Fencing Room.

In the pool Cressy McCatty's swimmers will be matched against an all-star aggregation from the Canadian Swimming Association. Among the visitors will be Hamilton's George Park, Canadian champion and record holder for the champ and record holder for the 100 yards free style. Also present will be Bill Cameron of Hamilton of Aquatic Club and Lorne Hole of Peterborough "Y", both Ontario diving champs. Princeton's John Swabey, a Peterborough resident, who placed second in the Canadian breaststroke championships, and Pete Fowler, a member of Canada's Pan American team, will also see action. Toronto representatives will include Ron Wall-bank who placed fifth in the 100 yards at the Canadian championships, sprinter Nobby Hill and diver Bruce Sonley, Doug McCulloch, who copped two events last Saturday in the 220 and 440 yard swims will be one of Toronto's big hopes for a win.

Don't forget that there'll be dancing in the gym after the basketball action. Remember that all this action takes place tonight for a small stipend of fifty cents

Speaking OF SPORT

By HOWIE MANDELL

This evening at eight-thirty, the Assumption College Purple Raiders will move into the Hart House Gymnasium to begin regular league play for the Wilson Trophy, emblematic of Intercollegiate cage supremacy. But before game time, there are a few comments this reporter would like to make about this year's edition of the Blues.

By now the cry of "What's the matter with the Blues?" has been echoed in every nook and cranny of this school of ours. They've played seven exhibition games to date and have been whipped pretty soundly in each contest. We have only seen their two home games against Buffalo State and Detroit Tech. In the first ball game it appeared that the Blues had a great deal of practising to do if they were going to make any attempt at all to challenge Johnny Metras' Western crew. In that game the Blues lost a nine point 88-79 decision to a far from good Buffalo State team. They appeared much sharper in the second game and if it were not for a guard named Mike Sica with an almost incredible set shot, they might have finally won their initial contest of the season. In almost all their exhibition games, the Blues have faded badly in the last few minutes to allow the other team to come from behind and capture the win.

One thing for sure, Toronto have a battle on their hands this year if they intend to make any showing at all in the league. Early indications again show that Western Mustangs are the team to beat. In fact it will take a pretty good club to keep Metras' team, who incidentally have won the championship eleven years in a row, from running away with their twelfth straight cage crown. To top Western, Varsity will have to stop Ray Monnot. The invincible 6'7" centre has sparked his team this year to an upset 71-66 victory over Bowling Green. They also gave Niagara quite a scare when the Purple Eagles managed only a last minute 86-75 victory over Western Ontario. Monnot in six exhibition games to date has averaged 20 points a contest.

The rest of the league will be no pushover either. Assumption own a victory over Detroit Tech and are rated as a strong choice to finish next to Western. The Border City team always have quite a few Americans on their ball club and this year is no exception to the rule. The Purple and White are led by a 6'5" centre from Hamtramck, Michigan named Milt Borowiec. The team's most prolific scorer, George Joseph, hails from Rochester, New York. With only one man gone from last year's squad, the Purple Raiders may be the team to dethrone Western.

Toronto, Queens and McMaster all seem of equal caliber. All three have had trouble winning their exhibition tilts to date. Iona defeated Queens by relatively the same score they defeated Toronto and McMaster was beaten by Buffalo State by the same nine point margin that State dumped Toronto. Very little has been heard from McGill where coach Joe Anderson starts his fifth season as head of that school's cage forces. Back this season is Leon Duplessis, at 6'4" the tallest member of the team. Last year Leon averaged 19 points a game. Because the Redmen play only league games, information about this year's team is rather limited.

But now its time for us to take a peek at this edition of the University of Toronto Blues. Freshman coach John McManus will be leading the team this season. A U. of T. graduate, John comes to us from Acadia University where for two years his team won the Intercollegiate title, the Halifax and District Championship and the Maritime Senior Crown. He joined the Toronto staff in 1952 and in the past three years his intermediate team won the college championship twice. McManus will have seven of last year's regulars in action again in Pete Potter, Leo Madden, Ruby Richman, Al Vaiculis, Vic Kurdyak, Mary Eile and Florian Matsalla. All these boys have proved that they have great scoring potential and they'll be strengthened by the acquisition of John Daeyshyn and John Shepperd. Both of these men lend height to a short club.

So tonight with Windsor Assumption as their foes, the Blues make their first appearance in league play. A good crowd behind them would certainly do much to help them start the season on the right foot. Why not intend to be there?

Two other matters have been brought to our interest. The first concerns curling. For the first time this season, curling teams from four universities will meet for the Intercollegiate Curling Championship. This school will be represented by skip John Laidley and his crew of Campbell Hall, John Elder and Karl Elder and by skip Claire Peacock's team of Terry Patton, Don Grant, and Jim Sharpless. The tourney takes place in Guelph on the twenty-seventh and eighth of January. Other teams come from O.A.C., Waterloo College and McMaster. The second matter deals with the Ontario Weightlifting Championships which will be held on January 21 at 2 p.m. at the Broadway Y.M.C.A. and at 8:30 p.m. at the Y.M.H.A. The contest will be highlighted by Judo, handbalancing, boxing, wrestling and many variety acts. You can get your tickets at any Y or at Moodey's.

Whites, Pickin' Chicken Tie 3-3

By JOHN BROOKS

Paced by the three-point performance of ex-Port Arthur Junior star Grant Mills, the Varsity Whites battled Pickin' Chicken to a 3-3 draw Wednesday night at Varsity Arena. After spotting the Chicks a 1-0 lead in the first period on a goal by Bruce McFayden, the Whites battled back and were really rolling in the middle canto until penalties bogged them down.

Mills evened the count at the 5:10 mark of the second from Don Borthwick and forty seconds later, Dunc Brodie batted home the puck from a scramble after Mills had carried from the corner. The Whites lead lasted until the last minute of the period when Larry Stacey went off for interference, and John Slavson scored for the Bar-B-Q men, to put the teams back on even terms.

With Stacey still off, the Chicks took the lead again when McFayden tipped in a long shot at the 46 second mark of the third. Varsity got the equalizer at the half way mark with the Chicks short-handed. Mills and Dud Kearney each had a try and it was Borthwick who finally put the puck in the net.

The Whites missed a great chance for last-minute victory when three men broke in on one Chick defender. Mills left the puck in front of the net for Kearney, who wasn't expecting it, and Brodie cleared it out of danger.

Just Jots Tom Riley played his usual fighting game. John Scott of Lyndhurst, who has an aversion to referees is under indefinite suspension pending a League Executive meeting.

Mike Eliek seemed to be a good target for the Chicks, but he could back down in a hch

The Marfleet Lectures

The Masses In Revolt

The following are extracts from the first of two Marfleet lectures given recently by Dorothy Thompson, at the University of Toronto. Miss Thompson is a prominent American columnist, who in past years has published regular columns in Canadian newspapers.

an economic or a human being?

Periodically someone will tell you about the danger of men being replaced by machines and men being dominated by machines. We would see a greater danger that men will become machines, and be treated as machines.

The chief nigger in the wood-pile is, to our mind, the economic interpretation of life, known in some parts as materialism, and in some as commercialism.

Businessmen claim that they are treating their employees as human beings, because they hire a psychologist to tell them what is needed in the way of coffee breaks and surrounding benefits. In fact they are treating their human beings as machines and purely economic units. This two-legged thing which has a consciousness and is necessary to certain functions that mean money to him will operate best under certain circumstances, and that is all that is of vital interest to him. The humanity or individuality of these people is irrelevant.

Business of course is the chief field of activity where this kind of thinking is prevalent. But big business has become so influential that this attitude seeps into all kinds of other fields of human activity, and fields where it can do more harm.

Even the arts are dominated by economic values, which is partly the reason why they have so much difficulty in taking root in our society. A painter from Europe recently complained to us of the small market for art in Canada. In France even a day's meals would be sacrificed to own something of beauty. To us this is inconceivable. We call it impractical.

And so the arts whose basis is human values, are forced into the position of catering to economic values to survive at all. We have box office theatre and pop concerts and all manner of commercialized entertainments. And when a really sincere piece of artistic endeavour does appear, who swarms to the first night, buys up all the best seats and monopolises the time of these artists? Those very people who are most susceptible to economic values and who scare many away from this endeavour by attaching to it the stigma of money and high-class snobbery.

Even at universities, the place where one might conceivably look to find human values still in force, we find that the sign of success is always economic. The good university president has become not the man of high intellectual capability and integrity, but the capable administrator. The man who has good connections with the Wall Street of his area.

If we do not insist upon affirming the human values and human motivations in society we shall lose our human characteristics: love, fear, pity, self-sacrifice, endeavour, understanding. And then our only resort will be as in RUR to try to make men out of machines.

not surprising

The French election returns are now in, and the results are hardly surprising. A country which has chosen one definite path in history is not likely to change its course in one snap election.

The new assembly, however, is by no means a carbon-copy of the old. The communists have greatly increased their representation, due not to any increase in popular strength, but to a division among the center-of-the-road parties. The extreme Gaullists have been replaced by the even more extreme Poujadistes, and the center parties have been very badly split.

At this point, the French assembly will certainly prove to be even more ungovernable than the old. There is no unity in the assembly, or in the population which elected it; and this lack of fundamental agreement on what is to be done will prevent any French government from doing anything until it is too late and too little.

"The person who concerns himself with public affairs in the world today will find, I think, that all he sees, hears, observes falls eventually into a composition; that in all the news that breaks, every hour on the hour, from Karachi to Tunisia, from Berlin to Timbuctoo, there is a thread weaving it all together into the news — the news that the paragon of civilizations, the pride of the millennia, the arbitrator of lesser breeds, the self-crowned prince of human destiny is in retreat. The West is in retreat.

"It is whistling, no longer to encourage others, but to encourage itself. Other civilizations are rising that know not our ways nor our laws, struggling not for a place in the sun, but for the place in the sun. And in the face of what to Western eyes appears a strange phenomenon, a mirage that may, we fondly hope, disappear, we fumble and hesitate. We take in one moment a threatening stance of power, and in the next a pose of timidity, almost servility.

"My country, in particular, boasts of its power while it fears it. It builds air bases around the globe, and piles hydrogen bombs beside the more old-fashioned atomic bombs, and then takes the lead in telling the world how horrible, how senseless, how wicked these weapons are.

POWER

"Power can certainly not be measured solely in terms of armed strength, economic resources, and financial assets. In these the West, though in retreat, is still far in advance of the newer nations. (But) power is related to the will to use it. If a civilization has lost its will; if it has lost its sense of purpose; if it has come to believe that the happiness and material well-being of its people in any single generation is more important than the survival of the civilization itself; if satisfied with today it loses presence of the future and aspirations for generations yet unborn — then it will not know when or how to use the material power it possesses.

TWO NEW DEVELOPMENTS

"Two outstanding developments of our times are disturbing Western civilization, one internal, and one external. The first (may be) called the "revolt of the masses," and the second "the rising tide of color." The revolt, that is to say, of the aliens within Western society, those who have not been assimilated into the meanings of its freedoms or the responsibilities whose exercise can alone insure those freedoms; and the revolt of the alienized peoples of Asia and the Middle East who are without exception in revolt against an inferior status.

THE MASSES REVOLT

"... By the masses we do not mean the poor, or the "underprivileged. We mean a certain type of human being. He is without self-reliance, and concerned above all else with security which he conceives as solely assured from without. He does not think for himself, nor does he have any desire to do so. His reactions are almost entirely emotional... He is very easily led, and susceptible to every wind that blows.

He is by nature, and by himself, timid. But inflamed, and in a crowd, he is terrifying... He is the elevator of demagogues.

Yet, under normal conditions, he is docile — and usable. Modern technological industry has immensely proliferated his numbers by making it possible for him to survive with a minimum of self-directed effort.

The level of his tastes and ambitions becomes, furthermore, increasingly the level of all taste and ambition. In an era of universal education, so-called, the schools adapt themselves to what he wants, for himself and for his children.

If the end of democracy is to establish as the standard the least common denominator, it will surely be, indeed, its end.

PROBLEM OF DEMOCRACY

The problem of democracy is to de-mass the masses; to restore the people; to create a working community of fully conscious human beings; to awaken societal impulses of joyful mutual service; and to make demands upon men to which they will respond because they are men, at least to start with.

EXTERNAL CHALLENGE

The external challenge to the West also comes from masses — from the great masses of Asia and the Middle East... Russia herself is far closer to the Asian mind and mentality than the West has ever been... The instinct for autocracy, the innate submissiveness of the masses, the love of splendour as expressed in the public monuments of rulers, the indifference to human suffering, is characteristic of Asian civilization and of Russian.

So is the innate contempt that the elite of the East feel towards the West.

Communism was born in the West, out of Western, and especially German idealistic philosophy. But there were profound reasons why it struck its first roots in Russia. Today, it is above everything else, a formula for power.

HAZARDS OF RUSSIA

There are hazards for Russia ahead on the road, one is the hazard of intellectual and moral collapse at the top which could crumble the stage structure. Another — as for all countries — is an unsuccessful war brought on by overreaching herself. And a third, though it is not imminent now, is the emergence of a rival in the East with as strong a will to power, as deep a sense of mission, and as certain a sense of superiority as her own.

But to count on any of these things happening, as an excuse for the inner degeneration of the West, is, I think, profoundly unwise.

"Great states and great civilizations, as far as I have read history, have never perished or declined from external pressure alone, and all have gone through times of troubles. But none has been saved by overwhelmingly military forces or by the economic means. For the nation and the civilization, as for the person, character determines destiny. It is the ultimate source of power.

SAC Investigates Bookstore

Investigation Committee

Knowing that books sold in the U of T store are purchased by the store at approximately 20 per cent off the suggested retail price; and knowing the approximate annual expenditure of the store in wages and other business expenses; and knowing the approximate volume of sales, it is easily seen that the store is making no appreciable profit and is not seldom under its budget for the year's expenses.

That is, so long as the present 20 per cent margin is maintained by the publishers (and the store does sell at the suggested retail price), no worthwhile cut can be made in book prices.

While it is true that other retailers in the city do market certain books at a discount, by their own admission it is a "loss leader." The offer is made to encourage other purchases at that store — at standard prices. It is worth noting that one centrally located store sells a laboratory note book at $1.25 while a much superior book sells at the book store for $1.10. When we realize the volume of sales on such books, it is not hard to see that the discount offer is soon recouped.

It is also a fact that ordinary reading material, which does not form the bulk of business at the U of T bookstore but does so at other stores, is sold to the retailer at 40 per cent reduction. This gives this particular retailer an even better opportunity to recover his discount margin.

It is a commonly unrecognized fact that the book store is operated separately from the press, although it is responsible through the press offices to the administration.

The object of the press is to serve the whole student body. An example of this service which has been drawn to my attention applies particularly to the medical students, who were initially most disturbed about the "high" prices. In the past, a number of students working as agents for microscope sales have been using the book store as a display room for their wares. They have actually taken customers into the store, shown them how the "scope works and then, getting a price from the store, have cut the price and sold to the student. However, this year the press approached the wholesalers to have the price margin raised. Since the discount available increases with bulk purchased, the store was able to get a price that would permit them to undersell even student agents.

For this and other similar efforts, the press and store deserve credit.

In spite of this, there is still the problem of efficiency in the store. I do not wish to criticize this phase at the present time, since no constructive suggestions for improvement have been received. Suggestions to improve operations are welcome, and if forthcoming, will be passed on to the SAC through the Book Store Investigation committee.

Callboard

This weekend, all sorts of people are trembling on the verge of great things. After the Christmas quietus, theatres, concert-halls, art galleries, and even movie-houses are drawing back patrons with some unusual offerings.

ART

First of tonight's new bunch must rank the BRITISH SCULPTORS opening at Toronto's Art Gallery, with work of some of the world's greatest contemporary sculptors — Henry Moore, Barbara Hepworth — and of the headline-hitting Reg Butler. The exhibition, held in conjunction with representative works of SIX PAINTERS FROM OTTAWA, lasts until February 12.

For a spare moment on campus, there's still the exhibition of WEST COAST PAINTERS at the Hart House Art Gallery.

THEATRE

Still two evenings to catch up on Tyrone Guthrie's production of TAMBURLAINE THE GREAT at the Alex, before it surges on to Broadway's Winter Garden.

University of Toronto Drama Committee's annual one-act play festival today and tomorrow at Hart House Theatre — with two premieres among the six offerings.

Also, SHAW at the Crest (see below).

BALLET

CANADIAN NATIONAL BALLET, at present on the crest of some sort of a wave, back Monday for a two-week stint at the Alex, with, among other things, three new productions.

MUSIC

The world-famous Paganini Quartet (everybody gets to play a Stradivarius) presents a six-concert Mozart cycle. Starts next Thursday, in the Royal Conservatory Concert Hall.

U.S. violinist ISAAC STERN appears this Tuesday and Wednesday with the TSO at Massey Hall.

FILMS

With the pitiful Christmas crop moved out this weekend, moviegoers now have more of a choice than between GUYS AND DOLLS and THE AFRICAN LION. Best of the bunch — ANIMAL FARM (adult animation) at the International and the tense THE DESPERATE HOURS at the Imperial.

You Never Can Tell With Bernard Shaw

Mr. Marlowe at the Royal Alex has apparently stolen the bright shiners from Mr. Shaw at the Crest. He has also stolen those bright butterflies and dubious duflcoats we are accustomed to seeing at Crest first nights. This is a pity; for audience reaction is infectious, and You Never Can Tell would have profited from a larger, livelier audience. This lack, however, can be attributed to the fact that Tuesday's performance was the first of a two-week run. By next week the production will move with more swing.

For this is an enjoyable play, and on the whole well performed. From Shaw's announcement of his intention to write "a fashionable comedy", one expects something fluffy. But Shaw fluffs nothing. He has the social conventions of the 90's at his finger tips, and he exhibits in You Never Can Tell his usual wit and irrepressibility. He plays with feminism and the duel of the sexes and is almost prophetic upon the results of bringing up children psychologically by the book instead of by the back of the brush.

And his garrulous old retainer of a waiter is given a Shavian twist by having a son who is at the bar—not a potman but a Q.C. It is typical that Shaw chooses here, as in Man and Superman, to poke fun at the unconventionalism peculiarly relevant to his own socialist and "advanced" views. The farcical comedy turns out after all to have plenty of tang to it.

The performance, though on the whole satisfactory, lacked something of the gusto which is needed to present the full force of Shaw's theatrical language and situation, and Shaw's exaggerated shock tactics which to such a great extent depend upon the handing of words often failed to engage us as they should.

Among the individual performers, Janet Reid as the twin daughter, Dolly, gave a charming interpretation of an unsophisticated mix, and beautifully caught the Shavian wickedness. Diana Vandervlis as a more polished mix looked the part, but failed to distinguish adequately between her various states of mind and so gave a muddled characterization. The rest were good—rather more than less but no one was outstanding.

The set was a well-thought-out example of the change-scenes-in-public-with-a-minimum-of-fuss type. The nineteenth century was suggested at its highest, which perfectly suited the airy mood of the play; and the moving doors and windows made the three scenes into three definite locations.

Altogether the play was as Shaw intended, pleasant. It was the third prod. after Candida and Saint Joan, of Shaw's versatility and vitality as a master of the theatre.

Hart House Piano Recital

Reginald Godden, pianist, will give the Hart House Sunday Evening Concert this weekend. Mr. Godden will give an all Beethoven concert, with the Sonata in A major, Opus 2, No. 2, the Sonata in F minor, Opus 57 (Appassionata) and the Sonata in A flat major.

In 1942 when he began his career as a solo artist, Mr. Godden was already a familiar figure on the concert stage as half of the famous piano-duo, Malcolm and Godden. He and Scott Malcolm had given over 400 concerts in Canada and the United States, and traveled as far afield as London, England, for a notable concert in Wigmore Hall.

Since then, and in addition to his numerous recital appearances on radio and concert stage in Canada and the United States, he has been heard as soloist with the Toronto Prom, and Hamilton Symphony Orchestras in Canada, the Jamestown, Baltimore, and Batavia Symphony Orchestras in the U.S.A., and as collaborating

Woyzeck Meets With Woe

Woyzeck is in trouble (as always) in this scene from Vic's production of the play that bears his name. George Buchner's early representationalist drama has its North American premiere tonight at Hart House Theatre, where it opens the two-evening University of Toronto Drama Festival. Woyzeck (second from left) is played by Raymond Carl. The new translation of the play is by Theodore Hoffman.

Disney Draws The Lion

The African Lion, now playing at the Towne and International cinemas, is probably the most adult of all Walt Disney's "True Life Adventure" films. This film, which took Disney's wildlife photographers three years to prepare, is an accurate documentary of the everyday life of the lion, his family, and his supposed subjects.

The fabulous dense herds of grazing animals the lion preys upon, and the disinterested bystanders—from playful baboon to paranoiac rhinoceros—are shown in remarkable proximity. One is overwhelmed by the vast open plains and their population, and by the very fact that such a dense community of stragglers and their prey can survive together through famine, drought, and insect plague.

Disney seems to have taken both lion and motto from the trademark of a hollywood rival, and has produced at last a film that is truly "Natura gratia natura." The African Lion is devoid of the anthropomorphism that made his previous works on American wild life, despite their technical perfection, seem so banal and insulting to the average thoughtful audience.

Perhaps Disney has matured; and yet I doubt it. He is too much of a business-minded man these days to risk educating his public to look outside itself at nature as nature. I feel this tragic film is the product of a situation in which the North American, who rarely sees his own big game, is awestruck enough at the sight of giant giraffes and lumbering elephants as populous as city sparrows. The audience then requires no doggerel prompting from Disney's script-writers, or the slick splicing of his film-editors.

Disney who portraying the more commonplace American animals, probes to the human that creeps by Berman. We laugh at animals when they act like humans and at humans when they act like animals.

If the African Lion lacks any thing, it is time. The usual treatment of food and insect life was missed. Also lacking is an accurate photographic account of the natural changes of these vulnerable lions and elephants, the food chains and population pressures of nature.

This film approaches its spots (all too few) the perfection of nature photography consistently achieved in Sticksell's masterpiece, The Great Adventure in which, when describing the life cycle of a mountain and plague II snow-capped mountains, he denounces that they blot out the sun, and "through the haze the birds were feeding swarms of animals that on a promontory near the plain. Most remarkable feature is the separate feeding of insects, picked in the mud close, fall to dust on sky with the gold of their wings."

Vic Has A Premiere, Too

One of the principal attractions of this year's UTDC One-Act Play Festival, going on the Hart House Theatre stage today and tomorrow, is a play that languished almost unknown for thirty years before anyone dared publish it, and which will now be produced for the first time in North America. The play, George Buchner's Woyzeck, staged by the Victoria College Dramatic Society, opens the Festival's first bill tonight.

Buchner's stern realism was, to put it mildly, ill received in the romantic age in which the playwright lived. Written in 1830, the play was not published until 1882, and was never staged until Berg and his fellow representationalists turned it into opera form, misnaming the title Woyzeck.

William Bennet, director of the present production, describes the tone of the play as "sophisticated sensationalism." In an unreal world where heads roll in the meadow and palls of smoke follow the guilty Woyzeck, Buchner presents deep-etched portraits of the Prussian concentration-camp doctors of a century before Belsen, and traces the degeneration of a neurotic little man who "can't take it."

Starring in the production is title-roler Raymond Carl, with Pamela Thayer as his unfaithful mistress, and Gordon Bruce as the callous doctor. The background of the play, which should mean something to European history students, is Leipzig in 1824.

Like the work of such modern representationalists as Bertold Brecht, the play is episodic, sweeping through 26 brief scenes diffused with poetry and terror. According to Brecht, this method of presentation restores drama to its old role of "everyman's tragedy." According to others, it results only in an effective but fairly facile melodrama. Tonight, Toronto audiences will have their first chance to judge an important modern movement for themselves.

Alberta Probing 'NFCUS' 'Should Federation Exist?'

A nation-wide examination of NFCUS is underway, sponsored by the University of Alberta's NFCUS review committee. Purpose of the survey is to find out "what our national Federation should be doing, how much it should cost, and . . . whether it should exist."

A form letter was sent last week to Students' Council presidents at all Canadian universities, and to campus NFCUS chairmen at universities in the National Federation.

In the letter, Gordon Arnell, president of the Review Committee at Alberta, explained that "we are not trying to subvert our National Federation." What he had in mind was a series of proposals for next year's Annual Conference.

Suggested topics for answers to the letter were:

1. The need (pro or con) for a National Federation.
2. Its purpose and the role of each individual university in the Federation.
3. Cost.
4. Suggested changes in the present organization.

5. Suggested changes in the present program.

6. Relationship of the individual student to the National Federation.

On the agenda for the next regional NFCUS conference, to be held in Hamilton next week, is "The Basic Role of NFCUS."

Reduced Rate Life Insurance

Ottawa: Reduced rate life insurance will be offered to students across Canada not later than next September, it was decided at a recent executive meeting of the national student federation.

Final negotiations with the insurance companies will be completed within the next six weeks, the NFCUS publication items announced. The executive decision implements a resolution passed at last year's NFCUS Conference, favoring reduced-rate student life insurance.

The executive council also: —decided to hold the next national convention at Sir George Williams University, Montreal, after receiving invitations from Queen's, Dalhousie, and Sir George Williams.

—appointed 10 new overseas commissioners, and three old ones, to represent NFCUS overseas. (Included was Scott Symons of this university).

—agreed to hold a referendum on the question of whether non-members of NFCUS may compete for the $900 debating prize.

—will present a brief to the Royal Commission on Canada's economic development in February.

will co-sponsor with WUS a Canada Seminar next August.

Africa Topic At History Club

West Africa is the topic of the next Modern History Club meeting. Guest speaker will be WUS seminar student Marty Friedland, (I Law), and will feature colour slides of Africa.

The meeting will take place in the Music Room, Victoria College Students' Union, Mon., Jan. 16, 8:00 p.m.

THE SUNDAY EVENING HOUR of YONGE STREET UNITED CHURCH

Announces

A SERIES OF SUNDAY EVENING LECTURES on

"Protestantism and Roman Catholicism: Their Similarities and Differences"

By DR. CLARIS E. SILCOX

in

"THE COMMUNITY LIVING ROOM"

of

YONGE STREET UNITED CHURCH

(Yonge at Summerhill Ave.)

Beginning

Sunday, January 8th, 1956

at 7:30 p.m.

(Each of these ten lectures will be followed by a question period in which written questions from the audience may be read out by the presiding minister, Rev. Gordon C. Smyth, and answered by Dr. Silcox)

WHAT WILL THESE LECTURES CONSIDER?

- I: Do religious differences make any difference?
- II: The importance of "The Church" for the world today.
- III: The birth and nature of Christianity.
- IV: Christianity's effort at Universality, or Catholicity.
- V: The Protestant reformation: its necessity and consequences.
- VI: Basic differences between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism — in government and worship
- VII: Basic differences between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism — in doctrine and discipline.
- VIII: Special problems in intermarriage.
- IX: The revival of Protestantism and its importance in the current ideological struggle.
- X: The Catholicity of Protestantism: True Catholicity and true religious liberty.

FOR WHOM ARE THESE LECTURES BY DR. SILCOX INTENDED?

FOR PROTESTANTS who may be considering marriage with Roman Catholics, or FOR ROMAN CATHOLICS who may be considering marriage with Protestants, both of whom need to have some better understanding of the traditional Faith of the other, before making commitments they may later regret.

FOR BOTH PROTESTANTS AND ROMAN CATHOLICS who are uneasy before the thought that they may be "religious illiterates."

FOR ANYBODY AND EVERYBODY who is wondering if and how Christianity, reformed anew, can answer the spiritual needs of our time.

Police Direct U of T Traffic In One Way

One way traffic has been started on the campus. Drivers returning from their Christmas holiday were surprised to find a 'Do Not Enter' sign (right) at the entrance to the Hart House road, by the bookstore.

At the other end of the road, opposite the Queen's Park bridge, they saw a 'Hart House and Bookstore' sign (below) pointing towards Hart House.

As well, university police have been directing motorists in a counter-clockwise direction around the front campus circle for the past several days.

"Orders from the Board of Governors" was the only answer offered by the University police when questioned. It should relieve congestion, said another.

There are no 'One Way' signs on campus yet.

Dominion-Provincial Bursaries — Are Slow In Being Doled Out Hungry Students Question Why

"Why?" Students hungrily waiting for Dominion-Provincial bursaries this week were reported asking this question. The student aid bursaries have not yet been doled out at Simcoe Hall for upper year students.

The awards have in previous years been given out in two instalments, one in the Fall term and one in the Spring term.

Gargoyle Lashes Out At UC's Government

The Gargoyle, University College newspaper lashed its editorial tail yesterday at what it called "antiquated" government within the college.

The Gargoyle proposed a "Super-Council" to replace present executive bodies.

"Student government," the Gargoyle's editorial asserted, "be it at UC or anywhere on Campus does not justify its existence."

The editorial continued: "The main function of our own Lit and WUA seems to be that of a financial board of review, doling out student monies to the clubs and guilds about College, signing cheques to cover their expenses, and checking auditor-fashion, on the spending . . ."

The Gargoyle said that the student body of diverse composition which characterizes the college was its chief handicap. The Lit and the WUA, the editorial said, ignored the problems posed by "the variety that is UC's trademark."

As a means to solving the problems the Gargoyle suggested the creation of a "miniature SAC" made up of representatives from all courses.

"Instead of electing a government from the college at large," the editorial stated, "representatives might be chosen by each course to sit on a super-council which would then direct its programme so as to interest all sections of the enrolment."

As an alternative to this plan, the Gargoyle suggested the setting up of a Debating Society, a Publications Society or Writing Club, and an Athletic Society, which administer all the activities now being conducted by Student government.

But this year one student reported that he was informed by the Chief Accountant that his bursary would be available in one lump sum on January 15.

"I'm tired of living off crusts that people throw away in the Arbor Room," said one student.

The bursaries, which are awarded jointly by the Federal and Provincial governments in each province, are awarded in Ontario by the Department of Education.

A source at the Department of Education explained that since there is no application deadline, applications have been submitted late, which resulted in the delay. Applications are still being received.

The Department of Education hopes to establish a deadline next year, it was said.

NFCUS Offers Fiction Contest Deadline Feb. 15

The deadline for entries to the national student short story contest is February 15, said Elizabeth Binks, in charge of the contest on this campus.

Miss Binks said that three judges, professors of English at Toronto, would select the two best stories submitted from this campus. These two stories would then be entered in the National NFCUS Short Story Contest.

The first prize in the national contest is publication in New Liberty magazine, with payment at their regular rates. Second prize is $50, donated by the Ryerson Press, Toronto.

All entries must be submitted in duplicate before February 15 to the SAC office, said Miss Binks. They must be under 3,000 words, and cannot have appeared before in any but student publications.

Bookstore's Problem: Are Students Honest?

Could the SAC Bookstore be more efficient? Wednesday night at the SAC meeting, Diana Haas, Council vice-president, asked the meeting, and students of the university, for suggestions on the bookstore.

She proposed a file of books available for the students, a self-service system, and more help behind the counter.

Since U of T students are "not completely 100% honest," said one representative, self-service would be impracticable.

"They're just as honest as the people of Toronto," someone replied. John Burbidge, EAC rep, suggested the self-serve system be used after the September rush.

Other proposals were for more student staff, and closer liaison between the University staff and the bookstore so that enough textbooks in large courses would be ordered in advance.

All suggestions should be given to your SAC rep or handed in to the SAC office, said Miss Haas.

University's Job Is WUS Topic

The modern university comes under examination at the third annual Caledon WUS seminar, on the weekend of February 3rd.

Students will participate in talks on "The Role of the University in the Modern World." Small groups will consider: "Freedom in the University," "How practical should a University be?" and "Responsibilities of a university." Applications are due in the SAC office by January 29.

SAC At A Glance

The members of the students' council Wednesday night, besides hearing a report from the Canadian University Press Conference: —decided to give a free Toronto-thesis to all first prize-winners of The Varsity's Literary Issue Contest.

—were pleased to hear that the total revenue of the SAC for the first term, some $45,382, exceeded the total expense by $2,673.

—were sorry to learn that the Handbook was published at an unexpected deficit of $338 dollars. —learned that the Carabin weekend would take place between February 2 and 5.

—hissed at the mention of The Varsity.

—applauded The Varsity's stand on reporting the Bush story when questioned by "The worst public relations man" the SAC has ever had.

—heard that refreshments will be served at the next SAC meeting to be held Tuesday, January 17th.

—learned that next summer's WUS seminar would be held in Germany with possible study in Yugoslavia and Russia.

—learned that there would be a WUS seminar on the subject The Role of the University Today held at Caledon from February 3 to 5.

—were told there were still 175 Handbooks to be sold, at 10c each. —learned that Dave Brubeck would not be available for a jazz concert and the Blue and White would approach Jerry Mulligan.

—was asked by a member if she would have to pay for blood at the General Hospital that she had already given voluntarily to the Red Cross campaign.

—heard a member comment that all Engineers were under 18.

—learned that Ed Schofield, the NFCUS Chairman was travelling with a battle axe to Hamilton for the regional conference.

—heard officially that the president had "OK'd the Bulletin Board" and that it had not arrived yet, although it was expected any day, as "all the red tape had been cut."

—made suggestions for the improvement of the bookstore.

—heard nothing from eight members present, and two who were absent.

Snow Or No Snow

CARNIVAL WILL GO ON!

What Do You Think?

Physical and Occupational Therapy girls couldn't make up their minds as to which of these three beauties should be the P & OT candidate for Toronto's Winter Carnival Queen, so they asked the engineers to make the decision for them. Which one would you pick? Here (L to R) Winona Tefft, I P & OT; Joyce Gillanders, III P & OT; and Dorcen Fogarty, II P & OT, look at the birdie for the Varsity photographer. "But isn't this just like cheesecake?" said one. What do you think? VSP by Ed Hoshkiv

Sports Events Planned For All Type Weather — Accommodation Limited

Skaters may be swimming next weekend, but the Winter Carnival will go on, said Ted Bowen, head of the Carnival Committee, last night. He denied rumors that the Carnival would be postponed if there was no snow.

"We've tried not to make it depend too much on the weather," said Bowen. "If there's no snow, however, the sculpture contest will have to be cancelled," he said. "All other events will go on."

"We have no weather predictions for the weekend," said the Dominion Weather Bureau's forecaster in Malton.

The Caledon Farm has a medium covering of snow now, and Bowen expects below-freezing weather, with good skiing a short distance away from the farmhouse next weekend. "It's about 30 up there now," he said Sunday. "University students will be able to skate, ski, toboggan, or just walk in the snow."

The Chariot race on Thursday will not be in dogsleds, said Bowen. It will be in wheels, and run off in the same way as the Engineering Chariot Race Wednesday. He explained that this was an interfaculty race, with points for the winners counting towards the Carnival's Fox Pelt award. Engineering's Chariot race, an annual event, will be held at 1:00 Wednesday on the front campus. It is closed to other faculties.

Judging for the snow sculpture competition will be on Wednesday, said Bowen. It may be postponed until the end of the week if there is no snow, or the event may be cancelled. Residences, faculties, fraternities, or any other group of students are eligible to enter.

The igloo will be built with imported snow and ice if there's none naturally available, he continued. The two campus Eskimos who will live in the igloo for a night on Thursday, and who will welcome the Campus Queen Friday, have yet to be chosen.

Financial responsibility for the Carnival has yet to be decided, said Bowen, although Hart House is paying advance expenses through the Caledon Committee. "We expect to pay them back," he said.

Saturday at the farm, interfaculty competitions in downhill and cross-country skiing, snowshoeing, woodchopping, and orienteering will be run off. The Carnival committee is also sponsoring a barn dance Saturday evening. Sunday, there are no competitions. The Snow Queen, the one picked Friday, will be crowned in the afternoon, and will be serenaded by the Hart House Glee Club. Students up for the day can hike, ski, toboggan or skate.

There is a limited amount of room for students Saturday night at the farm, the committee announced. Applications must be in by five this Tuesday, and the cost is a dollar. Breakfast is included with this price. For other meals, there will be a cafeteria open most of the day and evening at the farm.

Busess will be going to the farm Saturday morning and Sunday. Return fare is a dollar and a half, the committee said.

Today's Carnival information centre, in the St. Mike's Coop, has bus tickets and application forms for the various sports events, applications for overnight accommodation, and general Carnival information. Tuesday's centre is in the Hart House Graduate office.

Varsity Staffer Finally Finishes H. S. Anthology

A Varsity staffer has just finished work on the world's first Anthology of High School Poetry, and Prose. John Harasti, I UC, was associate editor of the book, to be published in June. Editor is Anthony Frisch, an E. J. Pratt prize winning poet and English teacher at Pickering College.

The two editors waded through approximately 5200 entries from High school students across the country, to pick 250 selections for the book. "It was worth it," says Harasti, "but I shouldn't want to repeat it before the summer, at least."

How was he selected? "It was all very strange," says Harasti. "When I told him that I was the first person ever to flunk the first year Classics Honours course he became very enthusiastic and asked me."

What the Anthology will show Harasti doesn't really know. "Unless," he says, "it is that with the exception of one or two people's work on the campus, nobody's stuff would have been acceptable for the High School Anthology."

Skulemen To Choose POT Rep For Queen-Discriminating Taste

Physical and Occupational Therapy girls, in a quandary as to which of the three nominees for the position of the P&OT candidate for the Winter Carnival Queen, have decided to let the engineers chose for them.

This was announced last night by Jim Vasoff, IV SPS, who said the P&OT girls picked the engineers to decide their choice of candidate for queen "because of the engineers' longstanding reputation for discriminating selection among women."

And, said Vasoff, the P&OT candidate will be chosen by "honest engineering methods."

The Engineers' candidate for carnival queen will also be chosen at the same time as the P&OT candidate, at 1:00 p.m. today in room 102 of the Mechanical Building.

"Everyone, even arts-types, are welcome," said Vasoff.

The two queen candidates will not merely be chosen on their beauty, said Vasoff.

"They will be judged, first of all, on their external appearance.

"India Neutral" - Statement in HH By Commissioner

"We are not more sympathetic to the communist countries than to the west," declared His Excellency Dr. M. A. Rauf, High Commissioner for India in Canada.

To a packed meeting at Hart House Thursday night, His Excellency defined India's foreign policy. Attributing a major cause of India's lack of modern industrial development to colonialism, His Excellency blasted the inadequacy of the US press in reporting the position of India to the western world.

"It is unfair to say that India is communist," he said also adding that, "India will be influenced by neither one side nor the other and we will not make war."

Stating India's foreign policy, His Excellency explained it entailed non-aggression, refusal to join in any treaties, and effort of India in reduction of world tension while peacefully opposing colonialism.

Then they will have to perform endurance contests — such as sawing through logs right on the spot," said Vasoff.

"They will have to be rugged as well as good looking," said Vasoff, who will be master of ceremonies at the event.

Vasoff announced that the entire Skule Nite orchestra — 15 pieces — will be present at the event.

St. Hilda's, UC Debate Topic Is - "Subsidized Marriages"

"Should the government subsidize marriages for University students," is the latest topic to hit campus debaters. The resolution comes under discussion tonight at the St. Hilda's Lit. in a debate between St. Hilda's and their guests from University College. The debate will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in Cartwright Hall.

"This is the obvious answer to all student problems," claims Nancy Sloane, II Trinity speaking for the Government. "It should definitely be the next NECUS project." Opposing the motion, Katherine Oiver, IV U.C., maintains "It's all bosh! Do we want all our co-eds parading around with paposes on their backs?" "A very subversive suggestion," adds Mary Barnett, IV U.C., "It's completely against the spirit of private enterprise!" Nancy Banks, IV Trinity, Government leader promises a battery of new statistics "that will curl your eyebrows."

Sports Vs. News For Kash Trophy

The Annual Kash Trophy game will take place this Thursday at 3:00 in the Varsity Arena. The trophy is awarded posthumously for excellence in sports to the winner of a yearly game between the newsmen and the sporting-types of The Varsity staff.

The trophy is now in the possession of the news staff, who have been challenged to a hockey match by the sports staff.

"The teams have yet to be chosen," said the editor, "but one thing is certain: there will be six players on each team."

ENGINEERING PHYSICISTS AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS

Opportunities for careers in the newer fields of electronics exist in Toronto.

FERRANTI ELECTRIC LIMITED Research Division

has vacancies for additions to its outstanding engineering and scientific staff. Knowledge of electronics is preferred but not essential.

Mr. M. K. Taylor, Head of Research Division, will interview interested students in Room 226, McLennan Laboratory, THURSDAY AFTERNOONS, January 19th and 26th. Those applying are requested to contact the Engineering Faculty Office for appointments.

Interviews at other times may be arranged by contacting Mr. Taylor at RO. 2-3661, local 203.

a regular summer training program for third year students in advanced electronics. This entails weekly lectures by senior staff and interesting work at good pay.

Applicants are requested to contact Mr. Taylor at RO. 2-3661, local 203, to arrange for interview.

The Company's activities are extensive, but the Research Division is concerned mainly with the more advanced electronic research and development.

The work includes: theory and experimental study of transistor applications, magnetic methods of storage and recording, study of delay line systems, design of large logical machines and specialized communication systems, magnetic design and design of atomic control and instrumentation, as well as development of constructional methods.

There is a minimum of frustration in this type of work because of the relatively high degree of freedom in operation presented by these newer fields of endeavour.

FERRANTI ELECTRIC LIMITED Meter Division

has a position available for an electrical engineer interested in light electro-mechanical devices. The work will involve development and quality control analysis of metering equipment with particular reference to watt-hour and energy demand meters in quantity production.

Mr. J. F. C. Harben, Manager of Meter Division, will interview interested students in Room 226, McLennan Laboratory, THURSDAY AFTERNOON, January 19th. Those applying are requested to contact the Engineering Faculty Office for appointments.

Interviews at other times may be arranged by contacting Mr. Harben at RO. 2-3661, local 329.

CUP

Runneth-Over

Toronto: Ryerson Institute should no longer be a firetrap. Steps have been taken to ensure the safety of the nearly 1800 students who attend Ryerson. The 100-year-old building is to have a $15,000 sprinkling system installed. This should eliminate practically all fire hazards at Ryerson.

Action was begun after charges were made in the legislature that Ryerson was a "fire-trap". "Matters of economy have prevented the Institute from starting such a project earlier," an official revealed.

Fredericton, N.B.: The campus police at the University of New Brunswick have been accused of being slack in their duties — especially at formals.

The Chairman of the Social Committee at UNB complained in reference to a recent formal, that the police force as a body were completely inadequate in the duties allocated to them.

"Several cars were damaged in parking incidents. There was also no policing of the ping-pong room, and a number of people were allowed on the floor improperly dressed. This sort of thing greatly detracts from an affair of this calibre, and great care should be exercised when choosing students for this task," he said.

Rock Island, Illinois: Some colleges receive strange and unusual bequests. One of the most unusual came to Augustana College recently. A diamond tiara, which once belonged to Queen Liliuokalani, the last monarch of Hawaii, has been given to the university.

Montreal: After an impressive demonstration of Judo at Sherbrooke recently by the Judokas of the University of Montreal 82 enthusiastic spectators were enrolled as a nucleus for the newly-formed Judo Club de Sherbrooke. In addition, two staff-members of the city's university declared their intention to encourage the sport as a part of the regular extracurricular programme at the university of Sherbrooke.

Hamilton: In a Silhouette editorial, McMaster freshmen are attacked as being "anaemic, lacking in spirit, and possibly also in grey matter." However, the article states that perhaps they can redeem themselves on their Christmas exams. They urge that there be no repeat performances of people not bothering to write their exams and standing outside the door of the Drill Hall taunting those poor souls within.

Kingston: Queen's medical students in third, fourth and fifth years will serve as human guinea pigs in research on arteriosclerosis, which causes 1/7 of deaths on this continent. The effect of various fats and oils on the blood will be studied by feeding the victims a 60% butter diet for 16 days.

Blues In First Place Tie With Two Weekend Wins Ken Linesman Nets Five

By JOHN WILSON

Right wing Ken Linesman fired five goals in two games last weekend as the hockey Blues smothered McGill and the University of Montreal to move into a first place tie with Laval.

Blues laced the Redmen 7-3 Friday night in Montreal, then moved to Verdun to whip the Carabins 6-3 Saturday. Laval scored a 6-2 win over McGill Thursday night leaving them undefeated in three games and deadlocked with the Blues for top position.

Linesman teamed with linemen John Akitt and Don Cossar to account for six of the Varsity goals over the weekend while Brian Anderson's second line added another six. Freshman George Whyte broke a 2-2 tie with the Carabins in the second period with the other Blue tally.

Varsity led McGill 2-0 at the first frame Friday and added two more in the second. The Tribe replied with a goal by veteran Pete Constable early in the middle period, but the Blues scored three more in the final frame to walk away with the win. Al Cecutti played the full game in the Toronto net, turning back 16 McGill drives, while O'Shaughnessy stopped 15 Varsity shots.

Blues handed the Carabins a 2-0 lead late in the first period Saturday before Linesman scored at 19:37, but solo efforts by John MacDonald, Whyte and Anderson put them in front for good in the second frame.

Anderson and Linesman added two more in the third for insurance and the Blues vaulted into first place. Al Fleming returned in goal against the Carabins and handled 17 Montreal shots with ease, while Cy Guevremont stopped 25.

The double Varsity win, coupled with Laval's victory over McGill, makes this Friday's encounter with the Red and Gold an important contest. Always colorful when they visit Varsity ice, the Frenchmen appear to have a much stronger club than last year when they finished in the cellar with only two victories.

The game will be the feature attraction of the four-day Winter Carnival program, and will be an opportunity for the Blues to capture undisputed possession of first place in the league standings at the expense of Laval.

Toronto Wrestlers And Boxers Shine Blue Swimmers Outclassed By CASA

University of Toronto boxing and wrestling athletes defeated their opposite numbers from McGill last Friday in competitions held as part of the athletic night. However Varsity swimmers didn't fare as well, losing by a lopsided 70-13 score to a star-studded group from the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association.

Varsity's wrestlers almost made a clean sweep of their eight bouts, dropping only one and that by a decision. Final figures showed Toronto winning the meet 33-3. Their lone setback came when McGill's Tom Holmes won a close decision over Paul Hickey in a 157 lb. match.

Toronto ended all but one of their winning matches before the three round limit. Only Jim Trenton, who decided Dave Ohasaki, failed to pin his opponent. Freeman Roth at 123 lb. and 177 lb. champ Bob Waugh won by first round falls. 130 lb. titleholder Wally Kamitakahara and heavy-weight Bob Sibthorp ended their bouts in the second round while 147 lb. Rae Smith and 167 lb. Ben Hooyer finished off their opposition in the third round.

McGill put up a much better show in the boxing bouts where they won two of the five matches. Victorious Redmen included 140 lb. John Puddicombe and 145 lb. college champ John Fawcett. Puddicombe decided Mike Callaghan while Fawcett won his bout when Toronto's Dick Wilbur was disqualified in the first round for low blows. In Varsity's winning matches, Russ Reilly TKO'd Bob Green in the first round of a 135 lb. bout and Harold Nightingale decided 150 lb. Bob Kennedy.

Bill "Snooks" Sidney showed indications of a possible title for Toronto in the 155 lb. class when he won a handy decision over McGill's Pierre Raymond, last year's 165 lb. college champ.

The Toronto swimmers were badly outclassed by the CASA group, who won the meet 70-13. The highlight of the meet was the setting of a new Canadian record in the 200 yd individual medley by Tom Berth of the CASA. Berth's time of 2:24 shattered the existing mark of 2:25.9 by 1.9 sec.

Ron Wallbank was again Toronto's top man as he captured the 220 free style and placed third in the 100 yd. event. Unfortunately this was his last performance for Varsity as he is leaving school. Other fine Toronto performances were turned in by Bruce Sonley, second in diving; John Ridpath third in the 300 yd. back stroke; Doug Taylor, third in the 200 yard breast stroke; Doug McCulloch, third in the 440 yd. free style; and Bob Richards, third in the record-broken 200 yd. individual medley.

Kingsway Lumber Drops White's Breaking Tie In Third For Win

By JOHN BROOKS

Just as the Varsity Whites seemed on the verge of snapping out of their lethargic state, the third period blues caught up with them again and they dropped another game, their twelfth in fifteen starts, to Kingsway Lumber by a 5-2 count.

The score was tied 2-2 going into the last frame, when the Lumbermen struck for three unanswered goals to gain the win.

Tom Riley put the Whites in front before the game was two minutes old, taking a pass from Mike Eliik and slamming it past Jim Cruckshank in the Kingsway nets, Johnny McKennell tied it up a minute later from Newton and Allardaye.

The Whites struck early in the second to take the lead again. Lorry Stacey hit ex-St. Mike's star Eliik with a perfect pass, and the big left winger made no mistake. The goal came at the 47 second mark and gave the collegemen the lead until the last minute when Hunter tied it up again from McKennell.

Then came the fateful final for Varsity as Lee, Allardaye and Emerson put the contest on ice for the Lumbermen. Ted Lotocki and Bill Sneddon engaged in a fistic duel at the 11:02 mark and got double minors as a result.

Just Jots . . . Don Borthwick, who is one of the most improved members on the Whites, came up with a great game . . . He and Tom Riley didn't show the 140 miles of car travel under their belt . . . Their feat dropped an 8-4 decision to Ridley in St. Kits on Saturday afternoon.

Cage Blues Score Upset Down Assumption 74-61

"Heap big smoke but no fire." That was Assumption College Purple Raiders, Friday night, as the highly rated Windsor crew were whipped and whipped soundly by the University of Toronto Blues 74-61. The victory was the Blues' first of the year. It came when a victory was needed to give them the confidence that they had to have to make their presence felt in the intercollegiate loop this year. By virtue of the win the Blues were momentarily tied for top spot in the league with Western who trampled Queens 74-42 on Friday.

Varsity reversed their former trend of blowing the game in the last few minutes when they wrapped up the close contest in the last ten minutes. John Dacyshyn, lapping in rebounds throughout the second half, was the Blues top scorer with 18. Thirteen of these 18 points were scored in the last ten minutes of the ball game when the Toronto team began to move. Pete Potter and Ruby Richman with 12 and 11 respectively and Leo Madden and Al Vaichuis with ten each were the rest of the Blues top scorers. For Assumption Howie Triano's 13 was tops. He was followed by Dick Mackenzie, Harry Connor, and Matt Borowicz with nine each.

The Blues were at their top form of the season. Dacyshyn out-jumped some of the Windsor giants by a country mile as he grabbed rebound after rebound. Leo Madden was terrific on both offence and defence, breaking up many Assumption rushes and setting up play after play and led by a fighting Ruby Richman, the Varsity zone defence befuddled and bewildered the Purple Raiders all evening.

Fouls were a big story. Toronto was actually outscored on field goals 42-40. But John McManus' squad, executing the pick beautifully, marched to the free throw line enough times to put 32 points on the score sheet in that fashion.

UC Victors 2-0 Tattle Nursing In Hockey Tilt

Nursing certainly found Friday the thirteenth to their disadvantage as they dropped 2-0 to UC in the afternoon hockey tilt at the arena. Although the fruses had a decided edge in the play in the first two periods, they were unable to put themselves in the scoring books. In the last period, it was UC who seemed to show the spark, but their play was not as superior as the score sheet might indicate.

In the first period, there was no scoring, but this was mainly due to the work of Joan Rudson in the UC nets. Twice she stopped break-aways by Jane Smith of Nursing and she blocked what seemed to be a sure-fire goal by Thora Cook from a scramble in front of the UC net. Again in the second period, there was no scoring and again the "ladies-in-white" dominated the play. Thora Cook and her left-winger, Betty Halliday, missed on several great opportunities to put their team on the score sheet.

The final period produced the best hockey of the game as UC came to life. From a scramble in front of the Nurses' net, Ann Harris fired the first goal past goalie Elaine Barrons. Then on a disputed play, Nancy Moore scored which seemed to be offside and which appeared so to the Nurses.

Nancy Moore went in all alone to slip the puck past Elaine Barrons, who also seemed to be under the impression that the play would be called.

Jane Smith, Sue Beveridge and Thora Cook were the stars for Nursing, while Ann Harris, Nancy Moore and Jane Weber played

Nine of Richman's 11 points came on foul shots.

Varsity pulled away from Assumption with nine minutes to go. Up to this point the lead had changed hands several times, with no squad enjoying a greater than five point advantage. Down 5-4-9, Dacyshyn started Toronto rolling as he lapped in a Blue miss to make it 52-51. Florian Matsalla put the team on top to stay when he sank a one hand jump shot from the corner. Another lay up by Dacyshyn and a beautiful six-foot jump shot by Leo Madden started Toronto on a skein which saw them net four more hoops without an Assumption response. While this was going on Assumption stars Matt Borowicz and Dick Mackenzie were fouling out. Assumption also travelled to the foul line often in this period but like their field goal tries the ball would not stay in the basket.

SHORT SHOTS . . . Another tremendous crowd of 1,500 were on hand to cheer the home team on to victory . . . Other intercollegiate action over the weekend saw Western win two, trampling Queens on Friday 74-42 and McGill on Saturday 63-48. Assumption squeezed out a close 69-59 win over McMaster on Saturday in the Mountain City.

Engineers Tops In Track Meet

Varsity's indoor winter track championship got under way on Tuesday afternoon with the running of the 50 yard dash and the 1 X 1 lap relay. Events are on off in both junior and senior classification every Tuesday and points are awarded for the T.A. Red Trophy.

SPS came out on top in both events on Tuesday. Dick Harding took the Sr. 50 yard dash with a clocking of 5.5 seconds, 2 10ths of a second off his own Hart House record. Bruce Faulkner of Pharmacy was second with Vic's Normie Williams finishing third. The relay was a close affair with SPS edging out UC by half a second. The winning Engineers team, comprised of Doug Mason, John Bayley, Don Shipley and Bill Gelling, turned in a time of 1:13.7.

Ken Zwyer of UC won the Jr. 50 yard dash with a time of 5.8 seconds, with John Bayley (SPS) second and John Robinson (SMC) third.

Tomorrow on the card are the 100 yard dash and the 600 yards. All interested participants are urged to sign up in the Intramural Office before noon in order to save time and create less confusion on the track. Starting time for these meets is 5 p.m.

Seconds Victors Down Lawyers Goldring Stars

Faced by Rolit Goldring's 21 point performance the University of Toronto Seconds maudst Osgoode Hall 74-63 on Friday evening. Goldring started the Intermediates off on the right foot scoring 19 of his 21 in the first half.

It was obvious from the beginning that Toronto had too much power for the lawyers who were out of condition. They outrebounded and outscored Osgoode from the opening whistle. They left the floor at half time with a 48-27 lead.

Joe Stulac, playing a beautiful game, followed Goldring in the scoring parade with 11 points. Bruce Stroud and Ed Brown had 12 and ten respectively. For Osgoode Hall, Dave Bernstein was top man with 18 as he threw in some nice hook shots. Ted Sahaldek had 12 and Norm Dyson, ten. The win was the Intermediates'

the new fanaticism

In the recent Marfleet lectures held at this University, Miss Dorothy Thompson brought home a point that — although obvious — often escapes many in our western world.

The conception of communism as a world-wide conspiracy of evil-minded gangsters, ignorant peasants, and ruthless self-seeking criminals has no foundation in fact. Indeed, if this were true, then the western world would be a good deal more secure and safe than it is now. But it is not true.

Communism is not a selfish conspiracy, it is an ideal. It is a vision, a hope, a prophecy. As Miss Thompson said, Marx's belief that a change in the ownership of the means of production would usher in a rule of saints has no more foundation in logic than the book of Daniel.

But there is no point in maligning the communists' motives, or blackening their characters. They, for the most part, are genuinely convinced that what they believe in is for the real interest of the whole world.

It is this fanatical but genuine faith that makes communism so dangerous for western democracy.

For this idealism is easily sold to the peoples of the "newer" countries of the world — the rising young nations in Africa, Asia, and in South America. The communists point to what their methods have achieved in the short space of 37 years in one underdeveloped nation — Russia: they point to the power and stature that communism has gained for the Russian people.

It is true that this achievement has been made at the cost of incalculable human suffering, but the East has never been as passionately attached to human life for its own sake as has been the West.

It is not so easy for the West to convince these peoples that our way of life is the best. For one thing, Asia and Africa are hostile to the West because of their past experience with colonialism. It is true that Russia is, at this present time, the greatest imperialistic state in the world, but this fact is disguised from the Eastern nations because of their lack of direct contact with Russia and the covering cloak of international communism.

For another, the Western concept of democracy cannot be imposed upon others. Modern democracy, to work, needs an educated people, rationally interested in their own well being; it requires both a willingness to compromise and a basic agreement on fundamental issues. It also needs experience in the art of governing.

In short, democracy to be successful needs those very things which are lacking in the newly-rising nations of the world.

Communism, with its hard and simple solution to every problem, and its appeal to the visionary and idealist, is more likely to make a favourable impression on both the masses and the leaders of the Asian and African countries.

The chief problem of the western world is to meet this challenge. Whether we can do this or not, and how it is to be done, is the great enigma of this present age.

he who laughs first

As Christopher Fry comments in "The Lady's Not for Burning," laughter is a God-given thing. Laughter can save people from making themselves ridiculous, can unite people and can reveal in a flash things that take paragraphs to explain seriously.

Conversely, the easy, scoffing laughter which proceeds most often from ignorance can wither sincere, constructive enterprises, and create enmity and misunderstanding.

A recent example of destructive laughter was the behaviour of certain audiences. Faced with an art form out of date and foreign in feeling, they tittered thoughtlessly throughout, too lazy to make the effort required to understand another's point of view. There is some poetic justice though, for those people by their laughter forfeited the knowledge they would certainly have gained from accepting a sincere communication on its own terms.

To paraphrase: let him laugh first who is not himself ridiculous.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Somewhat Irresponsible

Although I substantially agree with your editorial "an economic or a human being?", I would take strong exception to one statement.

You seem to suggest a necessary dichotomy between "the man of high intellectual capability and integrity" and "the capable administrator," with Canadian University Presidents appearing in the latter category.

I can not subscribe to the notion that these qualities are mutually exclusive. Moreover, I feel that Canadian Universities are noted for Presidents combining a high degree of scholarly ability with their administrative talent.

Thus, I would contend that your comment is not only inaccurate but somewhat irresponsible.

Damnable

The Editor,
The Varsity,

There are several expressions in the English language which were originally composed as aids to the furtherance of racial intolerance. Many of these expressions have found their way into our everyday speech and, although they are sometimes used without the original motives of prejudice, they still carry with them the sting of ignorant discrimination.

In Friday's Varsity, the second paragraph of the lead editorial contained one of these damnable expressions. There would be some excuse for this flagrant sowing of prejudicial seeds if they had been sown by ignorant and careless illiterates.

There is no excuse for the editors of The Varsity.

Economics No God

The Editor,
The Varsity,

The writer of the article entitled "It's Economics That Determines Our Present Society," in last Monday's Varsity, has made an error in judgment. He has "deified" the subject about which he knows the most.

To me, he is as sad a case as the scientist who thinks that empirical evidence reigns Supreme, or the religious 'fanatic' who excludes reality, or the philosopher who believes that all truth will be revealed by human reason. The importance of economics cannot be denied, but it certainly isn't the first cause.

Land Of The

Extended Palm

Paris, on a second view, seemed to have lost its stardust. And rudeness, a Parisian characteristic, can get under the skin of a Western visitor. This article on a second look at Paris was written by a former Varsity staffer now living in Ottawa.

By JOAN (Eddis) MUNN

Ottawa (Staff) — The first time I saw Paris I was enroute to a WUS seminar in Pontigny, France in 1950. The last time I saw Paris I had more time. A year, in fact. My husband, a professor of physics at Carleton College, was on sabbatical leave to study determinism under Louis de Broglie in Paris.

After my first glimpses of Paris in '50, I waxed rhapsodic about the town in a Varsity article entitled "This is my Paris." With the stardust dusted off, my second Paris seemed rude, cold and over-expensive. If I'd only spent a few more weeks there I might have come away disillusioned and panning Paris the way too many run-around-the-Louvre, see-the-Folies-Bergere, climb-the-Eiffel-tower, three-day tourists do. "Why? Maybe because the people seem rude. Parisians stare. His favorite pastime is to sit at a sidewalk cafe and once-over the walkers-by. Turned tail and passing by he ogles the appetit sippers. They're not rude, — just curious and interested.

Army friends of ours spending leave in Paris were saving sous by lurching on bread, cheese, fruit and wine in their car. This en roullant through Paris traffic. A motorscooterer (they're as common in Europe as flies at a picnic) nearly ran amuck through staring at them. The wife, still chomping, finally resorted to the technique that handled Germans. She glowered right back, deadpan. It didn't fizz on the Frenchman. He stared on. But before he pulled away at the next light he waved and called out "Bon appetit!"

I wanted to buy a comb one day. I had no idea what kind of a store would carry them. I asked a woman selling Loterie Nationale tickets from her little office-box on the sidewalk. Patiently and carefully she described where I could find the nearest parfumerie, which all keep combs. I followed her directions as I had understood them but somehow went astray. No parfumerie. Then I spotted a woman d'un certain age (and obviously a concierge) sweeping. Assuming she was from the district and bound to know, I tried again with "Ou pourrais-je acheter une peigne?" She stared at me in disbelief and then explained to the world in general, tapping her chest for emphasis. "Moi! She's asking me where she can buy a comb! How should I know? She thinks it's my business to tell everyone where they can buy combs." Then to me, still outraged, — "I don't know. Go and look!" I left her still shaking her head and mumbling to her broom.

If that had happened when I first arrived, I'd have been terribly hurt. As it was I just laughed. She meant no ill will. It was almost a pleasant change from such countries as Holland and Germany where everyone is so uniformly polite and pleasant that you tire of it and wish they'd say what they felt so that you'd know where you stood. The French don't leave you in doubt. Their liberte and egalite are always bursting the seams, — and fraternite often gets lost under the pin cushion.

For everyone in Paris has the liberte to be an individual. There are few rules. You can dress as you like. Raymond Duncan, brother of the late dancer Isadora, had his atelier around the corner from us on the left bank. In all weather he wears the same clothes. A heavy, wrap-around toga affair of his own unbleached homespun, open thong sandals and a head band to restrain his shoulder-length gray hair. Nobody, not even the kids or the dogs, give him a second stare on the street. Tourists excepted.

Perhaps it's the continual "Service, M'sieur-'dame" which exasperates the visitor more than anything. More than one newsman has described France as the land of the extended palm. The Canadian thinks he's being taken because he looks like an American. It's not true. Everyone pays "Service." And the Frenchman more willingly than the North American. Not just because he's used to having to tip people everywhere but because he realizes this is usually the person's only source of income.

In the movies and theatres you will be asked for "Service" by the woman who shows you to your seat. She isn't out to make a big killing from the dollar customers. She is paid nothing by the management. After the show it is her job to clean out her section of the theatre and get ready for the next performance. In Canada the charge for this is tacked onto the price of your ticket and you pay for everything at the box office. In France you pay less at the box office and the rest when you take your seat.

Like you I would prefer the lump sum system. But after all it amounts to the same thing. The old hands have their charge ready for the usher before they go in. When in Paris, do as the Parisiens do . . . and you'll do very well. For as little as 100 francs (roughly thirty cents) a student (or his wife) can see any of the 60-odd plays running at any one time. Except for a few large theatres in town, three dollars apiece will get you the best seats in the house. Culture, bread and wine . . . the best things in Paris are cheap.

My second Paris is even better than the first.

Celia Franca and Yves Cousineau as they appear in the LADY FROM THE SEA, a ballet choreographed by Elizabeth Leese after the play by Ibsen. This ballet is one of the three new ballets in the repertoire of the Canadian National Ballet appearing at the Royal Alexandra this week.

A young girl born by the sea meets and loves a stranger. Although they are betrothed he leaves her, and in despair of his return she marries a secure widower with three children. Then, of course, the stranger returns and there she is.

The choreographer, Elizabeth Leese is a dance-teacher from Montreal. The ballet itself was first performed in June, 1955 by the National Ballet Company. The other two new works in the present are a full length version of "Nutcracker" and Tudor's Dark Elegies.

200 Mozart 200

By MICHAEL OLVER

Chamber music is nowadays accepted as the best medium for the purely spiritual utterances of a composer. Yet the composers of the 17th and 18th centuries, when art-music made its first bid for a popular consumption, were not, as a rule, concerned with matters of profound philosophy. Their music was written for an occasion, as often as not, to be played once or twice, and then discarded. A few individuals created, as much for their own satisfaction as for others, music that is now judged to be timeless. For the rest, the art developed rapidly and rather mechanically, as it was handed down from master to pupil.

So the larger part of Mozart's chamber music was written to order, or at least with some particular person or occasion in mind. Mozart was enough a child of his time that, even after his expressed independence of the employment of the Archbishop of Salzburg, he was still bound to rely on individual patronage.

It is significant that in his later years, Mozart's music, and especially his chamber music, began to draw adverse criticism, sometimes of a violent sort, from all but the most advanced musical intellects. It was too difficult, too harsh, too dissonant.

It cannot be denied that there are in Mozart's work passages of extreme dissonance, and harmonic and contrapuntal obscurity. Hence it takes a practiced ear to unravel the music, let alone the philosophical problems inherent in it. How Mozart's music would have developed had he lived to break down this barrier of "good taste," as he seemed already disposed to do on occasion in his later works, and to give his spirit unrestricted license, can only be guessed at. The answer lies, perhaps, in the later quartets of Beethoven.

In the last few years of his life, Mozart produced some works that do not appear to have been intended for any particular client, but rather to suit the composer's ego. These, the four last quintets, and especially those in C major, G minor and D major, contain whole movements of deep personal expression. Who but the most uncompromisingly objective of listeners, on hearing the G minor quintet, could deny the pathetic little interjections, the helpless bewilderment in the first Adagio, and in the second, some sort of contemplative appraisal of fortune, good or ill, which leads into the determined optimism of the finale? This second adagio, constructed as a violin solo over a throbbing accompaniment in the three inner parts, bears more than a mere formal resemblance to the operatic aria cavatina, especially that example which forms so essential a part of Mozart's own portrait of the neglected and patient Countess in The Marriage of Figaro.

This quintet, though by no means the last chamber work Mozart wrote, is indeed the most advanced, spiritually and emotionally. It is an early refit in the dykes with which the manners and "taste" of the 18th century had attempted to restrain the natural flow of artistic sentiment from the creative genius of its time.

On the 27th of this month, musicians and music-lovers through the world, will remember with gratitude the birth, two hundred years ago, of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. This University, through the Royal Conservatory of Music, is contributing a series of six recitals, by the Paganini string quartet, led by Henri Temianka. In another program on the 28th of January, the Abenei Trio will perform three of the piano trios.

Six Drama Slants

Last weekend's one-act-play festival, put together as always by the University of Toronto Drama Committee, was (as always) a package of very-much-mixed delights. With the six offerings ranging from Victorian melodramatics to latter-day experimentalism, one or another managed to suit every taste, no matter how depraved. The whole thing, in fact, went over very well.

One of the major contributions was made by adjudicator David Greene, taking time out from CBC producing for a look at his first love, the live stage. Some of his more cogent comments, ranging from the laudatory to the suavely snide appear below:

WOYZECK

(by George Buchner)
Victoria College

This is really less of a play, and more of an unfinished "theme and variations," on humanity struggling in some kind of metaphysical mud. With its smattering of scenes, each one should be produced lovingly, with the emphasis on the relation to the whole. Some of the scenes tonight did come across most beautifully, and all 26 were handled amazingly well from the technical viewpoint. I suspect that Woyzeck (Ray Carl) has great artistic talent, but wish he and everyone else concerned hadn't addressed quite so many lines to the stage.

ARIA DA CAPO

(by Edna St. Vincent Millay)
St. Michael's College

Here is a play that demands stylized acting, but didn't get it. I recognize the director's intention, but don't quite condone it. Setting gay and just right, Peirou (Stephen Frick) comes close to having comic genius—he was wonderfully funny, but altogether too cynical. In fact, almost as cynical as a CBC producer. Actors fine, pace good, but that acting really should have been stylized.

RIDERS TO THE SEA

(by J. M. Synge)
Trinity

The play is one long wail (in a good sense), but the cast didn't wail enough. (Note—as it happens, the leading actress had laryngitis.) The mother (Marilyn Bevis) is splendidly talented, but she didn't let herself rip. The acting was all on a high level, and the simple curtained set used very effectively. The production was tight and crisp, but didn't build to the expected climax.

PURIFICATION

(by Tennessee Williams)
University College

The direction (by Curt Reis) of this play was superb. The brooding music (especially composed by Milton Barnes) was another great success. The chorus helped in this with some inspired moments of musical cadence, even though they occasionally twisted their meaning for the sake of pure sound. Actors generally very clear, and often impressive. Directorally, a little fustily in places with too much going on upstage but usually remarkable in gripping economy. An artist was obviously at work in the setting and costumes.

WHITE QUEEN, RED QUEEN

(by T. E. Morris)
School of Nursing

Should have been gone through five minutes more quickly. An interesting situation, quite well exploited. The individual characterization of the three leading women well handled, and well helped by some thoughtful costuming.

DARK BROWN

(by Philip Johnson)
Trinity First Year

Full of unsuspected delights. Who expected a satire-burlesque? This play has all sorts of funny lines that just can't miss, and the cast seized the opportunities with both hands. It's a play I'll always remember.

End quote.

DAFFYDIL

Last Word

Very shortly after The Varsity was put to bed for the Xmas season, the Medical Faculty of this great University staged its annual extravaganza, DAFFYDIL. This is not, by this time, news; but the twenty-five hundred odd doctors, nurses and Medsmen who saw this year's Daffydil have not forgotten it, and damned if we will.

Daffydil, in the past, has been the campus show par excellence. Running for a full week, and employing casts of hundreds, it has been a sellout every year. As no other campus show, Daffydil is the group expression of the faculty behind it. Its humour is heavily anatomical, biochemical, physiological; prudes might consider bits of it pathological. But to the large proportion of Meds types who yearly bleed, sweat and flunk for it, and the grizzled old M.D.'s who keep coming back to it year after year, Daffydil is THE event of the social season.

Following tradition, this year's show was opened by a kickline comprising almost the total female enrollment of Meds. Linked by a wispy continuity, which could well have been dispensed with, the four medical years put on a skit each. The first, Makebeth, the story of a scottish general and his double-crossing wife (Beth, her name was) was enlivened by the gangling hilarious performances of Paul Clark, as a traveling troubadour and Greek chorus.

Other skits dealt with Ebenezer Scrooge, (villainously enacted by Harry Davidson in long Johns and frightful wig). Uranium hunters (all suffering the occupational inconvenience, atomic piles) and the time-honoured libel of Medical faculty members by the graduating year. Graduating? after that? After the intermission, the whole cast united for a full scale operetta, with some delightful choreography by Syd and Carol Voudran and the kickline. Then they hurried home to cram.

The direction of the Hart House Theatre production, THE TROUBLEMAKERS by George Bellak, a murder story with a college setting which opens this coming Saturday, has been taken over by Leon Major. Robert Gill is at present in hospital in Baltimore with neuritis. This will be the first Hart House Theatre presentation in ten years that Mr. Gill has not directed but he will be back before the end of the month to start rehearsals of HAMLET, this season's Shakespearean production.

MAKING TROUBLE

Campus Profile: Annie Lazier-Artist

By W. R. CHADWICK

For the first time this year, a scholarship to the Banff School of Fine Arts was awarded in the annual NFCUS art contest. The winning composition is an oil painting entitled Tea at Stony Lake. Its author is Annie Lazier, II Trinity.

Miss Lazier is probably one of the few undergraduates who approaches art with that degree of seriousness which the prime consideration in her life demands. However, this is not to say that she is one of that pale, aesthetic breed, so common on the campus, who hide a lack of talent behind an exterior of pseudo-artistic intensity. Far from it, for apart from anything else, her sense of humour which is sometimes satirical, sometimes "basic," is proof against that.

Before coming to Trinity, Miss Lazier attended Lawrence Park Collegiate where, as she says, "I was disapproved of for my lazy ways and got bad marks in everything but Art, which was taught to me by Mr. Dickenson." She spent the early part of last summer, at the Doon School of Fine Arts, where "I was taught by Jack Bechtel, a very good instructor and painter. I advise Doon as probably the best Painting School (Summer) in Southern Ontario." At Trinity, she is art editor of The Review, and also contributes to one of the more discerning University publications, Salterras.

Anne Lazier

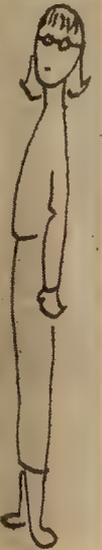

— VSP by Jim Feeley

Her scholarship-winning painting is a humorous composition. In her own words, "it is a picture of four prim ladies with blue hair rowing to tea in a rather unseaworthy boat. The setting of the picture is The Lake of the Woods which has no telephone service, so that the chances of anyone being at the particular place where these ladies are going, are about fifty-fifty. For up there, old ladies visit old ladies, and if the old ladies to be visited have themselves gone out, it will be a trip of little consequence. And these particular Canadian ladies are not going to find anyone at home — and they will huff and puff their corseted selves out of the boat and say YOO HOO many times around the cottage and then they will go away again. It is very likely that the old ladies they are visiting have gone around the other side of the island to visit them."

Another piece of information that your reporter managed to find out in the five minute interview that Miss Lazier managed to fit in, between lectures, was that her two most vehement hates are pigeons and stuffy people. And what does she like? Well, "I don't know whether my Art and Archaeology professors would approve, but actually, all I want to do is paint." And this summer, she will be able to do just that, for the scholarship she has won entitles her to a free term at the Banff School of Fine Arts, so that this year she will be continuing and perfecting her work in the Rockies.

Black Vs. White...

In Southern States Colleges

By The Varsity's CUP Staff

New Orleans, Louisiana: (Exchange)—The segregation controversy, precipitated this time by the Sugar Bowl football classic in New Orleans, has boiled over again in university papers of the southern States. A three-day student riot at Georgia Tech greeted the Governor of Georgia's request that Georgia Tech should not play in the Sugar Bowl against a mixed team from Pittsburgh. An unsegregated audience was to watch the game. After a meeting of Tech's Board of Regents, it was announced that Georgia would play

The Tulane Hullabaloo, a student newspaper, in a recent issue, praised Georgia Tech students for their "enlightened views" and "dauntless stand."

However, the views expressed in the Letters to the Editor column of the same paper showed that the editors perhaps represented only a vocal minority of Tulane University students.

From the "Southern Gentlemen's Organization" came a lengthy letter, typical of the majority of the opinions expressed, on topics which by now had widened to include the Emancipation Proclamation of Lincoln and the fighting ability of Negro troops.

Wrote the author:

"You have lost your pride, and would accept the Black Race into your social life as an equal in all respects. People of your caliber would probably go so far as to intermarry, and mongrelize the two Races. May God forgive you for your willingness to tear down His teachings, and what He started."

"The only conclusion which I can arrive at, after making a serious study of your article, is that you must be ashamed that you are a White Man, and that you would gladly mongrelize with the Negro Race, and see other White people do so."

"If that is what you want, I hope you get your wish. As for myself, I will continue to fight to protect the White Race from men like yourself."

However, another side of the picture was presented, in the Cornell Daily Sun, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y., by a Negro student on the Cornell campus. Her topic was segregation, and the actions of the National Association of America Coloured People. Answering accusations of dirty fighting by NAACP, she gave examples of action taken by white "hate" organizations.

"In this same delta region (as the Emmett Till murder), in broad daylight on the afternoon of Aug. 13, Lamar Smith was shot dead in front of the courthouse at Brookhaven, Miss. He was active in getting voters out for primary election Aug. 2. No one has been indicted for his murder."

"Near midnight on May 7, the Rev. George Lee was driving home in Belzoni, Miss. Another car overtook him and fired two shotgun blasts. He died. He was the first of his race to register to vote in Humphreys County and he urged others to register. He had told a friend on the afternoon of his death, that he had been ordered to remove his name and he had refused. No one has been indicted for his murder."

"... Three people were murdered in Mississippi between May 7 and August 28, 1955. Three people, a boy, a minister, and a layman murdered 85 years after the adoption of the Fifteen Amendment which provides: The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state, on account of race, color, previous condition of servitude.

"In South Carolina, a different form of dirty fighting is being used. This monster can be called the 'economic squeeze play'... It is a vicious hate boycott sponsored by the White Citizens' Council to 'starve' some 3,000 colored people in those two areas who are NAACP school petition signers, members or sympathizers."

"A very effective boycott has been thrown around the Negro businesses in that area. Some white grocers simply refuse to serve colored customers. In cutting off food and other products from Orangeburg's colored merchants, Mayor Robert H. Jennings himself aided the council's boycott which stops items such as bread, milk, soft drinks, and groceries from being delivered to colored neighbourhoods..."

Four Periods Of Eskimo Art On CBC's Exploring Minds

The Art of the Eskimos, (CBC-TV Exploring Minds) was featured this Sunday evening, with Dr. R. McNeish of the National Museum of Canada and James Houston of the Arctic Division, Dept. of Northern Affairs, discussing some of the finer points of this simple, yet affecting art. These two experts, on Eskimo culture structure Eskimo art in four main periods, the later, in course of time being the more realistic in spirit.

In an art program of this nature, the TV camera should be given a greater opportunity than usual to convey the impact of the works themselves, the TV eye having the power to approach from all angles. Sunday's program unfortunately consisted of a steady series of 'flat' representations flashed in and out as if the powers that be were not too sure whether or not they belonged in the presence of such an erudite panel discussion. This may be an extreme opinion, but since panel discussions are fast establishing themselves as the most self-conscious and consequently ineffectual form of TV program (only Nat Cohen seems to be able to carry them off with any degree of success), then it's too bad that with a subject like Eskimo art, we couldn't have had a more artistic presentation of the works themselves and less T-A-L-K. Student Fined For Buck Riot (Vancouver, CUP) — One student has been fined and two others acquitted of disturbance charges, in connection with the Tim Buck student meeting at the University of British Columbia last November. The action was taken by the UBC student court.

John Holland was fined three dollars for "conduct unbecoming a UBC student" at the Tim Buck meeting. At the meeting, a disturbance was created by the students while Buck attempted to speak, and missiles such as aged fruit were thrown at him.

"Speakers invited to the campus should be able to speak without fear of physical violence," said the Student Court Chairman.

Scholarships Listed In "Study Abroad"

More than 50,000 fellowships and scholarships offered to foreign students by over 100 countries and territories are listed in the 1955-56 edition of Study Abroad, published by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization.

The book reports that at present 125,000 students are studying in foreign universities. The United States leads the world, with almost 39,000 foreign students studying there.

France ranks second with 9,300 students and the United Kingdom is third with 8,600. Mexico has the most foreign students in Latin America, and Japan leads in Asia.

Most students studying abroad prefer the humanities (25%), but others prefer medicine (18%),

Need Interest In Settlement Students Are Ignoring It Now SAC Committee Investigates

A direct appeal for student interest in the University Settlement was made Thursday afternoon by Mr. Harry Morrow, director of the Settlement. He was talking informally to 8 students, members of the SAC's Settlement committee.

Morrow explained that there was not enough contact between students and staff of the University and the Settlement.

"Outside of the volunteers who work here each week," he said, "few of the students even know we exist."

"At first, the Settlement was completely financed and staffed by University staff and students," Morrow said. "Now it is financed by the Community Chest, and the students have lost interest."

"Work at the Settlement is an excellent chance to see how the 'other half' live," he said. "Work with New Canadians and low-income families is a valuable adjunct to university education. University students can help at the Settlement through volunteer work with children and adults, in recreational activities and language classes, through counselling at the Settlement's summer camp, with painting and repairing bees, and with financial and material help."

Earlier, the SAC committee had been shown afternoon activities of the Settlement, such as the Sunshine Club, for retired people over 60, and a folk-dancing school.

In the other Settlement building, a programme for girls eight to twelve was underway. An impromptu can-can was staged for the committee, and they saw the tumbling room, clay-modelling, girls decorating a doll's house, and inspected the Settlement's train room.

The Settlement also has a nursery on week-day mornings, language classes for New Canadians in the evenings, and bi-monthly socials for all members.

Teen-agers have regular Saturday night dances. There are 11 different clubs for adult members of the Settlement. Biggest of the Settlement activities is the music school, with 160 individual students plus students in classes. The Committee, formed by the SAC to investigate close university ties with the Settlement, will back report to the SAC at its next meeting on January 25th.

South African Government Examines Racial Separation

Prague, Czechoslovakia: (IUS News)—The South African Government has launched a new inquiry into "apartheid" (racial segregation) in South African universities, reports the IUS News.

A previously appointed commission had recommended that separate institutions not be established for native and white students, due to financial considerations. This commission also had recommended that non-segregated universities be allowed to remain open.

The IUS News reports that the Nationalistic government of South Africa, which is dedicated to the policy of racial separation, was dissatisfied with this report and asked for a new commission.

The terms of reference for the new commission include: the determining of the earliest date on which segregation could begin, subjects to be studied by the separate races, and general control of education.

The government has also stiffened racial requirements, forcing several African students to leave coloured colleges.

STAMPEDERS LURE MASTERSON WEST WINS VARSITY WINNER

Battling Bob

Has 3 Champions Since 1947 But More Opportunity In West Who Coaches the Blues Now?

By JOHN WILSON

An era in football history at the University of Toronto came to an unexpected end last weekend when Calgary Stampeders of the Western Interprovincial Football Union announced the signing of Bob Masterson as General Manager for the 1956 season.

Masterson's decision to journey west came as a complete surprise to football circles here, leaving a gap in the Varsity coaching staff that has been capably filled for the past eight seasons. "It was a wonderful opportunity," the Blue coach explained, when asked why he chose to drop the relative security of his position on the Toronto campus.

Masterson will not be involved with the coaching end of the Calgary club, but will be "handling players, contracts, and other details connected with a football club." Quite a few applications were received by the Stampeders after former GM Bob Robnett resigned, but Masterson's was not among them. The Calgary club learned of the possibility through other sources and contacted Masterson at his home in Port Credit.

As a result Bob flew to Calgary Friday and came to terms, then cleared the arrangements with Warren Stevens, U of T Athletic Director. The Stampeders announced the finalization of the contract Sunday night.

Although he will not be connected with the coaching of the WIFU club, Masterson is generally recognized as one of the finest football minds in the country, and a clever defensive coach. He will make a valuable addition to the Calgary organization with experience gained in both the American and Canadian gridiron scenes.

Bob spent four years at Miami University, captaining the Varsity squad in his last two seasons, and has added eight years of play in the National Football League with the New York Yankees, New York Giants and Washington Redskins. While with the Redskins he was named to the NFL all-star team at end.

Masterson assisted Bobby Coulter with the Blues during the season of 1947 and then took over as head coach in 1948, promptly winning the Intercollegiate championship. Since then he has added two more titles to his record, and has seldom been without a close contender for the Yates Cup.

During the winter season Bob doubled as head basketball coach, but turned this job over to John McManus last fall. Robnett's resignation becomes effective February 15, but Masterson will have quite a few odds and ends to clean up before he can head for Calgary.

There can be no doubt that the Stampeders have acquired a good man for themselves, but Masterson's departure leaves the Athletic Directorate with a rather (Continued on Page 2)

Procreation Advocated More People Needed

Since the government subsidizes oil, butter, and wheat, why does it not subsidize babies?" queried Nancy Banks, supporting the motion, "The Government Should Subsidize Student Marriage."

The occasion was last night's debate between St. Hilda's and UC women, where the motion in favor of subsidized marriages was defeated 18-7.

Canada's main needs are more people, more people to lead these people, and more university students, she continued.

With early marriage social activity would greatly decrease, students would save money and would be able to concentrate on their studies, she said.

Finally, the Roman Catholic Church feels a woman should ideally bear her first child at the age of nineteen, concluded Miss Banks.

The first speaker for the opposition, Catherine Oliver, contended that if such a motion were passed the difficult years of college would coincide with the difficult years of marriage.

The babies that would invariably arrive would mean diapers, bottles and broken sleep.

Mary Barnett, the last speaker of the evening announced "that she was shocked at the lack of maidenly modesty in the government. When a husband was studying he would have to have the book on the table in front of (Continued on Page 4)

Prague; (IUS News) The IUS News reports that almost 90% of high school students in Iraq failed on the last national educational examinations.

An Iraqi student newspaper charged that the government had deliberately failed so many students in order to save money in the Department of Education.

It accused the government of spending far too much money on military preparedness and on police, rather than education.

The student paper said the government had closed down 15 secondary schools and 12 intermediate schools already. The paper said the national budget is "overburdened with military expenses. As a result, the budget of the Ministry of Education is now less than the sum allocated to the police force."

They Say Of Bob ...

President Smith: "I feel deep regret at the departure of Bob Masterson. He has always displayed splendid spirit of sportsmanship — he produced teams to play for the game's sake, not for championships." Eddie LaBoarde, spokesman for the group directing Stampeder activities: "He met with us Saturday, and it wasn't long before we realized he was our man." Calgary Football Officials: "Masterson will run the show. He will be over everybody, including coach Jack Hennemer." Varsity Athletic Director Warren Stevens: "Bob will be happier in Calgary, especially with the big pay boost. And he'll do a good job, but it puts us on the spot, trying to find someone to take his place. We haven't even considered a replacement and it will be some time before we find one."

Masterson himself: "Canadian football has a tremendous future, and I would like to go up with it. Although I hate to leave Varsity, the opportunities, including financial, were just too good. It will be hard to give up coaching but the scouting and signing of players should prove interesting and challenging."

(Continued from Page 1), interesting problem in selecting his successor. Yesterday afternoon's newspapers suggested an import coach from possibly the NFL or the Big Four, but there are a number of candidates right here on the campus.

Not the least of these is Dalt White, who assisted Masterson with the Blues last fall. Dalt has been associated with the coaching staff for a number of years, and is well respected among the athletes on the campus. Another possibility is hockey coach Jack Kennedy, who coached the intermediate football squad last fall. Still another candidate of unquestioned ability is Bobby Coulter, presently directing the University extension, who was Masterson's predecessor.

Conjecture has often named candidates outside the University, among them Bernie Hodgetts, versatile coach at Trinity College School in the Little Big Four. However the University would experience some difficulty in luring Hodgetts away from his position at TCS, where he teaches Upper School history when not directing the school's gridiron campaign. He turned down an offer several years ago from Queen's University when Frank Tindall had planned to retire.

If the University cannot select a successor to Masterson before next fall there is a good possibility that Athletic Director Warren Stevens would coach in the interim. Stevens coached the Blues for a number of years after his appointment in 1932, and brought them out of inactivity in the first year after the war.

Whoever his successor, there is no doubt that Masterson's departure marks the end of an era in Varsity football. A coach who expects his players to give one hundred per cent, and is always seeking perfection in his football coaching, he himself in return gives one hundred per cent in his attention to thorough teaching, down to the minutest detail of the game. His record at Varsity is indeed enviable; we shall not look forward to his departure.

The trouble begins to brew the first day of the holidays. John and Marsha resolved to catch up on the course, blow the dust off the books they bought in October. To their terror they discover that going out six days a week all fall has left them with a truckload of work to do. The result? When the parties are over, they commute back to classes with a New Year's Resolution clutched desperately in each hand, and resign from everything but the Book of the Month Club.

Memberships drop, there are even more empty seats at committee meetings, college shows are re-cast, and teams pass out of existence. Everybody is suddenly a serious student except worried guys, responsible for these ac-

so long

The end of an era is an apt phrase to describe the departure of Bob Masterson from this campus. In his eight years at Toronto, Bob has brought home three football championships to this university, and has come close on numerous other occasions.

But it is not just because of the championships that Bob has brought home to Toronto that his departure will be notable. His friendly face, his cheerful smile, and his driving personality will be sorely missed on this campus. We are sorry to see him go.

not again!

It again appears as though the national federation will be subjected to a re-examination. Meetings both on this campus and at the regional conference this weekend in Hamilton will "re-examine" the fundamentals of this organization.

If all the student conferences, debates, examinations, articles, and speeches on NFCUS were laid end to end, they would stretch from one end of this country to the other.

We hope that this re-examination will produce some new and refreshing approach to the seemingly insoluble problem of NFCUS. But we doubt that it will.

it's quitting time

There is a strong tendency at any time for the responsible few to work night and day and the happy many to take to the street when the last lecture peters out at three o'clock. With everyone dropping out of campus activities as though Communists had suddenly been discovered on the executive, the situation is that much worse.

Now, who could complain about a student getting serious about the course? Who could complain indeed, except the ones left holding the bag.

They can only hope that next year in the optimistic time of the signing of membership lists, that John and Marsha will think then of their responsibilities to the people they hope to work with, and not carelessly promise support that they won't be able to give. L. G. L.

Not Rational

The Editor, The Varsity, In your editorial on Monday, 16th January, you stated that "modern democracy, to work, needs an educated people, rationally interested in their own well being." I could not agree more; but surely you do not wish to imply that the western world is composed of educated and rational people. Miss Thompson spoke of our civilization being threatened by two forces, one external and one internal.

The internal one, "the revolt of the masses," surely leaves one solution to what also might be called "the great enigma of this present age." That solution is better education, teaching men and women not WHAT to think, but HOW to think.

Last November in Montreal, Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, former president of Chicago University, attacked the whole concept of educating people for a particular vocation or role in life. "If every man is to be a ruler ('democracy' literally means 'ruling by every individual of a nation'), every man must have a ruler's education." But the proportion of the electorate that vote in Canada and the United States would not lead one to believe that the 'man-in-the-street' cares even, let alone bothers to do his duty.

In Australia, not voting is punishable by a fine, but this is only the second half of the solution. Anyone has enough common sense to put an X opposite the first name, to avoid punishment. Education of the lower classes has definitely improved in the last decades, certainly. But either too much or not enough. They have been taught how to get more money for their own benefit, without also being taught that the individual must invariably suffer a little so that the state may maintain a stable economic level.

And when the masses do not suffer a little, they suffer much—in a stock exchange crash and depression.

True, the western individual is "interested in his own well being," but not "rationally."

Philip P. B. Wood, II Classics.

Ed. Note: We did not mean to imply that the western world is composed of educated and rational people.

Twelve Night Prowlers Arrested For Indecency

Twelve charges of gross indecency have been laid by special squads of city police following a crack down on the homosexuals of Philosopher's Walk.

The arrests followed The Varsity's story two months ago on the night-time prowlers of the area.

Plainclothes detectives from the morality squad have been patrolling the area which runs north from Hoskin Ave. to Bloor St. At least two of the men arrested gave police addresses located on the U of T grounds.

Police say they have known about the practices on the walk for some time. Said one officer, "whenever you get a large park you are bound to run into this problem. Even the best police force could never arrest them all."

The university area was termed by the police "not as bad as in some other cities."

The special squads have been assigned to combat an increase in offences. Numerous complaints have been received at The Varsity from students who have been approached on the walk.

"These people have no respect for the weather," commented one morality officer wryly. "There's as much activity when its ten below zero as when the flowers are out."

An employee of a restaurant, near the walk has said that the area has been clear of the offenders for the past two weeks, as a result of police activity.

Police also believe the number of recent arrests will lessen the danger from strong-arm artists. Robbery with violence occurs frequently in areas haunted by homosexuals, they said.

Federation Pros And Cons When EAC Meets Tonight

The third general meeting of the External Affairs Committee will be held tonight in Falconer Hall at 7:00. Reports will be given by the Committee chairmen of WUS, NFCUS and Week-

Of particular interest at tonight's meeting, said an EAC spokesman, will be a discussion of the pros and cons of NFCUS by Michael Shoemaker and one of the NFCUS co-chairmen, Ed Schofield.

Vic Debates French Gov't

A panel discussion on the recent French National election will be the feature attraction at the Vic French Club meeting tonight at 8:15. Panelists will be Professor Jeanes, and Professor Wood of Victoria College, Max Lasman of Paris, Jacques Mignot of Tours and Keith Spicer.

The panel will discuss the meaning of Poujadisme, the possibilities of reconciliation with Mendes-Faure, France's future in NATO, the Big Three, and North Africa, and France's ability to govern herself in a democratic manner.

Following the discussion there will be refreshments, dancing and a sing-song.

This discussion should prove fruitful in view of the Ontario Regional Conference to be held January 21-22, said Schofield.

The co-chairmen of NFCUS on this campus will attend the conference, and much time on the agenda is devoted to discussion of national matters, including the basic role of the federation.

The meeting is open to all, and anyone interested is urged to attend, said the spokesman.

The EAC is a branch of The Students' Administrative Council.

Carpenter Claims

Eskimo Equality Essential

The white man's belief in the inferiority of the Eskimo native is the real problem in the Canadian North today.

"We must learn to accept the Eskimo on an equal basis," said Professor Carpenter, lecturer in Anthropology, Sunday night in his talk on the Eskimo at the Canterbury Club. The white man has accepted the spoils of the north but not the responsibility, Carpenter added.

The Eskimo, habitat, and means of livelihood were touched on in the talk. Much progress has been made in opening up the North, in the last few years, said Carpenter. There are no longer isolated Eskimo tribes, since all are within three days of large depots.

Missionaries in the Arctic are 82 per cent Anglean according to the census, but Carpenter feels that the Catholics have more influence in the Central Arctic because many Priests live among the Eskimos.

EXPECT DOM.-PROV. GRANTS STATES TREASURY OFFICIAL

Cheques Due Jan. 15 Cashier In The Dark

Relief is in sight for financially impoverished students waiting for Dominion-Provincial Bursaries.

An official of the Ontario Treasury Department said today he expected the cheques would reach the University by Friday. "They were held up reaching us," he said, "but I have given orders to the cheque-writers to expedite them."

Cheques for varying amounts are being made out now at the Treasury Department at Queen's Park. They are requisitioned by the Education Department. The bursaries are awarded each year to upper school students and students at Teachers' Colleges and OCE. The Federal and Provincial Governments jointly foot the bill.

The cashier of the University Chief Accountant's Office, Mr. J. R. Prince, said today that his department had heard nothing since it had received word that the cheques would arrive on January 15 (three days ago).

The cashier added that students who had second instalments to pay on their fees could wait until they received their bursaries, provided that the amount they would receive was more than outstanding fees. If there is a difference between these two amounts, any balance of fees must, however, be paid by the deadline on Friday, asserted Mr. Prince.

Students have been confused this year with the bursaries for the method of payment has been changed. Usually they are paid in two instalments, one in the fall, one in the spring term. This year they are being paid in one lump sum. Some students were unaware of this until a few days ago, and were not sure whether they had been awarded bursaries.

The delay has caused temporary hardship to many students, who have had their budgeting calculations upset by the change in routine. Methods of collecting applications apparently vary from college to college. This also applies to information given about awards, and when and how they are to be collected. In some cases, officials are as much in the dark as students.

In spite of this, however, it seems that the machine is moving, and that Dominion-Provincial Bursaries will arrive soon.

PLONGE dans l'eau glacée pour sauver UNE DÉSESPÉRÉE

"C'était tout naturel..."

Siegfried Neukirch, exchange student from Toronto studying at the Sorbonne, gained wide acclaim in Paris newspapers when he stripped to rescue a drowning woman in the icy waters of the Seine. It marked the woman's third attempt at suicide.

Student Strips, Saves Suicide

Paris (Exchange): Siegfried Neukirch, a University of Toronto student, pulled a suicide out of the Seine last week. He is a Modern Languages and Literature student at UC, taking his third year at the Sorbonne.

"You know, it was quite natural and anyone would have done the same thing in my place," he said later. "I saw people leaning over the quay, in front of the Louvre. I am quite curious and when I found out that a woman had fallen into the water, I parked my bike."

A few minutes earlier, a young woman had jumped into the Seine, and was drifting to the middle of the river. Some of the hundred spectators had gone to get the gendarmes, and firemen.

Neukirch quickly stripped to his shirt and socks, and dove into the Seine. The "nonplussed on-lookers seemed at least as interested in this spectacle as in the nearly-drowned woman."

He arrived just in time to catch the unconscious woman before she sank. The firemen reached the scene quickly and revived her.

NFCUS Is Told Toe The Mark Or Else

The University of Toronto senate has threatened to sever affiliation with the NFCUS-sponsored inter-regional exchange scholarships by 1957.

The scholarships give students belonging to the federation an opportunity to spend their second-last school year to train at another institute in Canada.

It is understood that the senate's vote stems from the feeling that both the federation and Toronto students are apathetic to the plan. The motion said only that Toronto's participation in the scheme would end in 1957, if "no progress was made."

This year only two exchange students are at Toronto, from Dalhousie and British Columbia Universities. No Toronto students are making use of the scholarships.

The charge that NFCUS has paid little attention to the exchange plan is probably justified, said co-chairman Bill Smyth (III UC). "However, I think the situation can be remedied."

"In my opinion this project is one of the most important NFCUS has undertaken, and the Toronto committee intends to concentrate on it this year."

Under the plan, the universities of Canada are divided into four regions as follows: 1) the University of British Columbia, 2) the universities of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, 3) the universities of Ontario and Quebec, 4) the universities of the maritime provinces. Thirteen universities take part.

Students who transfer from one region to another, although Ontario students can go to a French-Canadian university in Quebec.

Applicants are judged on the basis of participation in extra-curricular activities and scholastic competence. Applications must be directed to the University registrar before Feb. 15.

Skule Chariots Carouse Today

The greatest sports event on the campus' say the Engineers. It's Skule's Annual Chariot Race for the Jerry P. Potts Trophy, and you can see it today at 1:00—around and around the front campus.

Forensic Finalists In NFCUS Joust

The National Debating Finals will be held at the University of Western Ontario the weekend of February 23-25, announced Ivan Cody, Chairman of the NFCUS Debating Association. Winners of the four regional debating leagues will participate in the tournament, which will decide Canada's debating champions for 1957-58.

Carnival At A Glance

A few new items on the Carnival came in last night.

Igloo-dwellers (hrrr) for Thursday night are Barry Mitchell and John Sanderson, both I SPS.

The Snow Queen Contestants will appear on "Tabloid" Thursday night at 7:00 p.m., before the preliminary judging.

A correction on prices. Bus fare is $1.80 return to the farm, overnight accommodation is $1.50 and it costs a buck to be at the farm or compete in the events.

"If there's no snow on the ground, use ice, or find your own," said Jim McCutcheon, head of the Winter Carnival's Snow Sculpture Contest last night. He announced that the judging for the contest has been postponed until Friday afternoon, instead of today. Entries must be made by 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon, at the Hart House Graduate Office, he said.

Going Abroad? WUS Can Help Beginning Now

Confused European travellers can get help from WUS, starting today. Ian MacDonald leads off in the first of a seven week series on continental travel. He'll discuss ways to save money, papers, and other basic necessities.

Each Wednesday following, experienced travellers will deal with specific problems in individual countries. The series will close Feb. 29 with a panel of foreign students giving their views of foreign travellers in their native countries. The discussions are in Room 37, U.C. from 1 to 2, starting this afternoon.

The university population in Canada may well be doubled within the next ten years. This is one forecast made in the special education section of the latest University of Toronto quarterly.

President Sidney Smith, in his article on the future of Canadian universities, pointed out that this increase in university enrolment is one of the conditioning factors determining what will happen to higher education in the future.

"The increasing demand in society for professional people" is the second condition factor for Canadian universities, said President Smith. This increasing demand compels a correlative expansion of the universities' facilities for such training, President Smith pointed out. Furthermore, there is a growing demand that the university make available to as many people as possible the intellectual resources of which it is custodian.

Dr. Smith's conclusions were that Canadian universities would have an expanded enrolment, though on a more selective basis, and that universities would continue to be jealous of their standards. "They will continue to respond with discrimination to the need for professionally trained men and women, at the same time making sure that professional courses are rooted in fundamental principles, and do not weaken the core of the university, the faculty of arts."

He said that the university of the future will be conscious of its wider obligations to society, without abandoning its position as the custodian of the best.

However, Dr. Smith points out, university expansion, and the new demands, all take money. "The financial situation of universities, which has never been particularly rosy, will become crucial—indeed, intolerable—without extensive financial support," said the President.

The problem of university teachers, and their salaries, is an especially pressing one, Dr. Smith suggested.

"There must be a recognition of the fact that university teachers make up a precious asset of our national resources," declared President Smith. "They follow a profession that calls for long, arduous, and expensive preparation, and they engage in an activity that is continuous and complex, and demands the energies of the whole man . . . Too few Canadian universities can pay the salaries that are even close to being commensurate with the value of the services received."

Dr. Smith suggested governments and business enterprises as sources for the necessary additional financial support. "I am confident, however," he writes, "that with planning and co-operation on a national scale, we in Canada will achieve a distinctly Canadian solution to our problems of higher education, provided that Canadians value their universities sufficiently to give them greatly increased support."

In the same section of the Quarterly the bogie of specialization and the invasion of technology into the university were discussed. Dr. Eric Ashby, of Queen's University, Belfast, felt that specialization may soon be regarded as the essential part of liberal education, rather than as something to be bemoaned. Likewise, technology must be assimilated into the university, Dr. Ashby feels.

"If the universities were . . . to create and to communicate a technological humanism, their paramount function in modern society would be established, and the preservation of their traditional prestige in society would be assured," he wrote.

a blot on the conscience of a country

Again, Dresden is in the news. Canadians who used to point with scorn to the United States or to South Africa must be feeling very uncomfortable these days, as day after day newspapers carry stories on the Dresden cases.

Dresden has become a symbol for Canadians. It stands for bigotry, for intolerance, for a lack of understanding. It stands for a rejection of both morality and reason. It is a blot on the conscience of a country.

This university can be proud that there are people associated with it who dared to brave the prevailing social attitudes of "not making a fuss," and who have resolutely and determinedly pursued the Dresden case. These people have not been cowed by the pressures of a society which would rather ignore social injustices, than make the effort to correct them.

This university can also be proud that it was students from this campus who forced the faltering Ontario government to finally take action against the Dresden shopkeepers, and prevent a complete farce from being made of the Ontario act forbidding racial and religious discrimination.

But more is needed than prosecutions to remove the stain of Dresden from Canadian life. Each of us, like those who fought the Dresden case so long and so arduously, can perform a like service by speaking and acting against intolerance and bigotry wherever it may be found.

For P. Potts

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We would like to clear up the confusion about the two chariot races. The original, one and only, oldest-established chariot race will be held by the Engineers on Wednesday. The winners of this Herculean event will represent S.P.S. in the Dogsled Race of the Winter Carnival.

Historically, this event dates back to several years B.C., give or take a couple of decades. One day when Caesar was sitting around with nothing to do, pinching concubines and feeding Christians to the lions, he called his engineers to solve his boredom. Now everyone knows (from Skule Nite) how important engineers were to Caesar's success and here again, an engineer who had just invented round wheels to renovate the T.T.C. solved the problem.

He suggested making chariots and holding races, no doubt foreseeing more job openings such as bookies, pari mutuels and the motor car industry.

One-eyed Benny makes no predictions on this race since the odds seem to be for Ceramics, an extinct course, which has won for the past five years. The cup for the 162nd annual race is the Jerry P. Potts Memorial Trophy (racing's most coveted trophy), a worthwhile prize.

Blues Tackle Laval Fri. Battle For League Lead

Currently tied with Varsity's defending Intercollegiate champion Blues for the league lead, the Rouge et Or of Laval will invade Toronto ice Friday night as the feature attraction in the University's Winter Carnival.

Blues, fresh from twin victories at the expense of McGill and the University of Montreal, will be out to snatch sole possession of first place. Backed by the league's leading scorer, Ken Linseman, they may just do this. Linseman has ten points in three league games, with six goals and four assists. The six goals are enough to be better than sharpshooters from down Quebec way, while Don Cossar's five assists make him the league's top playmaker. Cossar is tied for second spot in the individual scoring race with Marcel Duhamel of the University of Montreal. Both have seven points although Duhamel has played one more game.

Highlight of the improved Laval squad will be the three Lague brothers, Maurice, Robert and Michel. Robert and Maurice were with the Rouge et Or last season while Michel is a new arrival. All three are well up in the scoring race with five points each.

Laval have three wins to their credit in three league games, two at the expense of the Carabins and one from McGill. It scores mean anything the Blues and their Quebec rivals should be about equal when Friday night rolls around—both have defeated the Carabins 6-3.

Along with the game itself, there will be numerous other attractions, among them an exhibition of figure-skating, and a challenge hockey match between St. Hilda's and the Skule Sevens.

SMC Wallops Sr. Meds Dents Lose To Jr. Skule

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

St. Mike's A and SPS Juniors, both apparently destined to wind up in the interfaculty basketball finals, scored victories in yesterday's action. In Group 1 play the Irish walloped Sr. Meds 58-22, while in a Group 2 encounter, Skule downed Dents A 41-29. The wins left both with a 2-0 mark.

St. Mike's started off their game with a bang, scoring 13 points without a reply from Meds. Some excellent rebounding and defensive play by Ed Callaghan sparked the Irish to their fast start. He and Regan split 12 of the winners' first 13 with Regan, hitting on a couple of 15 foot fadeaway jumps. Joe Griddlestone's fine rebounding also played a key part in St. Mike's leaving the floor at the end of the first period with a 25-6 lead.

Taking advantage of the doctors' sloppy play, the Irish went on to win easily. St. Mike's made up to a large degree of American players, used the combination of a good passing attack and sharp defensive work to constantly befuddle the opposition.

Regan was high for the Irish with ten while Callaghan and Carmen Catalano were close behind with nine each. Thompson's six were tops for the losers.

The Junior Engineers were hard-pressed to earn their win as Dents stayed with them all the way to the third and final period. The poor first period shooting of the winners' Hank Galka and Bill Fraser nullified the Engineer wide margin in play and left the teams in a 12-12 first stanza tie. Despite his poor marksmanship Galka led the first period scoring with seven points.

The second period story was one of SPS scoring and Dents coming back to tie it up. Two beautiful jump shots by Dents' Al Riva tied the game at 22-22 but hoops by Primeau and Wojden gave SPS a 26-22 second period lead.

In the third period Jerry Gray of the Dentists missed two lay-up shots that would have tied the score. The Engineers then outscored Dents 15-7 to wind up with their 41-29 win. Galka and Fraser topped the winners with nine and seven points while Dave Lambert scored eight for Dents.

Whites Meet Leaders

Strange as it may sound, the Varsity Whites can move into second place and possibly, depending upon the outcome of the other game, the top spot in the League as they take on Lyndhurst Motors tonight at 8 p.m. in Varsity Arena.

The explanation for this is that the 23 game THL Major Series Schedule is divided into two series. The first series of 14 games ended last Wednesday, and the second series began on Saturday night. With the start of a new series, all teams start off with a clean slate. Lyndhurst Motors, winners of the first half, took up where they left off by edging Picken' Chicken 5-1 with a three goal outburst in the last period Saturday. Kingsway Lumber jumped into a first place tie with the Motormen by scoring three unanswered goals in the final frame to top the Whites by a 5-2 count.

The Whites, despite a rather poor showing so far, are becoming adjusted to the rough-and-tumble style of hockey, and may very well vacate that cellar spot before the season is over. They certainly have the potential, but Coach Jack Weldrake has been hampered all along by the fact that he doesn't very often get his full team together for a game. However, the slow starters have hit their stride, and if Weldrake can manage to keep two lines intact for the remainder of the season, chances are good that the Whites will more than make up for their poor start.

UC Gals Upset Medical Women

In a thrilling game at 8 o'clock yesterday morning the U.C. 193 shut out the Medical Women by a score of 1-0. Scrambles in front of the net were the characteristic feature of the game. It had not been for the capable netminding of the Med's goalie, Mag. Noonan, who was continually sitting on the puck, the score would have been much higher for the U.C. girls. Elaine Sossin was not kept too busy in the U.C. net, but she did make some sensational saves.

The absence of a referee did not deter the girls, and the game went ahead with one of the by-standers doing the refereeing (without a whistle). The only goal of the game was scored by Ann Miller playing left wing of U.C. The assist was by Cathie Douphine and Shirley Frid. This lone goal of the game was the result of constant pegging at the Meds' goalie from numerous scrambles in front of the net. The Meds girls played a good game, having only three substitutes for replacement. Louise Chevalier was the stand-out for Meds, playing a hard-hitting game at center ice.

Victoria Jr. - Sr. Trounce Saints

In the opening game of the women's volleyball schedule on Monday Vic Juniors-Seniors trounced St. Hilda's to the tune of 46-29. Now that score might sound quite decisive, but the Saints had more to offer than the score-sheet indicated. On the whole Vic played a plodding, cautious brand of ball which was very different from the aggressive play of St. Hilda's.

When the whistle went to end the half Vic was ahead by a slim 24-18. After the Saints found they had a deficit to make up, they began to take chances, but it just wasn't their night. Vic made point after point until at the end the score stood at 46-29.

St. Hilda's freshies however, in a later game come out on top in a real thriller. The final score was 31-29. Pat Shannon was a standout for the Saints in both games; while Ruth Drysdale was the best for Vic.

Loud Guffaws

The Editor, The Varsity:

With all its modern trappings designed to eliminate noise, the Stewart Wallace Room still reverberates with loud guffaws and female titterings. This, happily, is not a reunion hall for members of the long lost U.C. clans or a forbidden den reserved for aspiring jokers. This is a library; but inconspicuously enough, the would-be reading room may be likened now to some downtown night spot or the proverbial boiler works.

Strict enforcement of silence by fully authorized officials (often students) is successfully carried out in several Canadian universities. It is the only apparent solution at Toronto also. It is especially intolerable at Christmas that many conscientious students are deterred from using excellent library facilities which they deserve and do deserve by the noisy welcoming party of pseudo "library types." Judicious and wholly unobtrusive signs patently prohibiting noise are antiquated. Clearly, there is no more pressing issue in the shabby administration of the Stewart Wallace Room than the curbing of common courtship and the crowning no longer of the "pleasure" but rather of the "study" atmosphere.

STUDENTS PRESS CHARGE

NFCUS Cards Are Out!

Some 15,000 wallet-size cards as pictured above have been distributed to students at some Canadian Universities. Toronto students will be issued with the cards next fall when they enroll for the 1956-57 academic year.

Refused Cafe Service In Dresden Toronto Negroes Crown Witnesses

A fight "to protect our daughters from Negroes" is being waged in Ontario courts by a Dresden restaurant owner. Morley Mackay, facing his second charge of violating the Fair Accommodations Practices Act, was quoted in The Telegram as having made the statement after refusing service to two Negro students at the University of Toronto.

Percy Bruce III U.C. and Jake Alleyne, both at Varsity, are alleged to have asked for pie and milkshakes at Mackay's cafe last November 12 and to have been refused service. Helen Stenson, U of T secretary of the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students, labelled "the number one spy" by Mackay's counsel William Donohue of Sarnia, gave evidence for the prosecution at yesterday's preliminary hearings at Chatham. Seven witnesses are scheduled to appear for the prosecution in the hearings. The Defence planned to call no witnesses and to fight the case entirely on the grounds of the legality of the Fair Accommodations Practices Act, which Mr. Donohue claims to be unconstitutional.

clined to pursue the matter. He has again pleaded not guilty on the charge. A white student at the University of Toronto, Robert Van Alstyne, (U.C.), is said shortly after service was refused to have entered the restaurant the two Negroes, and to have been served.

The case continues today.

Mr. Mackay was fined $50 on a similar charge last year but won an appeal against the verdict and the Ontario Government de-

M'sieur Shoemaker Upholds National Student Federation

SAC president Michael Shoemaker thinks a national federation of students is a good thing. He expressed this opinion in a critical ten-minute appraisal of NFCUS before a sparsely-attended External Affairs Committee meeting last night. While criticizing the organization on the grounds of inefficient handling of various projects, such as the travel service and the art contest, he concluded that the administration would definitely improve with time.

"I think that NFCUS should return to its original aim, that of establishing contact among widely-separated students," he said, "instead of concentrating on merely justifying itself. The holding of seminars and week-end exchanges might be a feasible solution." NFCUS co-chairman Ed Schofield (II St. Mike's) and Bill Smyth (III UC) outlined the proposals they will take to the Ontario regional conference this weekend in Hamilton.

The EAC members present voted unanimously to empower the executive to suspend faculty reps who have been missing meetings. There were no representatives present from Trinity, St. Hilda's, Dentistry, and Knox. By the SAC constitution, those who miss two meetings in a row are liable to lose their position on the EAC. World University Service announced that applications for the summer seminar in Germany will soon be available at the SAC office.

The national federation announced that entries could now be accepted for the national short story contest and the inter-regional-exchange scholarships.

International Debate One Gay, Mad Whirl

Resolved that the guaranteed annual wage should be extended to all non-agricultural workers on behalf of industry" was the topic question debated by University of Toronto students Jim Sawers and John Woods at this year's annual international debate in Pittsburgh. The two second-year University College students represented the University of Toronto Debating Union in competition with fifty-two university teams, securing twenty-first place, and coming seventh of the twenty-six negative teams entered. Jim Sawers said the debate was conducted on the cross-examination basis used by American universities, rather than parliamentary procedure, used by Canadian and British debaters. Teams debated in rounds, lasting about one and one-half hours. Teams consisted of four men, and the negative team sent by Varsity was coupled with a De Peuw University team. They took part in five debates, against teams from Notre Dame, Rochester, Utica, Kenyon, and Pittsburgh. Other Canadian universities which competed were the University of Western Ontario, McGill and McMaster. Commenting on his Pittsburgh trip, Jim Sawers said "It was one gay mad whirl, and we thoroughly enjoyed ourselves. Students here," he added, "would gain from seeing Americans debating in their style in opposition to a Canadian team using parliamentary procedure."

Good Men Are A Scarcity Brotherhood Exposed at Vic

Vic students are finding difficulties in the hunt for good men these days, to judge from tonight's agenda for the debating parliament, "resolved that a good man nowadays is hard to find." The government support their position from evidence printed in The Varsity, said Karl Jafari, I Soc. and Phil. "The brotherhoods of 'good men' on St. George St. have recently been exposed. The 'men' on Philosopher's Walk have always been exposed," he said.

the sole repository of the opposition's argument is ego." Further pros and cons will be aired in Alumni Hall, Victoria College, at 8:00 p.m. Wes Turner, president of Vic. Debating Parliament, promises "free refreshments afterwards for all good men."

"Hard to find? The Hell! Phone HU. 8-0555 any time after 9:00" said Hugh Hanson, IV M.H., speaking for the opposition. Louise Woods will also speak for the opposition. Anne Angus, II Gen., defending the resolution, said, "In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we can only assume that

UofT Students Will Get Cards For Next Year

Students of the University of Toronto were among the 25,000 Canadian students who did not receive membership cards in the national federation this year. The cards, intended to "unite the students of Canada in their common cultural, social and educational interests", and to provide a means for obtaining the student discounts, were distributed to only 15,000 students in the 22-university organization. Toronto students are using their Admit-to-Lecture cards for the Student Discount Service.

"The cards were not distributed for two very practical reasons," commented NFCUS co-chairman Bill Smyth. "First of all, no action could be taken until the project was ratified by the national conference, held at Edmonton in mid-October. They were ready for distribution by the first of December." The Toronto committee felt that the difficulties of complete distribution were too great in mid-term, so rather than have merchants confused when only some of the students have cards, it decided to wait until next September when complete distribution would be assured. "It may be possible to distribute the cards through the registrars."

Go Abroad via Black Market

Hints on European travel were given by Mr. Ian Macdonald during a lunch hour talk yesterday. His comments on the subject of currency exchange: "You will get better rates on the black market," he told his listeners. "But if you get taken in, you have no recourse."

Mr. Macdonald suggested a number of preparations a prospective traveller should note. Make ship reservations as quickly as possible. See the shipping companies rather than travel agencies as service is faster. Take out baggage insurance. There is a high rate of theft in Europe, and the cost for a whole summer is negligible. Obtain your passport from the Dept. of External Affairs. Application forms are available in any bank, post office, or shipping company. Find out which countries require visas. If you have not been vaccinated in the past three years, go to the City Clinic on Bay St. or get it done by the National Health Service in England.

Brush up your foreign languages and buy a dialogue book which contains useful phrases. Get information, maps, and guide books from various travel agencies. Plan your trips well in advance to avoid wasting time in Europe.

Make it known that you are a student. Get a student identification card from NFEUCS. Rooms and meals are much cheaper if you stay at youth hostels in Europe. Thus it is well worth joining the Youth Hostel Association. Always ask for student rates.

Use travellers' cheques. They are always negotiable and much safer than cash.

Here are a few final suggestions: take only half the clothing you want, a camera, and beware of sharpies.

Log-Sawing, Freshness Qualify Fourteen Girls As Contest Candidates

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

There can be no beauty contest on campus, says a U of T Administration ruling. So this year's Snow Queen contestants are being judged on freshness, enthusiasm and ability in athletics, like flipping pancakes. Those that we talked to are friendly, cheerful, and all rather surprised at being chosen by their faculties.

"I guess girls don't make good woodsmen," said Mary Jane Champ, Forestry's candidate, when asked why there were no girls in Forestry. She's in third year Music. "I'm sort of excited—I think it's going to be a lot of fun."

The future Queens will have to chop wood to show their outdoor prowess. As well, they'll flip pancakes outside the igloo, and go snowshoeing at Caledon.

"They just walked up to me when I came in from lunch and told me I'd been chosen," said Molly McCarthy, Dental Nursing, the Dents' candidate.

The girls range in age from 18 to 23, and are in all years at the university.

"But I can't ski," said Janet MacRae, I Vic, while lounging in ski pants in The Varsity office. She said the Vic men had nominated girls and phoned the nominees in order until they got to her.

Skating star Barbara Gratton (II St. Mike's) can't ski either, she says. She's another girl who didn't ask to enter the contest—she was just told.

While waiting for their pictures to be taken, the girls stood in The Varsity office exchanging dope on skiing, clothes and other outdoor wear. Tom Thomson (III SPS), head of the Queen contest, briefed them on their duties.

"It was the log-sawing, plus something else—I don't know what," said Myra Keskuola (I SPS), Skule's candidate. She said someone had nominated her from the crowd of Engineers gathered to choose both SPS and P&OT entries. (That's long-haired Dorcen Fogarty, II P&OT).

Medics demanded wholesomeness, poise, athletic and cooking ability. "I can't remember the other requirements," said Doris Kerr, Meds candidate. Pharmacy judged on looks and athletic ability, according to Sylvia Kulu, II Pharm.

The Varsity couldn't find Nursing's candidate, Marge Grace, nor Estelle Fleisher, UC's lady fair. Nor could we catch Polly Shaker from Trinity, Eileen Johnson (I PHE), Lillian-Petrie (I Music), or Queeniefer Wood-Hahn of Architecture.

Don't Want Beauty Prefer Spontaneity

"The Snow Queen contest is not a beauty competition" said Tom Thompson of the Blue and White organizing committee last night, admitting that here were no hard and fast rules for the judges to follow.

"The competition will be judged," he said, "on the willingness of the contestant to participate, the enthusiasm shown, the sportsmanship exhibited throughout the carnival and skill, ability and competitive spirit in the woodchopping, and snowshoeing, and other events in which the contestants will participate."

Also to be taken into consideration, said Mr. Thompson, "are general appearance, freshness and spontaneity."

LYNDHURST RALLY DEFEATS WHITES

Cheap Penalties Pave The Way As Varsity Drops 6-3 Bruiser

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN BROOKS

The Varsity Whites seemed to be on their way to upsetting first place Lyndhurst Motors last night, but a pair of cheap penalties in the last five minutes was the straw that broke the camel's back, and the Motormen rapped in two quick tallies to win 6-3.

Trailing 4-1 going in to the last period, the Whites stepped into high gear and roared back with goals by Lorry Stacey and Dunc Brodie to make it 4-3. Then, at the 11:22 mark, Ray Savijarvi stepped into a Lyndhurst player and promptly got sent off for elbowing. An unassisted goal by McAllister made it 5-3, and less than a minute later, Mike Elik was penalized for elbowing. Elik was battling for the puck in the corner with a Lyndhurst player holding tightly onto him. He broke loose and skated out in front of the net, only to have the whistle blow, Kennedy scored to make it 6-3 and put the verdict beyond doubt. Grant Mills counted the first Whites' tally in the second period from John Toiton Saturday, the Whites take on Pickin' Chickens at 8 p.m.

BY JOHN BROOKS

It is with a considerable amount of pride that we note the presence of three ex-Varsity hockey players amongst the personnel of the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen, who are at present en route to Cortina, Italy, in defence of Canada's Olympic hockey crown, won back in 1952 by the Edmonton Mercurys.

The name which comes to mind first is that of flashy, little right-winger Paul Knox. Knox represents one-third of what many sportsmen regarded as one of the best forward lines the Varsity Blues have ever had. Last season, he finished second in the Intercollegiate Scoring race, behind line-mate Dave Reid, with 12 goals and 10 assists in 12 games. Paul played with St. Michael's College Majors in OHA Junior "A" competition before he came to Varsity, and this year moved over to Waterloo College.

The other ex-Blues on the Dutchies roster were members of the same Varsity team back in 1951-52. Don Rope was centre on the first line that year. Don was top goal scorer for the Blues and an interesting sidelight is that the tight-winger on his line was none other than Jack Wheeldeke, now coach of the Varsity Whites. Don was a member of St. Mike's Majors before enrolling at Varsity and is now a schoolteacher in Galt.

Number three is centreman Jack Mackenzie, who was right up on top in Blue scoring that season. Jack was loaded with hockey experience before even coming to Varsity, as he spent a couple of seasons with Toronto's Junior Marlboros, and in his last season there, he centred a line that carried the big load for the Marlies. Jack had the wingmen to do it — George Armstrong, now with the NHL Maple Leafs, and little Danny Lewicki, who spent some time in the Leaf organization before following Gage Stewart and Gus Budnar in their tour of several other National League Clubs. Jack is now a Physical Education teacher out at Preston.

The Dutchmen were accorded the greatest send-off at Malton on Sunday that any sports organization representing Canada had ever had. More than 1,000 well-wishers were on hand to bid farewell and good luck to the 17-player contingent. Our personal feeling is that ex-Boston Bruin star Bob Bauer's team is every bit as good as the 1952 Mercurys, and we'll put our money on them to keep the title.

Although the Russian lads have a .500 average in their bids for World Amateur Championships, this is their first hockey entry in the Olympic Games. To us, hockey in Russia seems to be quite a mystery. Their representative at the Amateur Championships in the last two years has been the same team and to our recollection, those gentlemen with long names, funny helmets, nonorthodox sticks and red and white sweaters are the only Russian hockey players we have ever heard of. The team that wins the Stanley Cup in our own National Hockey League is generally acclaimed as "World Hockey Champions." Seems rather queer that Russia should allow anyone, not just in sports, but anyone to call themselves "world champions" without even asking Russia if they would care to contest the title.

Last year, after the Amateur Games, and Canada's 5-0 victory, the Russian players were a bit reluctant to come over and congratulate the Penitton V's, our representative, and when asked for comments could only manage to mumble out something about "rough team". Since the competition this year is in not only hockey, but just a part of the oldest and by far the greatest worldwide sports tournament, it is to be hoped that the presence of Russia for the first time will not contribute to the athletes' breaking away from the traditional purpose of the Olympics. If last season is any indication, it is not going off the deep end to say that if any team ever hated to lose, and showed it, the honour must go to the Russians. This year, they have promised a bit of opposition to the "Canadian bumping" so the "big" game during the tournament should be extremely interesting.

The hockey section of the tournament will have more interest focused on it this year than ever before. Other competitors, openly acknowledging the hockey superiority of Canada, and openly upset about the rough-and-tumble play of the scrappy Canucks, have decided to do something about providing opposition. Word from below the border is that the United States representative will be the "best ever" and, in typical American words, one of the players commented, "We're goin' for the top." A fourth country which is sure to produce a good entry is Czechoslovakia. The Czechs gave the Canadian team a tough battle last year, and must certainly be given credit as the most rapidly improving hockey country in the contests.

However, despite all the claims coming from the other countries, Canada undoubtedly has the best hockey players in the world, and the team they are sending this year is likely the best amateur team in the Dominion. Varsity has produced three of the top men on the club, and that in itself is a great tribute to the hockey coaching and directing staff at this University.

Interfaculty Summary

In Group Two hockey action yesterday afternoon, Jr. Vic handed Jr. SPS their first loss of the season and moved into sole possession of second place. MacDonald scored the lone goal in a game which saw Wilson of Skule get a match misconduct just at the end of regulation time.

A pair of football players were high scorers as Pre-Meds downed SPS III in major league basketball action in Hart House. Larry Joynit paced the winners with 12, while Jim Seigmiller hooped nine for Skule in a losing cause.

SPS made up for hockey and cage losses by downing Architecture 5-3 in water polo action. Curtis led the engineers with two, while singles went to Apin, Crandell and Smith. Ray Mandell had a pair for the losers, with Bob Berlette netting the other.

Law came up with a victory over Trinity B's in squash action to push the red and black deeper into the Group III cellar.

POT DOWNS SAINTS

In a lunch-time attraction at Varsity Arena yesterday, POT's first team blanked St. Hilda's 6-0. Surprisingly good stickhandling gave possession of the puck to the Physios for most of the game, and they took advantage of their ability to keep the puck. Betty Payette led the Physios with a hat-trick, while Noreen Beasley added a pair. Nancy Banks, despite the score, came up with a great game in the Saints' net.

Bill Varey Wins In Track Upset

Bill Varey's upset win in the senior 600 yard dash proved to be the main surprise in Tuesday's intramural track meet. The PHE speedster edged out Skule's Dick Harding by 3/10 second, finishing in 1:17.1. The event was run in three heats with best times counting. Ron Toop (UC) claimed third position, while Bruce Hughes (UC) came fourth. The 600 yard junior was won by Pete Sidarchuk (SPS), who was the lone entrant.

Dick Harding returned to the winner's circle by winning the 100 yard sr. with a clocking of 11 seconds. Norm Williams (Vic) was second, Bruce Faulkner (Pharm) was third, and Don Shelley (SPS) finished fourth. Ron Zwyer (UC) captured the jr. 100 yard dash with a time of 11.9.

Next Tuesday, the meet will consist of an 880 yard run (jr. and sr.) and a medley relay. (2 x 1/2 lap, 1 x 2 laps and 1 x 3 laps). Participants are urged to be on the track by 5 p.m., and if possible to enter their events beforehand at the Intramural Office in Hart House.

Varsity Gals Wallop Mac In Intercol Cage Tussles

BY FLO MIDDLETON

Both Varsity Intercollegiate Basketball squads came home from Hamilton Tuesday night with their names in the winners' books. Completely outplaying the McMaster Intermediate squad, the Toronto girls handed them a 26-9 lacing; while the Senior sixes of both universities battled in a fairly even game with Toronto in the end squeezing out a 25-17 win.

Toronto's Intermediate team played a very good game considering that it was the first time that the girls had ever played together before and with a few practices under their belts, they should be one of the best teams in their league. The 1956 version of the team is a great improvement over last year's crew and the material that June Hansford has to work with is excellent.

Although Varsity dominated the play in the first quarter with the ball being continually held in the Mac zone, the girls were unable to find the basket with the shooting being quite wide; however, in the second quarter, the girls came to life and spurted on by Jackie Davies' scoring and the excellent guarding of Joan Bond and Arleen Seaman who also was a handy lass at interceptions. Toronto moved ahead 12-5 in the scoring department.

With the forward attack of Eileen Johnson, Georgia Brock and Jackie Stevens clicking and the defensive tightening considerably in comparison to the earlier play, Toronto pushed ahead 22-8 when the buzzer sounded to end the third quarter. In spite of a determined effort by Mac to shorten the Blues' lead, they were held off by the strong Varsity guard line and succeeded in registering only a foul shot. Toronto was again very weak in shooting and could only find the basket twice in many, many tries.

In the Senior tussle, the underrated Mac crew showed the out of practice Varsity team, that they certainly will have to pull up their socks if they hope to do anything at the Intercollegiate championships next month at Queens' nevertheless, we cannot be too harsh for the team has just been together for one previous game and actually the twelve game and actually the twelve en for Miss Barnett had to cut three from the girls that played. Like the Intermediates, the Seniors were definitely poor in the shooting department.

The game started off quite slowly with neither team managing to score in the early minutes. Finally Sylvia Kerr started the march with a foul shot and she was quickly followed by fellow PHE star, Marilyn Charters who sank a quick basket. It was Charters again who came through with a foul shot to tie the game and end the quarter, 7-7. In the second quarter, the play was very even with the ball going from one end of the court to the other in steady rushes; however, the Blue forwards being unable to shake the Mac guards led by Donna Clarke were continually in a muddle for lack of plays and managed only to put Toronto one point up, 13-12.

Toronto's day was saved by McMaster who in the last half of the game were unable to find the hoop, especially so in the third quarter when the Mac team were continually pressing. This quarter ended 19-16, and the final frame finished with Varsity ahead 25-17.

"Highlights" — Guards Lou Martin and Meredith Robinson were responsible for keeping the Mac score as low as it was, and the forward trio of Kerr, Charters and Taylor were good. Two freshies, Jan Tenant and Pru Smith proved themselves to be strong contenders for berths on the Blues.

Eagles Claw Cage Blues 84-56

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Jan. 18 (AP) —Niagara University continued to be a nemesis for the Varsity Blues as they downed the University of Toronto team 84-56 last night for the third year in a row. For the Purple Eagles, it was their eleventh win in fourteen starts this season. Fordham and St. Bonaventure have also fallen before the Eagles' driving attack.

Niagara built up a quick 19-6 lead and then benched its regulars for the rest of the game. The contest was one of the cleanest ever played in the school's history.

17 fouls were committed, 12 of these being handed out to the visiting Canadians. Both these marks were records for the Eagles' home floor.

Second-stringer Gordon Trumbull paced the Eagles with 18 points. Tom Hemans only played six minutes of the game, but hooped no fewer than 12 points while he was on the floor. For the Blues John Sheppard, a newcomer to the Varsity team this year, was top scorer with 18 points. Sheppard learned his high school basketball across the street at Niagara Falls Collegiate.

LET'S GO!

We got a telegram from Benny yesterday (postmarked Miami), and the one-eyed lad has this message to the sports staff: "If you don't trounce the pants off those newswy things in your annual hockey game, I'll get myself ate by a barrauda or something and the Blues II never beat those guys in yellow sweaters!"

O.K. Benny!

educated engineers?

Among the more common fallacies of our age at universities, is the myth of the uneducated engineer — the crude technician.

This myth is dealt with in the latest issue of the University of Toronto Quarterly by Eric Ashby. Ashby states that there are two fallacies in the view that there is an antithesis between technology and humanism, and that the technologist remains in the university only on sufferance and because of the social pressures.

The first of these fallacies is that there is a relevance between humanism — particularly classical humanism — and technology. Classical humanism, while still dealing with relevant and re-occurring topics, no longer reaches "the bloodstream of society."

The second fallacy is that technology does not itself embrace humanism. Mr. Ashby makes well the point that humanism as such is concerned with the creative arts of man, and that aeroplanes as well as gothic churches, textiles as well as poetry fall into this category. It is in the method of teaching these technological subjects that the fault lies. This weakness of the technologists is deplorable, but no more so than the pedantic editing of some third rate poet, which is, as Mr. Ashby says, common enough among scholars of literature.

However, Mr. Ashby has raised an important issue for the university; for certainly the handling of technological subjects as they are at present is not conducive to a broad humanist interpretation. The problem, of course, is an intricate and complex one. But there is little evidence on this campus that it has received the attention that it deserves.

appreciation

Every newspaper has its difficulties in adequately covering the news of its district. These difficulties are intensified on any student publication, such as The Varsity, because of the lack of a full-time, fully-trained staff.

But The Varsity has in recent years labored under even more of a handicap because of the lack of cooperation of campus publicity departments, who have neglected to inform The Varsity of campus events, even though they have released the information to the downtown dailies.

Although the difficulties of keeping in touch with a campus as diverse and as large as ours are many, they can be bridged with co-operation. The standard of The Varsity is the responsibility most particularly of those who take on the job of producing it, but the whole campus is responsible to some degree for its quality.

For this reason we are particularly grateful to the Simcoe Hall publicity department for their trouble in keeping us well informed.

red tape and starvation

The latest rumour floating around the campus is that Dominion-Provincial Bursaries will be paid this Friday. By now we're sceptical — but we hope its true.

Whether the money is paid now or not, one fact is clear. An inefficient bureaucracy can insinuate itself into a democracy, just as easily as into any other form of government. And it has no more place in a democracy, and can do just as much damage there, as anywhere else.

The starving student myth has come too close to being a reality.

Economics

What is the role of Economics in our modern life? Here, Aranka E. Kovacs, a graduate student in Economics, explores the position of Economics as one of the Social Sciences. The first of a series of two articles.

A recent item in The Varsity dealing with Economic Determinism has prompted me to write this article. As a student of Economics I can appreciate the views expressed by the unnamed writer, and I shall not attempt to refute his points, but rather I shall attempt to present a broader view which I have come to see from my study of Economics, and to show how economic forces alone do not determine the way in which we live.

COMPLEX INTERACTIONS

The development of any society involves the complex and continuing interaction of the economic, political, religious and social forces shaping the cultural environment.

Dynamic growth is possible through the nature and impact of human motivation in relation to these underlying forces. Historians place emphasis on various factors to explain the growth and development of society. Some say everything is as it is, as a result of geography, or climatic conditions, or the will of God, or the evolution of ideas, or as a result of the leadership of great men.

It is however, very difficult to single out one force and say it is a complete interpretation of history; for history is the interaction of a multitude of human events working itself out through Time. It is true that one aspect may be relatively more significant in a particular society and time, and therefore, greater stress is placed on it by men of vision.

MARX'S VIEW

In the case of Marx, his sense of the relative importance of economic conditions as a determinant of the social structure was stronger and more prominent than for other thinkers of his day. To understand his ideas we must examine them in the setting of his own time.

Criticisms of the existing capitalistic system by the early Socialists arose out of the observations of the economic and political conditions under early Industrialism.

Consequences of the Industrial Revolution and the agrarian movement were far reaching and the resulting changes meant, not only innovations in technology and cultivation, but changes in social conditions and status. The poverty and misery which these developments created among the labouring classes accumulated in the agitation for parliamentary and social reforms; and in the criticisms against the principles of the system which produced such injustice and exploitation.

The potential mode of life which the new innovations was to produce was not yet apparent. The Marxian system was developed in an age of revolution and a growing social conscience. For those who heard the Marxian message, it presented a new hope and a new way of life towards which they reached.

NARROWNESS ABSENT

It may be pointed out, however, that Marx should not be credited with the adoption of economic determinism in the narrow sense, which accounts for all human behaviour in terms of economic processes. Marx was quite aware of the significance of non-economic motives and the influence of the social environment on the individual and of the fact that human behaviour is the result of diverse motives.

His search was to determine the subtle forces at work which were transforming the society of men.

And the strongest force which asserted itself as the determining factor in the social structure was the process of production. Marxism adopts historical materialism, the philosophy of history which explains the evolution of society in terms of economic processes by the application of dialectical materialism.

ECONOMICS NO GOD

Economics alone does not determine the way we live. Although the definitions of economics are many and varied and usually reflect the interest of the science, nevertheless, the subject matter of economics enables us to draw out the common characteristics and to formulate a definition in which the main elements are illustrated.

Economics is one of the social sciences dealing with the study of human activity in the relationship of the allocation of scarce resources among alternative uses for the satisfaction of wants. The ends of human behaviour are various, but the means and the time for achieving these ends are limited and can be attained by alternative applications. The elements of scarcity and choice imposed on human beings a certain pattern of behaviour in which the relationships between the attainment of the ends and the means whereby they are attained, may be studied by economists.

The study of economics is concerned with those aspects of human behaviour which are directed towards the creation and distribution of wealth.

By "wealth" we refer to a relative concept meaning the productive powers to satisfy wants, or the exchangeable means of satisfying human needs, the necessities and conveniences of life. The interaction and interdependence of the motive to satisfy human needs by the production, exchange, distribution and consumption of wealth constitutes the phenomenon of economics. This arises out of the economic activities of mankind in society.

Economics studies the way in which the scarce resources give rise to different ratios of valuations between them, and the way in which changes in the scarcity of resources affects these valuations. The administration and utilization of scarce resources are determined by men through the organization and institutions of the social framework.

The study of the way in which this allocation is carried out among their different uses and to the satisfaction of different wants developed by the standard of civilization, is the task of the science of economics.

Two Weeks With Mozart

The bicentennial of Mozart's birth brings a flock of significant recitals of the composer's work this weekend and next, including the third concert of the Hart House Orchestra. Under Boyd Neel, and with well-known Canadian pianist Ray Dudley as soloist, the orchestra presents an all-Mozart program at Hart House this Sunday at 9:00 p.m.

The program comprises: Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Piano Concerto — K. 449; Divertimento — K. 137, in B flat; and Serenata Nauturna — K. 239.

Mr. Dudley has made concert appearances in London and the Continent; in 1952, he became the first Canadian pianist to win the unanimous award at the Geneva International Competition.

Perhaps the most important event of Toronto's musical year takes place this weekend and next, when the world-famous Paganini Quartet perform the entire cycle of Mozart's String Quartets. They appear in the Conservatory Concert Hall this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, and the same days next week.

The group, each of whom plays a Stradivarius, is made up of: Henry Temianka (first violin), Gustav Rosseels (second violin), Charles Foidart (viola), and Lucien Laporte (cello). They will be assisted by Paul Doktor (viola), Boris Roubaikine (piano), Ezra Schabas (clarinet), and Eugene Rittich and Mary Barrow (French horn). All six concerts begin at 8:30 p.m.

Three-Headed Director Fills In For Bob Gill

Unless you really have to see Leon Major, don't bother him till March—he's busy. And you couldn't pick a worse time than this week, while the young theatre-director is performing the near-miraculous juggling trick of keeping three shows going simultaneously.

Leon, whose work on all aspects of campus theatre won him the first E.A. Dale Award when he graduated last year, is going about his career the hard way. At present, he is in rehearsal for the UC musical Kiss Me Kate, and at the collaborating-with-the-playwright stage in his forthcoming production of Patricia Joudry's Broadway success, Teach Me How To Cry. The play will be the University of Toronto Alumnae Players' entrance into the Dominion Drama Festival come May, after a Hart House staging in March.

To top things off, he has also been responsible for the Hart House Theatre production of Bellak's The Troublemakers, which opens Saturday. The play was still being blocked when resident director Robert Gill went to hospital with neuritis, and asked him to take over "for a week or so." This helping hand unexpectedly burgeoned into full-dress production responsibilities. With any luck, Mr. Gill should be back in time for one of the closing nights.

A full list of Leon's contributions to theatre here and elsewhere would take the rest of this column—to name a few onstage and backstage accomplishments, every Hart House Theatre production he could get close to, set-designing for Camino Real last autumn, awards and com-

Skule Group Goes Steady

The Skule Nite Orchestra has gone commercial, and a new era has begun in musical history at SPS.

The undergraduate group emerged from semi-retirement this week, to perform at the Carnival Queen eliminations for the P&OT and Engineering representatives. At that time they announced their plans to an astonished world.

The orchestra have just completed plans to organize themselves on a permanent all-year-round basis, and intend to play at stage shows, concerts, and dances.

Arrangements have already been made for the orchestra to play a noon-hour jazz concert in Hart House at the end of this month. In March, they will play for the Western Hospital nurses' annual revue at Harbord Collegiate.

Fifteen undergraduates make up the orchestra. Leader and conductor is Bill Stiggles, IV Civil, who helped form the group last November, for the smash week run of Skule Nite 576. Their performance on this occasion, particularly of Victor Herbert's March of the Toys and Glen Miller's String of Pearls won considerable praise from the amateur and the professional critics.

Within two weeks the orchestra members expect to have a full dance-repertoire, including all standard commercial arrangements.

Any connection with members of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band, living or dead, is purely coincidental.

mendation for UC Players' Guild production and a summer as resident director of the Jackson's Point Red Barn Theatre.

Immediate future—"probably directing six plays of my own choice at this summer's Kingsmere Festival, then on to Europe . . . if I can find the money." Distant future—"starting a real theatre in Toronto, and trying to put emotional realism on its feet here, if Canadians haven't lost some of their provincialism before I get back." Greatest debt to date—"undoubtedly to Bob Gill, whose director's school gave me insight into theatre, and whose greatness goes largely unrecognized!"

A Night With Nutcracker

A native Canadian ballet company invites one-of two attitudes. Either we consider them a pet protegee whose faults we ignore so as not to nip the bud during its growing pains, or we treat them as a young but competent group with merits to be praised and faults to be criticized. I prefer to join the minority group and respect the Canadian National Ballet Company, and view them as I would any other young dance group.

The opening night production of Casse Noisette, (The Nutcracker), did very little to display the merits of the company, and pointed out sharply its faults.

The greatest merits of the company, the fine quality of the actual dancing, was brought out most clearly in the last two acts. These gave the corps de ballet their first chance of the evening to do some dancing. In the Third Act, the snow fairies danced in the typical classical romantic style with a warmth more enjoyable than the cold perfection of the Sadlers Wells corps.

The fourth and best-known act presents five divertissements, Danse Espagnole, Danse Orientale, Danse Chinoise, Bouffons, and Mirlitons, all of which give the members of the group a chance to display any specialized talents. Danse Espagnole, choreographed by Ray Moller and danced by Katherine Stewart and Ray Moller, although danced mainly in ballet form, had a definite Spanish flavour in choreography and execution. The undulations of Oldyna Dynowska in the Danse Orientale although adequately performed failed to excite me, and was more a Western interpretation of oriental dancing, which is generally erroneous, than an actual oriental type dance.

Canada has a native-born prima ballerina who ranks with the greats of our time. Lois Smith danced the roles of the Snow Queen and the Sugar Plum Fairy with technical beauty, poise, and understanding, that would be an asset to any company. Her husband and partner, David Adams, whose strength and control are thrilling to watch, amazed the audience with his leaps and turns, and carried the continuity of the dance quietly and capably. A delightful surprise was the charming performance of 14-year-old Judith Dornis in the role of Clara. It is a pleasure to watch someone who is completely at home on stage.

The first two acts, although humorous in parts and well danced, suffered in parts from too much pantomime, and too little dancing, too much activity, and too little focus for the activity, too little imaginative choreography, and too much of the usual dull outdated pomp and ceremony of movement.

In spite of the great possibility of making the performance outstanding and interesting, it was merely adequate. The lack of imagination in sets and costumes, and the uninspired choreography reduced the Nutcracker to mediocrity. Dance and music should be integrated and should compliment each other. A climax in the music should be a climax in the dance, but Miss Franca seems to ignore the music and carry on the dance completely oblivious to the mood of the music. The orchestra under the direction of the musical director George Crum, although much improved since last year, certainly was not an inspiration to the dancers.

The Canadian National Ballet Company has, in the past, presented many new contemporary works and presented them extremely well. Reviving a classic is always a difficult task. Celia Franca has not been able to glean from the original Ivanov choreography the parts worth reshewing, and has added nothing, possibly detracted from the original. It should be a matter of some pride to the company that they have in their repertoire two four-act classics but only if the said classics could be done with some spark of creativity.

Directorial Triptych

For Leon Major, things in theatre are humming, while he spends something like 18 hours a day working on the three shows he is directing at present. Left, he discusses one point in rehearsal with James Turnbull of the cast of Bellak's THE TROUBLEMAKERS, a regular Hart House Theatre production opening Saturday. Centre, he works on a set-model for his forthcoming production of KISS ME KATE, this year's U.C. musical. As well as directing, he is responsible (with Les Lawrence) for the set designs. Right, he goes over the script of Pat Joudry's TEACH ME HOW TO CRY in preparation for blocking. And all this in one day, too.

Fur-And-Feather Farm

Walt Disney was never like this, but most viewers should thoroughly enjoy Animal Farm at the International. This seventy-minute cartoon is based on the book by George Orwell, author of 1984. Animal Farm, however, is not as terrifying as its more famous companion-piece. Rather, it is a fable tracing the corruption of an idealistic and planned society by the unscrupulous and the clever.

In this case the society is an animal one, and so no government T.V. cameras spy on the workers. The animals gain freedom by turning out their tyrannical master, Farmer Jones. Under the direction of Snowmaster, Farmer Jones' and benevolent pig they set about balling the farm on their own with all the animals running the farm. The ambitious Napoleon, another pig being equal for the day when he can be master. By frauds and violence he achieves this aim. Having established himself as "the great leader," he with his fellow-pigs moves into Farmer Jones' house and proceeds to enjoy the fruits of the other animals' labour.

Obviously inspired by Communist Russia, Animal Farm is a powerful indictment against all totalitarianism. Its greatest significance, however, is in its exposure of the dangers of any welfare state. An excellent essay in social science it is a most arresting picture and one that a viewer will not soon forget.

Technically, the cartoon is not quite as impressive as its material. Although the backgrounds have a peculiar forcefulness, the faces of the animals, with one or two exceptions, are deficient in expressiveness. However, a striking effect is achieved when the face of Napoleon becomes transformed into the face of Farmer Jones, showing that the animals are back where they started. The music is competent, but only occasionally heightens the significance of the events. A superb handling of the narration is performed by Gordon Heath, whose quiet tone befits a fable.

Good Men Hard to Find But Vic Has 'Em Aplenty

"Man is what woman makes him," said Louise Woods (III Gen), speaking for the opposition at last night's debate in Alumni Hall. The agenda for the Vic debating parliament was "Resolved that nowadays a good man is hard to find."

The motion was defeated, with 25 members affirming their faith in manhood, and 15 voicing their doubts as to his status.

Speaking for the government, Karl Jaffary (I Soc. and Phil.) said, "It certainly is hard to find a good man nowadays. Being good has gone out of fashion."

For the opposition, Miss Woods pointed out that every man is good enough for some woman. "Alcoholics are still around," she said, "but now we know wives drove them to it."

Miss Woods drew laughs when she said, "a man was created, found a wife, and went to live in an orchard."

Anne Angus, defending the resolution, asked, "What male undergraduate can you call a man?

Only poorly-groomed urchins are found in our libraries."

Miss Angus was of the opinion that college boys were "parasites on their fathers' incomes, then they find a wife and become parasites on her income."

Mr. Hugh Hanson, a member of the opposition, quoted passages from several telegrams alleged to have come from "General Scrunch," "Prince Aly Khan," and "The Society for the Preservation of Good Men," which was later revealed to be a nudist colony.

The telegram was signed "P. K. Boo."

Another speaker for the opposition, J. Saunders, wished that women were "in the kitchen bare-foot and pregnant, like the way they were in the 16th century."

The debate ended on the note that good men are not at all hard to find and after all, "a man's a man for a' that."

The members were acknowledged "to have conducted themselves like good men," by the speaker, Don Stevenson.

Name Toronto Student To PC Nat'l Executive

Gary Cooper (IV Trin) announced last night that Ted Rogers, president of the U of T PC Club had been appointed to the national executive of the Progressive-Conservative party.

A motion before the national convention of the Progressive-Conservative party, now meeting in Ottawa, that at least one student be appointed to the national executive was carried, and resulted in the appointment of three students to the national executive.

Besides the Toronto student, Garry Bazzell of Manitoba and Peter McDermid of Dalhousie received appointments.

"This is the first time that students have been elected to the national executive of any political party," said Mr. Cooper, "and these appointments have been made in recognition of the campus election results across the country."

A discussion of the forthcoming model parliament will be the feature of the meeting of the Progressive-Conservative Club in room 4, Trinity College tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Present at the meeting will be delegates who have recently returned from the national convention of the Progressive-Conservative party in Ottawa.

Education Under Fire St. Mikes, Skule Argue

Battling words over the Canadian educational system tonight, are interfaculty debaters from Engineering and St. Mike's.

Topic for discussion at Brennan Hall, St. Mike's, at 8:00 p.m. tonight is "Resolved that the Canadian Education System is"

Bob Connor (II St. Mike's) will support the motion as the first speaker for St. Mike's. "Since the ten provinces aid in the development of the intellect of the Canadian child, we must logically therefore have a Canadian educational system."

First speaker for the opposition, Winston May (II Mech. Eng.), takes the line that "the Canadian educational system is not Canadian, not educational and has no system; therefore, Canadian education system isn't."

The view that "the need for a complete national education system in Canada perforce made its existence a fact which may be incomprehensible from a practical scientific approach" will be put forward by Dan Reagan (II St. Mike's).

McGill Team Debates Today

A visiting debating team from McGill University will meet U of T debaters at University College tomorrow afternoon at 12:30 in Room 8.

Topic for discussion is "Resolved that Quebec should annex Canada." Toronto debaters will be Moishe Reiter and Clyde Batten, both III U.C.

Runneth-Over

Morgantown, West Virginia: The University of West Virginia seems to be having some trouble with its parking regulations. Since the district attorney announced that the university could not impose fines for parking violations, certain students have been taking advantage of the situation.

"More drastic penalties will be considered unless voluntary compliance is obtained," warned the President of the University.

Winnipeg, Man.: Students on the Manitoba campus are now being provided with the papers of the twenty-three members of Canadian University Press to read.

The papers from the other Canadian universities will be put on display in the new students' union at Manitoba, where the students can read them at their leisure. They will be changed once a week.

There is no provision for such arrangement now on the Toronto campus, although a few years ago Hart House used to receive papers from most Canadian universities.

Rotterdam, Netherlands: The University of Parma, Italy, is now conducting a course in Esperanto, within the Faculty of Commerce and Finance. The state university in Krakow, Poland, has re-instated a chair for Esperanto, and the University in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, has created a lectureship for its instruction.

This brings to thirty the total number of universities teaching Esperanto. It has been suggested in the past that Esperanto should be taught at the University of Toronto.
